"In my work in the country I have tried to epend upon God's providence, God's Word, od's Spirit, and the Chinaman. During the st five years this country work has been deloping and extending beyond all my previous xpectations. Six years ago I had one station nd about a dozen converts; since that time the ork has constantly and uniformly spread, and, think, deepened. I now have fifty central ations, and over 700 native Christians, whose omes are in about 200 villages.

"These stations extend over a region of country bout 200 English miles long and eighty wide, nd the work is constantly extending into new owns and villages. Until recently I have had o native helper or assistant, and sometimes wo, travelling with me and visiting the stations, uring the months when I am in Chefoo. The ork of these natives has been that of assisting e in my plan of supervision and superintenence. The work of teaching inquirers, conucting services, and extending the work in the rrounding villages, is performed mainly by e Christians themselves. Most of those who re heads or leaders in the stations are intelligent en of some position and influence more or ss educated. These, as a rule, are used, in od's providence, in commencing the work, and e work is organised by them as a nucleus. hey occupy at first much the position of class aders in the Methodist Church. Many of these en are earnest and successful students of cripture. They are well supplied with comentaries and simple treatises on Christianity in s connections and relations with their own ystems. These men come down to Chefoo, or t least some of them, every year for the study f the Scriptures. I am expecting a select class f about forty next week, to spend two months nd a half in the study of the Scriptures and hristian doctrine, and learning to sing, so as to e prepared in going back to be teachers and aders of others.

"In my last tour, which occupied the whole winer, I was permitted to baptize 208 adults, and to see encouraging evidences of growth and development in those who had been baptized before. These people build their own chapels, and receive little or no help of any kind from the Mission. I hope that these stations will soon be organised as regular churches with native elders, and that candidates for the ministry and ordained evangelists and pastors will follow. Will you not pray that I may have grace and guidance for the future development of this work, and be spared to superintend it for some years to come."

Commenting on the above letter, the friend who sends it says :—"Without reference to Mr. Nevius' letter, I had this week been looking at Acts xvii. 1—15, in connection with the Apostle's words in 2 Thess. i. 3, 4. I do not know who is answerable for the chronology given in the margin of our Bibles, but both in Bagster's edition and in Eyre & Spottiswood's Teacher's Bible, I notice the date of St. Paul's three weeks' Mission to Thessalonica is A.D. 53, and the date of the Epistle 54. He never revisited the place (1 Thess. ii. 17, 18), and it seems uncertain whether Timothy remained behind Paul and Silas in Thessalonica even for a brief space of time. The marvel is that without any extraneous shepherding this Church (some Jews and 'a great multitude' of Greeks) kept hold of the truth and were able to endure persecution of no ordinary kind.

"It may be said there are many differences to be taken into account in dealing with the heathen now; but I am sure everyone will agree there is no difference in the power of the Holy Ghost to convince men of sin, to impart faith, and to keep them steadfast; but there is one mighty difference in favour of the modern missionary. St. Paul could not leave behind him in Thessalonica any one of the Gospels, as these were all unwritten up to A.D. 60; the missionary of to-day, after preaching the Word, may depart, leaving the written record behind him for the instruction and the confirming of believers.

"May it not be that we at home are so imbued with our notions of church organisation, of church buildings, of church officers, and so forth, that we hinder rather than help beloved missionaries in new and untried fields, and aim at a human completeness in the details of church life in heathendom which is foreign to Scripture example and inconsistent with Christian liberty?"

JEWS IN MOROCCO.—A letter from M. Ginsburg contains interesting details of his work of evangelisation among the Jews at Mogador :—"Our schools are well attended, the Jews come there without any difficulty or hindrance. Our colporteur lately visited Fez, where he sold more than 500 Hebrew Bibles, New Testaments, Psalms and Pentateuchs. He was accompanied by a convert, former Chief Rabbi al Oued-Nun. The word of God was preached in the houses and in the Synagogues. Everywhere they were well received. Mdme. Ginsburg occupies herself with the Jewesses; every Sunday she instructs a class of women. We have a school for adults every evening, and French and English services every day. We have full liberty to preach the Gospel. —L'Evangéliste.

A SOLDIER EVANGELIST.—Mr. J. W. Moodie, late of the 74th Highlanders, has been carrying on evangelistic work in the north since the beginning of the month. He was brought from Glasgow by the Banffshire Temperance Union to take part in their annual demonstration at Cornhill on 1st August. The speaking at this large open-air gathering was most effective, although the numbers did not come up to the expectations raised by last year's meeting. A specially deep impression was made by Mr. Moodie's stirring recital of campaigning experience in Egypt, and by the earnest Gospel appeals with which it was interspersed. At the request of several of the ministers present, Mr. Moodie consented to remain and undertake evangelistic work in the quarter for a few weeks. At Aberchirder, where he has since been labouring, there have been most gratifying results, especially among the young men and women of the place. The United Presbyterian Church there has been well filled nightly, some travelling four or five miles to be present, and at every meeting there have been most interesting cases. At a farewell meeting with young converts in the hall attached to the church, the attendance gave evidence of the nature and success of his labours.—Christian Leader.

AMONG THE HOP-PICKERS.

IT is many years since there was promise of such an abundant hop harvest. This means a considerable increase in the immigration of hoppers during September. We have always had an importation of many thousands from the courts and alleys of London and other cities and large towns, whose spiritual and temporal welfare we have earnestly sought; but this year we may safely reckon on thirty or forty per cent. more than in any one of the past six years. Thus the need of evangelistic effort will be more urgent than ever.

The grouping of these multitudes for the hop-picking affords a grand opportunity for taking the Gospel to them, an opportunity which has given birth to these efforts. Day after day we visit the hop-gardens with a good supply of Gospel literature, and spend the time in talking to the pickers over the bins, and distributing tracts, &c. On Sunday mornings we divide our strength, and visit as many stations as possible. When it seems desirable, we provide "Free Teas" on Sunday afternoons, for the sake of gathering the "strangers," that we may tell them "the old, old story." We visit each evening one or other of the surrounding villages, in the centre of which we open our portable organ, sing, and preach the Gospel. These services have now become quite an institution.

From other villages within reach of our centre (Goudhurst) we have repeatedly heard the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help up." Unable any longer to resist the appeal, we are this year opening up another centre, and employing three or four more brethren, that we may enter the regions untouched by any similar agency. Parcels of tracts or left-off clothing will be welcome, and should be sent (carriage paid) to Rev. J. J. Kendon, Marden Station, S.E.R. J. BURNHAM.

ALTON.

Five tents have been erected for the preaching of the Gospel in this district. Many thousands of poor wandering people are here, and are thankful for the opportunity of being brought under the influence of the Word. The evangelists are employed in visiting and preaching at night; help is needed to carry on the work. S. CHINN.

Alton, Hants.

IVY HATCH, SEVENOAKS.

We shall be thankful for the prayers of your readers on efforts amongst the thousands of hop-pickers who will presently be engaged in this part of West and Mid-Kent. As in former years, we hope to be able to put Gospel books in the hands of most of the people we meet with, and hold short services in their dinner hours, where practicable, and at their camps at night, and on Sundays. Sometimes we have been enabled by friends to have free teas for them, and preach the Gospel then. We have had much happy service in this way for some years through God's mercy, and trust He will sustain us in it this season, encouraged by 1 Cor. xv. 58.

GEORGE GILLINGHAM.

A FARMERS' PRAYER-MEETING is held every Wednesday afternoon at the Friends' Meeting-House, St. John-street, Bury St. Edmunds. All who are connected with agriculture are invited to unite in laying their requests before the Lord of the harvest.

"THE SILENCE OF PRAYER."—On reading this article in your issue of August 9 I was much comforted. For some time past I have been in great distress—all my earthly prospects blighted. Often have I thrown myself on my knees seeking to pray, but only a flood of tears and groans from a breaking heart was the language uttered. At times I rose comforted, but I thought that may be caused by the weeping and not by the wordless prayer. From "F. A. W.'s" comforting article I can see that Jesus can speak consolation and give blessing, though words be denied the suppliant.

A TROUBLED ONE.

MISS MACPHERSON'S CANADIAN DIARY.

BELIEVERS' CONFERENCE AT NIAGARA.

GALT, August 3.—"The lines are fallen to us in pleasant places." We have gathered with dear saints of God, from many parts of this vast continent, at the annual believers' meeting; we have truly had times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, and sweet fellowship with kindred spirits. The place of assembling was in a tent pitched on the shores of Lake Ontario, close to the village of Niagara. The breezes from the lake tempered the bright sunshine, and as we fixed our gaze on the blue waters, while listening to the speakers, we were reminded of Jesus teaching the people by the Sea of Galilee.

The subjects taken up were comprehensive, but all practically helpful, bearing directly upon the difficult questions of our day. Evangelists could not fail to be fed and endued with fresh power and vigour; they sat at the feet of men who knew how to handle the deep things of God. Several opportunities were given for answering questions. Dr. W. Erdman, a man mighty in the Scriptures, had a happy way of bringing the difficulty to a point, as it were cracking the nut, and in a moment giving the young evangelist back the kernel. William Pennefather was frequently brought to our mind in the person of Dr. Brooks, of St. Louis; large-hearted and tender, yet powerful as he dealt with those who would oppose the truth.

Two meetings were held in the day, morning and afternoon, giving seasons of rest, for an evening's row on the lake, or a drive, or private converse in the beautiful grounds around. One evening was set apart for happy social intercourse in the tent; another was spent in a service of song, led by Major Whittle and Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan. These days were the holidays of many a worn-looking pastor. Some had come all the way from Carolina, hungering for spiritual strengthening, and none went away empty. At the Communion on the closing day a thankoffering was gathered, to be divided between the Missions of Mr. Hudson Taylor and Mr. Grattan Guinness, and the Missions in Japan. The ministers spoke tenderly of the practical labours of these two brethren, and also of our brother Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, who was borne up before the throne, and his restoration to health pleaded for. It was a wonderful testimony, showing how these brethren bear the burdens of others, though an ocean lies between, and they may never see each other here below.

FACTORY GIRLS IN CANADA.

Guelph, Aug. 9.—Welcome news from the Home of Industry reached us last evening at Hespeler, nine miles from this place, and five miles from Galt, whither we had driven in a carriole (a light covered buggy with seats for six) to hold a meeting for several hundreds of young people, employed in manufacturing woollen goods at a large mill. Some days previously my niece, Mrs. Henderson, with her sister-in-law, had gone over the factory, giving texts and little books, speaking individually to the employés, and issuing invitations for the meeting; much prayer had arisen that this opportunity for witnessing might result in many souls being won for the Lord Jesus.

Though it was a warm summer evening the Town-hall was well filled with a staid-looking but motley crowd of young and old, all well-dressed and earning good wages; the young women get eight to ten dollars, i.e., thirty-two shillings weekly. There is great need for Christian ladies to arise and open boarding-houses, in order to look after the young women of Canada. The owners of this mill hope to go forward in such work in due time. If those who start Young Women's Associations would begin at the very beginning, open Homes where they could dwell, &c., they would soon get hearts to listen to the Gospel, family worship would be attended, and souls won for Christ

The young factory girls gathered around afterwards, and were delighted at my proposing they should start a sewing party for the orphan little boys at Galt. We do trust that a good work has begun among these mill-hands, and we pray that it may be a precedent for similar work to begin in all such places throughout Canada.

CANADIAN HOMES FOR LONDON WAIFS.

With thankfulness we can say that prayer is answered, and good Christian homes are opening up for little boys around the Georgian Bay. F. A. has started to take three to their new homes, and is en route to visit fifteen children in Muskoka, which will take three weeks, and be expensive. Mr. Thom and Miss W. are out in another direction, and I start to-morrow to visit fifteen in the Stratford district. In travelling it is very interesting to note the providential meetings by the way with the children. Our workers at home will remember a sweet young brother and sister whom we rescued from an actress. In trying to eke out her income, she had answered an advertisement to take charge of children; they had been placed in her care by their father, who quickly disappeared, and she, receiving no money for them, was about to put them in the workhouse. It was my joy accidentally to come across these two children, much grown and improved, on the way with their adopted parents for their summer trip to visit friends. The interview was brief, a loving word of recognition, and our paths in life again diverged; but what happiness to know they were with God's dear saints, being trained in His fear and love.

Our dear grown-up girls are getting comfortably settled in life. P. T. has just married very well, and J. M. has been consulting me on the important subject, and saying that her brother was buying furniture for his own house. Alice M., too, is in a difficulty, for her lover will not hear of her coming back to England to see her mother until she changes her name and he can come with her to protect her.

The following letter from an orphan boy, who lost nearly all his family by small-pox, two years ago, will interest our readers:—

"July 12, 1883.—My dearest Friend,—We have had some very wet weather lately. The crops are not so bad down here, but the rain will make the hay very black-looking, and potatoes and peas are being quite washed out. It is fine fun working amongst the hay and the clover, but we have not time to roll in it; we have to take the good out of all the dry days we can get. We had Mr. Fred to see us this summer, and we were very glad to see him. I am still a Temperance boy, and have not seen a drop of any intoxicating drink since I have been in Canada, and I do not want to either. I am well pleased with my place, and am getting quite a farmer. . . .

"Frank and I go to church regularly, and to Sunday-school. I often speak to the people about you and your work, and they wonder at your work very much; they say many a boy would go to ruin but for you. I cannot imagine what would have become of me but for you. I thank you for your kindness to me and Frank; may you be rewarded for it when you go to the better world above. We could not come to Galt on Dominion Day, as we were busy weeding. I enclose you a photo of myself and Frank. Hoping you are all keeping strong for your work, as strength is needed for the work you do, with love to all. Good-bye, from one of your number, "George D. (aged 14.)"

BOSTON.—The revival work of Mr. Bliss in Boston, under the direction of the Young Men's Christian Association, during the summer months, is accomplishing much good. Temperance reform is one branch of the work which is vigorously attended to.

WHITBY.—On Sunday evening, August 19, a party of visitors held open-air service on the pier. The outdoor meetings have been continued, and have resulted in good to many souls. A series of weekly meetings will be held in the Y.M.C.A. rooms and out of doors. The prayers of friends are requested for God's blessing on the efforts of these young people.

"HE KNOWETH."

SUCH a precious source of comfort,
Such a soothing, healing balm,
Magic ray of golden sunshine,
Hushing fear, and breathing calm!

Cometh joy or cometh sorrow,
Health or sickness, pain or care,
Jesus knows: let this content us;
Yes, He knows, and He is near.

Whisper it mid daily duties,
Whisper it when sore distrest;
Doubts and dangers throng around you,
Jesus knows; His way is best.

Does the battle seem unequal—
Wrong triumphant, right passed by?
Think you not that He is watching?
Yes, He hears the faintest cry.

Morning, mid-day, calm of even,
Every hour of every day,
Jesus knows, and He is caring,
Knows, and knowing, loves alway.

THE GOSPEL IN HYDE PARK.

"DO you get much opposition from infide in the Park?" asked a friend the oth day. "No; we have won some of them Christ, and the remainder we have tired out b never replying to them." God has vouchsaf such signal blessing lately to this effort that w have held evangelistic services every night the Park, followed by prayer-meetings in Hyd park Hall. One or two of the cases of conversi may be of interest.

Mr. E——, a decided infidel and opposer the Gospel, was awakened at the meetings; sought and found the Saviour, and has give himself to the work of the Lord. He is now Northampton, labouring for God among t infidels there. Another follower of Bradlaug who was ever busy in giving away the bil announcing infidel meetings, has changed h opinions, because, as he says, "God has chang my heart."

R. G., a working man, says: "I was crossi Hyde-park, when I heard the preacher telling the return of Mr. Moody's brother, after ma years' absence. I thought of my poor old god mother and her many prayers, and was convinc of my sins. I could not get rid of my conviction and though I left the meeting, and drank five pi of beer to drown them, it was no good. So came to the Park the next night, followed to t hall, and gave myself to God. I only wish had been years before."

Many who came into the Park to hear t band have never got beyond our meeting, wh the choir was singing, and some of these a among our best workers. Of late, such has be the spirit of hearing which the Lord has giv the people, that there is little or no need singing now; the people are there before we a and waiting to hear the Word preached.

We rejoice to say that several youths and bo have within the last week or so been brou to Christ. Charles Cook.

GLASGOW MONDAY NOON MEETING.—Ba Dickson lately gave a sketch at this meeting o tour made lately by him, along with Mr. Bann man of Perth, in the Orkneys. They visited m of the churches of the different denominati and had the opportunity of inquiring into state of religion, which was found to be similar that in other parts of the country. A special f ture in the islands is the almost entire ab ence public-houses, Kirkwall and Stromness being exceptional districts. As a consequence drunk ness is almost unknown. Bailie Dickson thou this was a strong proof in favour of the argume in relation to towns and cities, that if the temp tions were removed the convictions for drunken would be greatly diminished. During the w ten Temperance associations were successfully augurated, not because of their necessity in islands, but because they would form a bon union for young men going to the large cities interest them in the work. Christian Leader.

FRENCH FOREIGN MISSIONS.

THE Paris Evangelical Missionary Society has lately celebrated the jubilee of its first ssionary station at Jessonto, South Africa. r readers have in times past known something the work of our French brethren in South rica, mainly through the testimony of the late jor Malan, who devoted so much of his life advance the cause of the Basuto Christians. e recent visit of M. Coillard to Mildmay to vocate the same cause will not have been for- tten. So eager were the natives to hear the spel that at the commencement of the Mission powerful Caffre Chief, Moshesh, sent some ndreds of cattle to the Cape, in order, as he d, "to buy a missionary;" but a hostile be fell upon the party and carried off the tle. M. Casalis, one of the first pioneers, o is still living, recognised in this an open or, and God has given great success to the d of the Kingdom then and since sown.

The wars of the last few years have sadly in- fered with and hindered the followers of the ince of Peace; the destruction of Mission- uses, &c., and removal of missionaries have eatly increased the money outlay, so that the ilee-joy of our French and coloured fellow- ristians is much marred by the ominous word leficit."

At the meeting held at the Temple de l'Ora- re, Paris, M. Viénot, missionary at Tahiti, ve some interesting details of his field of work. hiti is the capital of 104 French islands. mare II., after some political struggles, was t in exile to a neighbouring island; there he t with some English missionaries, and rough them the Gospel was made known to, d believed by, him. When he returned con- eror to Tahiti, contrary to all the traditions his ancestors, he spared his enemies, alleging the reason that he, the chief of sinners, had n the object of an infinitely greater mercy on part of God, thus demonstrating the reality his conversion. The whole population fol- wed the example of their king, and became fessedly Christians. Later on some Roman tholic priests introduced themselves into the nd, and, thanks to their intrigues, the French otectorate was established, and with this pish clerical influence was freely exercised in Protestant land. But it did not succeed, for re are to-day, after the efforts of so many ars, scarcely 500 Catholics, in a population of 000 inhabitants. Is the Church a living one? reply to this, M. Viénot related some facts, of hich we give one. Every Monday the women the Church meet together, and whilst some their number, called fisherwomen, go out to it different persons in the locality, and speak rnestly to them, the others remain in prayer; nost every Monday good results follow.

The Director of the Mission, M. A. Boegner, s been visiting the native churches in South rica, and reports well of the steadfastness of Christians on the whole, under the peculiarly ing circumstances of the war with the Boers. riting from Bloemfontein, he says: "We rived at Bethesda, and the next day, Sunday, reached from 1 Peter ii. 5. In the afternoon ervice of song was held; the young men and ildens and children sing with great enthusiasm ne of Mr. Sankey's beautiful hymns, which re translated for them by M. Coillard during voyage."—Journal des Missions Evangeliques.

BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.—It may be interesting some of your readers to hear that an excellent rk was done among the sailors and workmen of s port during the first three weeks of the present nth, on board the Mission boat, Annie, belong- g to Mr. Cook, of Portsmouth, the speakers being plied chiefly by Mr. McAll, from Paris. The om of the boat seats about 250, and was crowded ery evening. Three meetings a day were held, luding an address to children. The evening one s, of course, the best attended, people continuing come till the service was over, and filling up any ts that became vacant by others being obliged leave. Large numbers thus heard the Word Life. My chief object in writing is in the hope t it may lead others to commence similar work, to assist in what is now being done.

MISSION WORK IN DUBLIN.

THE recent Bank Holiday recalled to my mind the way in which a similar holiday was utilised in Dublin not long ago, which I had the pleasure of witnessing. The plan was to save many poor people from temptation to spend the day in drink and riot, by opening the New Boys' Mission Home in Townsend-street for a whole day's entertainment. This involved no small effort on the part of the ladies working with the Mission, as the building was opened at 11.30 a.m. and kept open till 11.30 p.m., the time when the public-houses closed.

The Mission-rooms, and even the playground, were brought into requisition—every available space was filled with groups of men and women. Nearly four hundred in all were accommodated. Refreshments were provided at a cheap rate for those who could pay, and supplies of a simpler kind were handed to those who could not. The intervals were filled up with hymn-singing, conversation, and addresses. In the afternoon the children and many others were admitted, and a "service of song" on the story of "Christy's Old Organ" was held, in which many kind friends took part. Then tea was provided, the children were questioned in the lively, telling manner so dear to the frequenters of the Irish Mission meetings, and more hymns were sung, and all were dismissed when the last public-house was shut and all danger over. Many were present who had never been sober before on a holiday, and many heard "the old, old story." to whom it was really and virtually a new one.

The blessing of even one such day who can venture to estimate? The Home in which this effort was carried out is one that has been added to the kindred works going on in this once wretched quarter of Dublin. It was greatly needed, for there were many more than could be accommodated. A sum of money was given to build it, and two houses adjoining the original Mission house offered for sale. But £600 are still wanting to complete the work. Will not some who have our "home heathen" laid on their hearts help forward this good work? Communications may be sent to Mrs. Ellen Smyly, 35, Upper Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin.—Faithfully yours,

Dear Friends,—We have much cause to praise God for the abundant blessing He is giving in every department of the work. The schools and homes contain more than 1300 children at present. We have been enabled to add a home for big lads, which has proved to be the missing link in our work, and we look forward to an abundant harvest this coming winter. We receive pleasant letters from time to time from the boys who are settled out in various situations. One nice lad, who entered the Royal Navy some years ago and is now in a Coastguard Station, writes:—"I have given my heart to the Lord Jesus, I do feel so happy, there is such comfort in God's Word; one may read it every day and still find fresh help and strength along the narrow path."

We have had quite a revival amongst our children lately. Many have shown themselves whole-hearted for the Lord, some working for Him and proving themselves valuable helpers. We have great encouragement amongst the adults; the three Sabbath-schools in different parts of Dublin well filled with men and women, meetings every evening well attended; the missionaries visiting from house to house report a favourable reception and cases of interest. One will suffice for illustration.

A man and his wife were visited and invited to send their children to the Mission-school; the mother refused and would not speak with the missionary. She was a Roman Catholic, the father, an unconverted drinker, cared nothing for his poor little ones, though he was nominally a Protestant. Little by little the truth of the Gospel was laid before them. At last, won by the kind interest shown in their state, the children were allowed to go to school. They brought home the texts they learned, and the sweet hymns they sang. Attracted by their improvement, the father began to attend the evening meetings, and soon after was persuaded to join the Band of Hope Temperance Society. This man's business is in a spirit store, filling bottles. He had been in the habit of drinking continually, and neglecting his family; his wife, broken-hearted, had followed his example, and a miserable home was the result.

The wife, seeing the change in her husband, at last listened to the Gospel message, and became a true Christian. Her parents, who are well-to-do bigoted Romanists, persecuted her in every possible way. Her father, to whom she is devoted, beat her cruelly when she ventured to go to see him, and tried to get her girl away from her. These two have now for a long time led a consistent Christian life. The man gave his heart wholly to the Lord, and asked Him to take away the taste for drink. He now abhors the thought of it, and it is most touching to hear him, as he often does, give his experience, pressing his hearers to come and give themselves to the Lord, and find Him an all-sufficient Saviour, as he has done.—Yours faithfully,

Ellen Smyly.

JEWISH REFUGEES IN PALESTINE.

SIR,—I hope you will allow me to do from here, during a few hours' break in my journey towards Jerusalem, what I found no time to do before leaving England, viz., express my heartfelt thanks to the large number of your readers who, by their various tokens of sympathy, have greatly helped the object of my visit to England. Upon them and upon all your readers I would call to make this present work among the Jews in Palestine a special object of prayer. In prayer it was begun some fifteen months ago; by prayer it has been sustained all this time; and it is to the power of intercessory prayer we look for the supply of all we need.

The progress of the Gospel among the Jewish Refugees in Jerusalem calls for loud praise to God. Yesterday's mail brought me letters from some of the Refugees, written in German, Hebrew, and English respectively, which filled my heart with joy. When I remember the darkness these very men were in a short twelve months ago, I cannot but exclaim, "What has God wrought?"

May I, in closing, draw the attention of your readers to the fact that two separate accounts are in existence in connection with this work? One is the "Refugee Fund," which meets the present wants of destitute Refugees, and for which contributions may be sent either to "the Secretary, 16, Lincoln's-inn-fields, London, W.C.," or direct to us in Jerusalem. The other is the "Jewish Refugees' Aid Society," the object of which is to help the Refugees to help themselves, by purchasing land, houses, stock, &c., and giving them remunerative work as tenants or agricultural labourers. Contributions towards this should be sent to Mr. S. Field, 10, Angel-court, London, E.C. In proportion as the "Refugees' Aid Society" is enabled to place the Refugees on the settlement which is to be opened, the "Refugee Fund" will be less and less burdened, till at last it can be closed.

Yours faithfully, H. Friedlaender,
L.J.S.'s Missionary in Jerusalem.

Paris, Aug. 23.

THE BIBLE-CARRIAGE AT BLACKPOOL.—Having paid a visit to Blackpool (Lancashire) during the past ten days, I was much pleased to find evangelistic work being vigorously carried on by Messrs. Weaver and Wharton, who have been labouring there with the Bible-carriage since the beginning of July. I had much happy fellowship with these brethren in helping with the work which God has graciously owned with tokens of blessing. J. B.

RESCUE WORK IN POPLAR.—Rev. T. H. G. Robinson, Vicar of St. Saviour's, Walthamstow, E., writes to us strongly commending the work carried on by Mrs. Wilkes, as described by her in a recent issue. "No words of mine," he says, "can describe the self-denying labours, attended, as must be expected, with much disappointment, but also abundantly blessed, of Mrs. Wilkes and those who support her in her arduous work." He will be glad to receive the contributions of friends.

ARMEE DU SALUT EN SUISSE.

IN a letter to us, with respect to the recent experiences of the Salvation Army in Switzerland, Mr. A. S. Clibborn, writing from Geneva, says:—

"The result of the persecution at Rolle, during which the house of one of our soldiers was attacked, and those leaving the meeting drenched with buckets of water, has been to extend the work to eight villages. Many glorious cases of conversion have been the result; whole families have been brought to the Lord. All meetings are now forbidden in that canton also. A few of the converts arranged to meet for prayer in the country. On arriving, they found at the place a tall man, dressed like a tourist, surveying the landscape through an opera-glass. As a fog obscured the view of the lake they suspected a trap. One went to the stranger; he seemed rather embarrassed, and after a while slipped off. Next day this individual was met at the station in the uniform of a policeman by the person who had accosted him the previous day.

"Determined to meet for worship somehow, our comrades commenced to assemble at three o'clock in the morning, but they were betrayed; the police were called up, and came and dispersed the meeting at 4 a.m. Notwithstanding, their faith and courage continue. Never have I heard more surpassingly beautiful testimonies than on a recent Sunday, when the Rolle converts spent the day with their Genevan comrades.

"Many Swiss citizens have taken a bold and firm stand for the cause of liberty and justice through all this storm. A lawyer in this city threw open his grounds for our meetings. He was summoned by the authorities and fined; he refused to pay the fine, or to cease to worship God with the Salvationists in his grounds. The authorities were obliged to let him alone, conscious that the decree forbidding our meetings was absolutely illegal. At the last meeting of the shareholders of the Reformation Hall a motion was passed, by a majority of fifty to six, approving the action of the committee in having lent us the hall, and giving them fullest liberty to continue to do so in the future.

"In spite of all the surrounding difficulties, the work goes on steadily. Did space allow, many thrilling incidents could be given. We find that none stand more firmly than converted infidels. One of these particularly gives us much joy. He is a Greek, was a well-known Socialist, marked down by the police, came to the meeting to make satirical articles for a Constantinople paper. He was a man who had the deepest hatred against all religion—a Communist of the most fervent type. He was moved by the power of God. I found him at the close of a meeting leaning against the wall, the tears rolling down his cheeks, and his whole frame betraying extreme agitation. 'Ah!' said he, 'I believed in dynamite to set the world right; but now I feel that there is another power which can do it, and the only one!' The agony of the struggle to yield himself was most intense, for 'To me,' said he, 'this step will be a death.' But he took it, nevertheless. The abandonment of his employment reduced him to penury, but he held firm, and went to work as a labourer in the fields. One night he was followed home, savagely beaten, and left almost insensible. His thirst after the knowledge of God has been most remarkable. He holds on his way steadily.

"In France the work goes forward at Paris, Valence, and Nismes. At the latter town our audiences are three-fourths Roman Catholic, the hall being in the exclusively Catholic part of the city.

"Allow me, in conclusion, to appeal to your readers for help. Our funds are at present quite exhausted, and the opportunities before us are boundless. Calls come into our stations from all sides. Our French paper, En Avant, sells by hundreds in the fairs, and we are continually cheered by instances of salvation among its readers. We have one colporteur at work. At Paris one of our most devoted men has, months ago, offered for similar work. We long to set him free."

Any sums forwarded to Miss Wallis, 187, Quai Valmy, Paris, will receive grateful acknowledgment.

MR. MULLER AND HIS MISSIONS.

THE report just issued by Mr. George Müller is another striking record of the faithfulness of God in providing for the large family of orphans at Ashley Down, and the many other good works of the founder. Mr. Müller commences his interesting statement by giving his reasons for being so long absent from home. He says:—"A few Christian friends, who wished well to the Institution, desired me to discontinue my long Missionary Tours, as it appeared to them that that was the especial reason why the income had fallen off. I did not think so, however, because year after year, for several months at a time, the Scriptural Knowledge Institution had been left during my absence; and whenever I returned to Bristol I found that each branch of the Institution was in as good working order as if I had been on the spot. This fact, therefore, was looked upon by me as God's approval of my continuing to go on, seeking to help on individual Christians or assemblies, with the experience and knowledge He had been pleased to give me, during more than half a century that I have known Him."

The reports which from time to time have reached this country of the help rendered by Mr. Müller to Missionary brethren, as well as to students at various colleges and universities abroad, fully justify the course he has adopted.

The report contains a deeply interesting narrative of Mr. Müller's recent missionary journeys. A pretical illustration of the difficulties of spreading the Gospel in Russia is given, and earnest prayer is desired for that vast country. The tenth journey is to be commenced on September 26, when Mr. and Mrs. Müller purpose starting for Madras, in order to spend six months in Gospel itineracy throughout India.

The accounts of the school, missionary, Bible, and tract funds, we are glad to observe, show a larger balance than last year. Many persons may suppose that the care of the orphans is the only work carried on by Mr. Müller and his helpers at Bristol; a glance at this report will soon reveal other works which are equally important and deserving of support. The day and Sunday-school work is a most important factor in the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom. Next comes the Bible circulation, the results of which eternity alone can reveal. Out of the missionary fund help is given to 132 labourers in different parts of the globe. We regret to observe that the sums allotted this year to each missionary are not by any means so large as they were some few years ago. This part of Mr. Müller's work bears directly on the extension of the Gospel throughout the world, and we could wish it were considerably enlarged. The letters from missionaries that appear in this record are full of interest and encouragement.

The orphan account shows a balance in hand of £2266; it is stated there is room for several girls. Conspicuous among the offerings are those of orphans who have in former years reaped the benefits of the institution. It must cheer the hearts of directors and supporters to see those whom the institution has befriended contributing towards its maintenance. The Report may be had of Messrs. Nisbet & Co., Berners-street, London, W.C. Price 6d.

MR. A. H. DARLING, 6, Tilia-road, Clarence-road, Lower Clapton, N.E., writes:—"After having laboured above twenty-five years in the Gospel among foreign sailors, and in other countries, I now feel I have not strength to climb ships, nor am I able, as formerly, to speak various languages without suffering in my head. As there is in France such a large field, with so much liberty, we purpose going about the end of September to live and labour in that land."

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.

DURING the last week a special Mission to the fallen has been held in Southampton. Many ladies and gentlemen have taken an active interest in the work. On Thursday night a midnight meeting was held at the Victoria Rooms, which was attended by a considerable number of the best dressed of the class whose good was sought. Lord Radstock, the Countess Waldegrave, Mrs. Evered Poole, and other friends addressed the assembly. On Friday morning a breakfast was given to all who wished to attend, and in the after-part of the day some of the women were, at their earnest request, taken from their life of sin to a Home at Southsea. The proceedings were conducted by Mr. John H. C. Christien, Organising Secretary of the London Society, 8, Red Lion-square, London, W.C.

MISSION WORK IN WALWORTH.

ON Tuesday, the 21st inst., the first stone of a large Mission-hall was laid by the Bishop of Rochester in a crowded part of South London, once known as the Surrey-gardens. This spot has been lately covered with houses, accommodating 8000 people. The poverty and vice of the neighbourhood is of a marked description. Mission services of an earnest character, devoid of eccentricities, and equally devoid of any stiffness, with street-preaching three or four nights a week, have been carried on, with the result that a congregation of some 600 has been thus gathered together in a public hall near the church, the work of the Church of England in the meanwhile being carried on just as actively and heartily. The Vicar has obtained three houses on the estate, which are to be used as clubs and institutes; and on the gardens of these houses is being built a large Mission-hall. This is the second Mission-hall provided for the parish in the last two years. This second Mission-hall completes a scheme for evangelising this large and poor parish. These halls will have simple services of an evangelistic kind.

The Bishop, after laying the stone in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, spoke to the people assembled together on a temporary erection, overlooked by crowds from the adjoining houses and windows. His Lordship said he could hardly believe that about eighteen months ago he had opened another Mission-hall in the same parish, and he took it as a mark of the success with which God rewarded the courage of faith. This Mission-hall was being built as a place where the pure Word of God might be preached, and the Gospel set forth in its ennobling, emancipating fulness. A sum of £3000 was still wanted; but he felt certain that they and many others would come forward and help in such a noble undertaking as the present one, in the face of the terrible needs of the surrounding locality. He took it as one of the signs which the Church of England has shown of her desire to bring the Gospel to the poor, and surely the many rich persons who could afford it would not be wanting on this occasion. Any information can be obtained from the Rev. E. F. Alexander the Vicarage, Lorrimore-square, Walworth, S.E

THE LATE MR. T. B. SMITHIES.

IN a recent issue of The Church of England Temperance Chronicle, Mr. Robert Sawyer, barrister, gives some very interesting and pleasantly-written "Recollections" of the late Mr. T. B. Smithies, of Earlham-grove, Woodgreen. It was through the patient and persistent efforts of Mr. Smithies that Mr. Sawyer was led to take a personal and active stand on the side of total abstinence. After describing a visit to the northern residence of the philanthropist, on the occasion of the founding of Mrs. Smithies' "Band of Mercy," Mr. Sawyer adds:—

"I have attended many happy gatherings at Earlham-grove. There was a strange fascination about the place and its inhabitants. Mother, son, and daughter living for God, their fellow-creatures, and for one another. Love, charity, and cheerfulness prevailed. Remarkable people met there. Missionaries from all parts of heathendom, boys from Greenwich, policemen, Chinese Ambassadors, the original 'Uncle Tom,' the 'Singing Pilgrim,' Temperance workers, men of business, were all welcome. The house was most comfortably arranged. The poultry, the animals, the dogs, the flowers, the fruit trees were, in their several ways, perfect. Mr. Smithies delighted in pointing out the peculiarities of the two favourites, 'Rosie' and 'Tiny;' how, as a rule, Rosie was a parlour boarder, while Tiny preferred his place in the kitchen. Every morning and evening, however, when the bell rang for family prayers, Rosie immediately marched off to the kitchen, whilst Tiny as regularly left the kitchen, and went in advance of the servants to the dining-room. He there laid down quietly on the hearth-rug, and remained perfectly quiet during singing, reading, and prayer. At the close, in the morning, he left the room and hastened off to the street-door to meet the postman, and in a few minutes reappeared with the letters in his mouth. His next mission was to fetch the daily newspapers. [See the British Workman, May, 1878.]

"The hospitality was unbounded. Mr. Smithies was always giving. He often said to me in the house and garden, 'All that is lent; it is not mine, it is only lent.' He was the most holy man I have known. No one who has heard him sing—

> "Have we trials and temptations?
> Is there trouble anywhere?
> Let us never be discouraged,
> Take it to the Lord in prayer," can ever forget him. With all this, he was genial and light-hearted. I delighted in watching him in the morning. A cheery breakfast, family prayers, at which I have seen all the painters and workmen about the house, in their shirt sleeves, attending with the whole family, the merry search after new-laid eggs, a look at the flowers, a mouthful of luncheon, and the rush off to the 'Row' for the day's work, after asking his 'Heavenly Father' to bless our outgoing and our returning home, are little everyday matters which cannot be forgotten.

"One more incident I relate as a guide to public speakers. One morning, after a Temperance meeting, I asked him whether he prepared his speeches, and if so, whether he was able to keep to what he intended to say. He went to the book-case and took down a book. 'Read that,' he said, 'that is what I intended to speak about last night. Something else came into my head, and I forgot what I had intended. It is generally so, but I always ask God to enable me to say that which will be most suitable and useful to the people I am addressing.'"

WETHERLEY, ATHERSTONE.—A Sunday Mission for children was started at this village a few months ago by Mr. T. J. Latimer, of Atherstone, the results of which have been very gratifying.

CATERHAM VALLEY.—Mr. and Mrs. F. Wilson, Evangelists, have been conducting Gospel services at Caterham Valley with success. Many persons have attended the meetings, and it is hoped not a few have been led to the Saviour.

PRISON REFORM.

By CHARLES COOK.

REPLIES TO QUESTIONS.

SO many have been the inquiries addressed to me as the result of the articles on English and Foreign Prisons, that I desire briefly to answer them, as far as it is in my power.

"Do I think that prisoners are well treated and cared for?" Generally speaking, yes; there are exceptions of which I will speak presently. As an answer to such inquiries I would quote the testimony of a convict now in Pentonville, who, writing last month, says: "I work ten hours a day at the tailoring, have plenty to eat, and a comfortable bed, and I think they treat me better than I deserve, and I feel my Heavenly Father has smoothed the pathway for me."

"How much of his sentence can a convict get remitted?" Nearly a quarter; for instance, a prisoner who is sentenced to five years, if he earns all his good marks (eight per day) need only serve three years, eleven months, and one week. There is no remission on sentences of two years and under. Men under sentence "for life" are supposed to complete twenty years before any hope is held out to them.

"Is any person allowed to visit our prisons?" No. Special permission can only be procured from the Directors of H.M.'s Prisons or the Secretary of State, and this is not given to any one who merely wishes to see the prisons.

"If a case of severe or unrighteous sentence is known, how can we best go to work to procure in measure a remission of the sentence?" Get all the facts together as tersely as possible, with anything of importance which did not come out at the trial, and submit them to the Home Secretary, praying him to consider the case. A public meeting or two, well attended (and well reported), and a little agitation, may serve to get justice done in the case.

"What are the principal defects in our own system?" One of the greatest defects has been the association of all grades of criminals. The young post-office official, who, for stealing a letter has got "five years," is thrown into the company of burglars and smashers; the young clerk, who, through the curse of betting, has received seven years for forgery, will have to associate with murderers and "Invincibles;" the commercial traveller, who through drink has fallen, must suffer durance vile, and be content to herd with villains of the blackest dye. "Look!" said a chief warder to me when I was visiting one of H.M.'s prisons, pointing to a convict working with a gang of others, "if that man does not know anything of burglary, he very soon will." He had been a soldier in India, and for some offence had been tried and sent home here, to associate with murderers and burglars. Surely if the chief officials of our prisons speak of our system as needing reform, there must be room at least for inquiry. I am aware that the authorities, on a small scale, are trying to classify prisoners. In France habitual criminals are always sent to a special prison.

Another thing which calls loudly for reform is the putting of almost absolute control into the hands of young and inexperienced assistant warders. A number of prisoners, called "a party," from six to twenty, have to work under a warder or assistant warder, who can report them for any breach, or supposed breach, of discipline. It is not every man that can be trusted with power, and whilst the majority of warders are, no doubt, experienced men, many of them having been non-commissioned officers in the Army and Navy, yet there are many young men, assistant warders, who delight to worry and annoy a prisoner. They take special delight in doing so if they notice him somewhat above the ordinary type.

Your readers will not misunderstand me when I speak of the need of all prisons having a converted chaplain. Where a prison is blessed with a man who seeks the salvation of souls, that prison is the best conducted and the mostly easily governed. How sad must be the case of those prisoners who sit under the ministry of one who, while he may be honourable, gentlemanly, conscientious in all his duties, and even kind to those unfortunate beings who are under his care, has had no personal experience of the saving grace of God. In vain may we expect men to leave prison reformed unless they have been transformed by the converting power of God. The need of some power to change the heart may be seen by the following instance:—One prisoner about to be discharged was asked by the Governor what he thought of doing. He had been a very badly-behaved man, and had forfeited all the money he might have been entitled to, and the Governor wondered what business he would try to follow. "Oh, I think," said he, "of opening a jeweller's shop." "But," said the Governor, "you have no capital; how can you start?" "Oh," replied the man, "you can always get a crowbar for sixpence?"

Concerning foreign prisons, I would say that I am hoping to procure 12,000 Gospels in Italian for distribution in the prisons of Italy. To this end I shall be glad to visit any place in the kingdom and speak on "English and foreign prisons and their needs," with special reference to France and Italy. If any friends will arrange for a meeting and will write to me, I will let them know what dates I have free. By the time this appears in print I shall be in Germany, but hope to return very soon, and shall be glad to correspond with any who are interested in this subject.

A BIBLE STALL IN ISLINGTON.

IN your issue of August 2, Mr. Charles Cook spoke of the possible reformation of convicts, and made reference to one man who had served five terms of penal servitude for thieving, and who had been brought to repentance under the preaching of the Bishop of Rochester in Chatham prison. I wish to substantiate what Mr. Cook says, and further to state that this man, known as "Harry Edwards, the converted thief," has been a member of our "Volunteer Corps" for about eighteen months.

He has given such evidence of a change of heart by a desire to work for Christ among the class to which he formerly belonged, that I have procured a Bible Carriage and Stall and stocked it as well as I am able, and sent him forth as colporteur and street preacher. This Bible-stand is in Packington-street, Islington. Last week he was cruelly treated by some of the roughs whilst giving a Gospel address. One man kicked him in a dastardly manner. Another seized him by the nose and pulled him about, but though those cruelties occasioned him acute pain and have almost disabled him for work this week, he makes but little complaint, and hopes soon to be well again.

I have taken the entire responsibility of sustaining this effort, in the faith that when it is known others will help. Here is a man especially qualified for reaching the worst characters in London, giving himself to that work in humble dependence upon the Lord. F. JEWELL.

93, Packington-street, Islington.

NORFOLK.—Mr. H. M. Barnett writes encouragingly of village work in the neighbourhood of Hopton, and asks for praise to be given for blessing received.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS' CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—Mr. R. C. L. Bevan has promised a sum of £50 in response to Mr. T. A. Denny's recent offer of a like amount to this Association. These sums are promised towards a special effort to raise £1000 for sending more Bibles into commercial hotel bedrooms, and more libraries of good literature into commercial rooms. About half the needed amount has now been given or guaranteed. Office of the Society, 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C.

THE AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE.

An officer on board the sailing schooner Undine, Lieutenant and Commander Henry M'A. Cutfield, employed in suppressing the slave trade in the Mozambique Channel, writing under date July 16, says :—

"We are having a lively time, I can assure you, with 103 poor, miserable, half-starved wretches on board, eighty of them women and children, and for the most part children from eighteen months to ten years old, and one only four days old. The dhow that they came to Johanna in was sixty-three tons, so they were packed like sardines. These slaves were kidnapped about 200 miles south of Mozambique, brought down to the coast, and shipped off to Johanna as a speculation, as the sugar crop is just coming on. Some of the children have been taken care of by the women. Two little chaps the men look after are housed in a biscuit box, and they cry lustily if taken out of it. They eat all day and nearly all night. One old woman became insane after she was taken out of the dhow, and she has a baby with her. The poor old woman is tied down to prevent her going overboard in a fit, of which she has had several. Every morning all are stripped, and the fire hose played on them indiscriminately—and don't they want it! The smell is something too bad to be talked about. Luckily we have beautiful weather this trip, and a strong fair wind. Some would be certain to die if we had a spell of bad weather, as we have only the upper deck for them to lie on.

"The night we took them on board they were so cramped and weak that only about twenty could walk. The rest were passed in one after the other, and then stowed in rows for the night; 120 lbs. of rice, treacle, and sweet potatoes were cooked at once. When they saw it they went hands and feet into it, and fought, and bit, and each did everything that could be done to get a little more than another. It was really a most distressing sight. Even now they fight for a piece of bread or anything we give them. Last night they all picked up so, after a good meal and good sleeping berths, that they commenced singing and dancing their native dances. What worries us most is the crying of the babies; it goes on all day and night, and is an awful nuisance. We should, I think, capture three times as many if we had some more boats and a steam cutter, as there is not a shadow of doubt that large numbers are run here every year, and especially about this time. Unfortunately the master gave us the slip, though we were the whole of the night looking for him on shore. I think we left some more on shore who could not be found, but we may pick them up on our return. The boat captured 149, and we hope eventually to get twenty-two more, so that twenty-four have died or been sold somewhere else."—Daily Telegraph.

THE BELLEVILLE MISSION.—Miss de Broen, of the Belleville Mission, Paris, recently held two meetings at Braemar, N.B., giving a thrilling and graphic account of her important work. The chair was taken on both occasions by the Bishop of Cashel and Waterford, and representatives of the different Protestant churches joined to heartily support Miss de Broen and express sympathy in the cause she pleads. During the last twelve years the Mission has so extended that pressing need of extra voluntary workers is felt, and the branches are so various as to offer scope for different powers and capacities, provided there be the essential conditions required. Very earnest appeals were made for the help of such women. The Medical Mission gathers 20,000 patients yearly, and there are twenty-four orphans under careful training, and many thousands of homes daily visited. As no pecuniary help can be expected from the locality itself, Miss de Broen looks to England, the land of Missions, for help, which will be gratefully received by the Countesse Héloise de Manin, 14, Sussex-gardens, London, W.; or by Miss J. de Broen, 3, Rue Clavel, Belleville, Paris.

Notices of Books, &c.

The Mission of St. John the Baptist. By Rev. Evan H. Hopkins. Marshall Brothers. An instructive and suggestive sermon concerning the person and work of the Lord's forerunner, of whom and which there is a general need of enlightenment.

Conditional Immortality, Tested by Scripture. By Canon Girdlestone. 6d. A model of the spirit in which a discussion on disputed subjects should be carried on. We cordially commend both the manner and the matter of these brief and candid appeals to Scripture.

The New Godiva. Isbister. 4d. We are not sure this is a very happy title, but the pamphlet is one we highly recommend, on the subject of the wrongs of some women and the noble efforts which some of their sisters have made, are making, and will make on their behalf. We rejoice to find that this is the second edition; it will do much good if widely circulated.

Tina and Beth; or, The Night Pilgrims. By Annie E. Courtenay. T. Woolmer. A touching story of two children brought up in the midst of poverty and vice, yet graciously preserved from contamination, and led by mission agencies to the knowledge and love of Christ. The book can exert no other than a good and healthy influence, and may well have a place in libraries for the use of the young.

Self-employment in Secret. T. Woolmer. This is the first of a series of Devotional Manuals, issuing from the Wesleyan Conference Office, designed to foster and aid the habit of meditation and secret prayer. It consists of "An Inquiry into the State of his own Soul," together with "Notes for Himself," by Rev. John Corbet, a Nonconformist minister, who suffered much affliction, and died in 1680. It is admirably adapted to help the Christian in the important work of self-examination, and augurs well for the worth of the series to follow. A preface of a commendatory character by Rev. John Howe is prefixed.

Our Ministry: How it Touches the Questions of the Age. By Horatius Bonar, D.D. Macniven & Wallace. Dr. Bonar tells us he has here printed in full what he had written for the General Assembly, but had not time to deliver. He has conferred a favour upon the whole Christian world by so doing. We gave full reports of these valuable addresses in our columns at the time they were delivered, and now rejoice to see them in their complete form presented to the public. They are pre-eminently worthy of wide circulation, and of attentive reading, and in these days of theological unrest and uncertainty are conducive to highest and most important ends. It would be well if a copy of this book could be sent to every minister in the United Kingdom.

The Present Crisis, and Future Prospects of the Church of God. By Rev. E. Cornwall. Haughton & Co. This volume deserves careful reading; whether its conclusions are accepted or not it will well repay perusal. The author has approached his theme with reverent and cautious steps. He states in a preface that it is the result of several months daily, earnest, and prayerful study of the Word of God, unaided by recourse to human works of any kind. The Futurist will not find his theory sustained by the writer, and the secret rapture view is vigorously attacked and disclaimed. There is much in the book calculated to stir the hearts of believers, and to quicken them in the way of truth, and much light is thrown upon not a few portions of Holy Writ. It is twelve years ago since it was first published, but this new edition has been called for, and is prefaced by testimonies to the usefulness of the work from Revs. Dr. David Brown, of Aberdeen, and W. Crosbie; Messrs. S. Morley, M.P., and James Grant, formerly editor of The Morning Advertiser. It is certainly helpful to candid inquiry on a most momentous and solemn subject.

African Settlement Society.—Canada cannot receive any more little ones until next April, but we could receive a large number during the winter months if the necessary funds were sent in at once. We shall want a little time to get ready for the boys before they arrive at our Settlement. It will take about £360 to build the six houses (at £60 each) required at our Settlement. The climate of Natal is considered better than New South Wales, but not quite so warm, although about the same latitude. Contributions may be sent to W. Wright, M.A., Hon. Sec., 115, Fleet-street, E.C.

Mission Appeals.

Southsea Mission.—Mr. John Denning, Pain's-road, Southsea, asks for help to mend or replace a tent, which has been much damaged lately. There has been much blessing given at this place this summer. A new tent would cost £85.

Rosslyn Mission, Barnsbury.—A correspondent writes us appealing for help towards the expense of this Mission, carried on by Miss Garnet, 32, Westbourne-road, Barnsbury. It is a quiet but effective Mission, and needing funds.

Clevedon Convalescent Home. — A sale of work will be held on behalf of this Home on Thursday, Nov. 22. The Lady Superintendent, or Rev. E. Forbes, Elmshurst, Clevedon, Somerset, will be glad to receive gifts of money or work.

Gee-street Mission, Goswell-road. — The Hon. Sec. of this Mission, Mr. H. Rudgley, 82, Wood-street, E.C., appeals for help in the expenses. The results of the work justify its continuance, and the workers are voluntary agents. Donations may be sent to R. Baxter, Esq., 6, Victoria-street, Westminster, or to the above-named.

THE BRIGHTON MEDICAL MISSION.

A few streets away from the ebb and flow of the restless tide, and altogether apart from the glitter, show, and fashion of the long sea-front, another and as restless and surging a tide is met—the ever-flowing tide of human sickness and sorrow. And as of old, so now, there is but one effectual manner of meeting the woe, which is twofold: sickness of the body, and sickness of the soul.

Eight years ago the Brighton Medical Mission Workers took as their motto these words:—"Heal the sick that are therein, and say unto them, the kingdom of God is come nigh unto you" (Luke x. 9), and this twofold ministry has been abundantly blessed by Him for whose glory the work was undertaken in faith and love.

The kingdom of God has indeed been brought nigh to many a drooping soul in these Mission-rooms, and been received in all joy and simplicity, and the sun of righteousness has in truth risen with healing in his wings upon many a dark soul. The hopelessness of a soul without God retards in many a case the cure of bodily disease, whereas the peace and calm which a believing heart enjoys reacts even on the frame. "When He giveth peace who then can make trouble?" Many who come to the dispensary, intent only on earthly good and bodily healing, hear, to their joy through eternity, of the great Healer, who healeth all our diseases whether of soul or body.

The Dispensary is open each Monday and Thursday at 100, Edward-street. A Gospel address is given by the Medical Superintendent, Dr. Witten, at 10 o'clock, and from that hour until 1 o'clock the sick and sorrowful are patiently attended to. While the patients are summoned in turn to the consulting-room, prayer, praise, instruction, and exhortation goes on in the waiting-room. This is carried on by ladies interested in the work. Bible-readings, Mission-services, and Prayer-meetings are held in connection with the Brighton Medical Mission, patients are visited in their homes, and help distributed to the needy.

The work is carried on with the utmost economy; were larger funds at the disposal of the workers, the blessings which it carries to the poor would be more widely dispensed. It has outgrown the premises, and a larger and more suitable building is required for the extending Mission. Shall a work so Christlike and so self-denying suffer for lack of silver and gold? Help may be paid to Mrs. Witten, Alstone Villa, College-road, Brighton.

Clara Thwaites.

"The Voices of the Children."

Dear Readers of "The Christian,"

Heavy expenses incurred (£3,000) in emigrating during the year over 300 Poor Boys and Girls have quite exhausted our Treasury, so that our Bank account is even now overdrawn.

Meanwhile, Twelve Hundred Little Ones needing FOOD, SHELTER, AND CLOTHING, must remain in the "Homes" during the Holidays.

The next 9 or 10 weeks will therefore be a period of great burden-bearing and much anxiety to those on whom the direct responsibilities lie. But

Are there not many of the Lord's Stewards who will regard this sober statement of facts as a call to Service?

Surely the enjoyments of life are enhanced to those who remember the necessities of the children of our streets.

Any gifts, however small, will be gratefully acknowledged by our Treasurer, Wm. Fowler, Esq., M.P., or by

Yours very faithfully, in Christ's Service,

Among His Little Ones,

T. J. BARNARDO.

ETERNITY. WHAT DOES THE BIBLE SAY OF IT?

A Series of 4 two-page Leaflets, each containing a collection of stirring Pieces, admirably adapted for use at "Gospel Temperance" and other Meetings. Price 9d. per 100, or 7s. 6d. per 1000.

CONTENTS OF NO. 1.

Where is my wandering boy to-night?
One there is who loves thee
The mistakes of my life have been many
Long in darkness we have waited
Are you coming home, ye wanderers?
A ruler once came to Jesus by night
Fierce and wild the storm is raging
Why do you wait, dear brother?
Say, where is thy refuge, my brother?
Why perish with cold and with hunger?
From the riven Rock there floweth

CONTENTS OF No. 2.

What can wash away my stain?
Come, thou weary! Jesus calls thee
Should the death-angel knock at your chamber
The Gospel bells are ringing
Have you any room for Jesus?
Oh come, sinner, come! 'tis mercy's call
Make room for Jesus! room, sad heart!
Oh, do not let the Word depart
Brightly beams our Father's mercy
O Christ, in Thee my soul hath found
Light in the darkness, sailor!

CONTENTS OF No. 3.

When my final farewell to the world I have said
Standing by a purpose true
When the storms of life are raging
I have read of a beautiful city
Ring the bells of heaven! there is joy to day
I have heard of a land far away
"Land ahead!" its fruits are waving
Oh, tender and sweet was the Master' voice
'Tis the promise of God full salvation to give
When storms around are sweeping

CONTENTS OF No. 4.

Of course you know that to and fro, throughout our glorious land
She only touched the hem of His garment
Our Master has taken His journey
Tempted and tried
Father, don't you hear the angels
The prize is set before us
There is a Fountain filled with blood
Would you lose your load of sin?
Yield not to temptation, for yielding is sin

Letters to the Editor.

"A TERRIBLE THOUGHT."

Dear Sir,—At the close of the paper on Samson, in your issue of August 9, there occurs a sentence which, if really true, is, indeed, a terrible thought—namely, that spiritual power once lost is never fully regained. I should like to ask, "Is this really so?" For, if true, it must give a hopeless and crushed feeling to many an earnest soul who is conscious of having, for the time, less power than he once exercised. Can such a one never be so renewed through grace, that he exercises a still greater spiritual power than ever before? I would wish much to see something on this point, which must interest so many of us.—Yours very faithfully, in the love of Christ, W. S.

Aug. 19.

[We think with our correspondent that the statement referred to requires revision. We doubt not that David, Peter, and many more were humbler, holier, and wiser after their fall than they were before. Indeed, Samson is said to have done more in his death than he had done in his life. He then evinced more of a broken and contrite spirit than he had ever done before; and God did not despise his prayer.—Ed.]

MR. SPURGEON AND HIS WORK.

Sir,—I have read with much approval the proposal of Mr. Adcock, contained in The Christian of August 16, to raise a fund for Mr Spurgeon to enable him to take the rest which he so much requires. As a former member of Mr. Spurgeon's congregation, and a great admirer of his love and devotion to the Lord, as well as of his grand and distinguished powers, I write in support of the proposition. I consider Mr. Spurgeon has laid all denominations under contribution, both by the publication of his sermons, which are largely read and used by all Christians, and also by the establishment of his Orphanage, which receives children belonging to all sects, those of the Church of England being the largest number.

I think that such a tribute to the health of a man "whom the King delighteth to honour," bestowed by all sections of the Church of God, would be a wonderful testimony to the world of the union of Christians, and go a long way to remove those barriers which at present so unnaturally and injuriously separate Christians; and it would also encourage, cheer, and, under God, prolong the life of him whose spiritual seed the day of Christ will alone fully manfest. If the proposal is taken up, I shall be very glad to assist in giving and obtaining, so far as I am able, subscriptions to the fund.—Yours faithfully, John Warren.

Melverley, Spencer-hill, Wimbledon, August 21.

THE RESTORATION OF ISRAEL.

Sir,—In reply to Mr. Phipps' interesting letter, I would urge—

(1) In none of the passages referred to by him is there any mention of a restoration in unbelief.

(2) The "distress, and chastisement, and tribulation" which are to come upon Israel after their restoration may well be regarded as part of the necessary discipline through which the Church of Israel (as also all Christ's people) must pass.

(3) Though the tribes appoint for themselves one head (not king) after their restoration, this does but imply that they are of one mind—their mutual envies and vexations ended—and there is no indication in this of unbelief. The remnant who returned from Babylon did the same thing with the Divine sanction.

(4) The vision of the dry bones is interpreted for us, and it means, "I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and will bring you into the land of Israel." The Israelites are brought thither from the place where once their dry bones lay. The order of the words of the promise is this: "Ye shall live, and I will place you in your own land." They come not as dry bones or dead corpses, but as a living army. It is the redeemed who come with singing unto Zion.

(5) While it is doubtless true that the "blessedness" of Israel (as of all Christ's people) will not be consummated until He comes, it does not follow that they will be unbelievers until He comes.

(6) The possession of the land has always had a religious significance. It was the outward sign of the maintenance of the covenant between the Lord and Israel. They could not enter into the land in unbelief (Heb. iii. 19), and they possessed the land by faith (Heb. xi. 30; Ps. xliv.). They were cast out of the land for their persistent unbelief (2 Chr. xxxvi. 14—20; Jer. xxv. 1—11). The remnant who returned from Babylon, returned as believers in God, and their first work was to restore his temple (Ezra i. 1—6). Israel is not cast out again, for their unbelief, and their desolate heritages testify to the world of the broken covenant.

(7) The words of Moses are explicit: "It shall come to pass when all these things come upon thee . . . . and thou shalt call them to mind among all the nations whither the Lord thy God hath driven thee, and shalt return unto the Lord thy God . . . that then the Lord thy God will turn thy captivity . . . and gather thee from all nations . . . and the Lord thy God will bring thee into the land which thy fathers possessed" (Deut. xxx. 1—5).—Yours faithfully,

W. F. K.

MR. J. B. GOUGH AND THE BLUE RIBBON.

Dear Sir,—I see in the issue of The Christian for July 26th that I am there stated to be "opposed to the Blue Ribbon movement." I take this opportunity of saying that I am "opposed" to no movement that promotes the principles of total abstinence, whether by a blue, a red, or a white ribbon. Any movement that does this and brings souls to Christ I rejoice in. I take leave, as I suppose everyone else does, to exercise the right of private judgment as to the wisdom of methods and measures, but for my opinions I hold myself responsible to no man unless I publish them.

My friend William Noble knows I helped him in his Blue Ribbon enterprise as I had time and strength. Mr. R. T. Booth knows I introduced him to three prominent men in England, who, I doubt not, have done what they could to aid the work of the Blue Ribbon movement. Mr. Francis Murphy knows I have spoken in furtherance of the work he was engaged in, at Worcester and at Chautauqua.

I have been deeply interested in the present enthusiasm in Great Britain, and hope and pray that all the good fruit of it may be enduring in every way. I am sure it will take no common wisdom to so harvest these fruits as to promote this most desirable end.

It is true that the Blue Ribbon badge is rarely to be seen in the United States now, and I heartily wish this were not a fact. I do regret that it should ever be stated in Great Britain that eleven millions have taken that sign of abstinence in the United States, because it cannot be an accurate statement, and is calculated to bring lasting discredit on all accurate statements of progress, and rob them of the legitimate encouragement they might give.

I claim that I can stand in the above attitude without any necessity for being posted in print as "opposed to the Blue Ribbon movement." Most heartily wishing for the dear old country, by any right and lawful means, entire and complete riddance from the drinking customs and the drink traffic, with all their guilt and snares,—I am, most truly yours, John B. Gough.

A SIGNAL OF DISTRESS.

THE BOYS' HOME, SOUTHWARK.

LITTLE WANDERERS' HOME, GREENWICH. THE BOYS' ORPHAN HOME, RAMSGATE.

MR. FEGAN has been compelled through ill-health to leave town for a period of perfect rest and quiet, and is forbidden to do any mental work. He has been absent now for some weeks, and it is feared it may be some time yet before he is thoroughly restored.

His health completely failed through the constant strain of living in the Southwark Home amongst the boys, caring personally for their spiritual, temporal, and physical welfare. This unceasing supervision has been of the utmost value to the work, but has quite worn out the worker.

The result of his untiring efforts is that the work is now in a condition of higher efficiency than ever before, and a state of system and discipline has been attained which it is hoped will prevent the work from suffering in any way during his temporary absence, the various departments continuing to be carried on in their usual course by his several helpers.

Funds are now URGENTLY NEEDED to maintain the 200 Boys in the various Homes, and it is earnestly hoped that there will be no want of adequate support at this time, so that all anxiety as to pecuniary matters may be taken from Mr. Fegan's mind.

Remittances should be made payable as usual to J. W. C. FEGAN, but communications relating to the admission of boys, trade orders, &c., should be addressed to

THE SECRETARY.

SIXTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN"
WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK
CONSUMPTION.—CASE REPORTED by MR. J. BALDWIN, RYE, SUSSEX.

Writing me, June 2, on behalf of another patient, Mr. B. says: "Your medicine does him a great deal of good."

"As for myself I am glad to say I have not had any cough since your medicine cured me. I came to you when almost in the grave. The doctors gave me only a few days to live when you took me in hand. They acknowledge my recovery to be wonderful, and all my friends say it is one of the most marvellous cures ever known. In fact, I never knew the medicine to fail where it has been regularly taken according to your order."

On referring to my book, I find that every symptom of phthisis was present when this patient commenced my treatment.

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

LIFE OF DUNCAN MATHESON, the Scottish Evangelist.

"This is a book full of interest. It tells of the life-work and success of a most excellent and able lay revivalist of the best sort. No Christian can read it without profit. It is highly calculated to instruct and encourage such of God's servants as make the labour of saving souls the business of their life."
Methodist Family.

With Lithographed Portrait. Handsomely Bound in Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 2s. 6d.
HENRY MOORHOUSE, the English Evangelist.

"The record is full of interesting incidents from which counsel and encouragement may be gathered; and we heartily commend it to the attention of those who would know what may be done by workers somewhat off the ordinary recognised lines."—The Rock.

Revised by ROBERT C. CHAPMAN.

NEW EDITION.

Tinted Covers, 9d.; Cloth Limp, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.; Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s.; Morocco, Gilt Edges, 3s.

Rev. C. H. SPURGEON in the Sword and Trowel for September, 1883, says:—"Here we have gold dust, 'and the gold of that land is good.' We hardly know a man more noteworthy for abounding grace and deep piety than ROBERT C. CHAPMAN. His name has never been sounded abroad, but those who know him value him beyond expression. Some of these brief 'Sayings' contain whole sermons. Personally, we expect to gather many discourses while studying this little book. A dew from heaven rests upon Mr. CHAPMAN'S expositions."

THE POPULAR EDITION OF

CRUDEN'S COMPLETE CONCORDANCE

To the OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS.

Strongly Bound in Cloth Boards, PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS

Presentation Edition, handsomely bound in Cloth, price 7s. 6d.

THE POPULAR EDITION

Of CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE (Published by MORGAN & SCOTT) contains a carefully revised and much extended List of the PROPER NAMES of the OLD and NEW TESTAMENTS with their Meanings in the Original Languages, by Rev. ALFRED JONES, M.A., Author of "The Proper Names of the Old Testament Scriptures Expounded and Illustrated."

Mr. D. L. MOODY, after having recommended the purchase of a good Bible, says, "Next I would advise you to get CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE and a Scripture Text Book. These books will help you to study the Word of God with profit. If you have not got them, get them to-morrow, for every Christian ought to have them."

THE NUMBER "SEVEN" IN SCRIPTURE.

Compiled by S. A. BLACKWOOD, Esq., C.B.,

Paper Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.; Presentation Edition, Cloth Boards, Bevelled, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

"I do not presume to offer an opinion as to the purpose with which the number seven has been so prominently interwoven with the Scriptures. That there is some purpose, however, I can hardly doubt; for the use of the number is far more than merely mechanical or artificial. It runs through the whole of the Bible, commencing with the institution of the seventh day—or Sabbath—in Eden, and concluding with the various series of 'sevens' in the Apocalypse."

By ANNA SHIPTON.

Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.; cloth, Gilt Edges, 2s. (post free).

"Presents us with notices of a life spent in loving, intimate, and uninterrupted communion with a personal Lord. . . . We have read the book with deep interest. We would that indolent professors might read it and be quickened, and that suffering saints might read it and be comforted."—Christian Times.

"The sentiment of this book is illustrated in a pleasing narrative, in which its influence upon the experience of an eminently pious friend of the author's, and of her own, is admirably pourtrayed. It is calculated to produce a certain impression upon the hearts of true Christians that will be greatly beneficial to them."—Sword and Trowel.

THE KINGSLAND GOSPEL MISSIONS IN EAST LON N.

THE PROPOSED NEW HALL NEAR OLD FORD.

A Special Appeal. Who will help?

FROM the almost entire suspension of help for the above proposed Hall for many weeks, we have not yet felt justified to proceed with its erection. The builders are anxious to save what remains of fine open weather before the dark days, and we are sorely tried to be compelled to remain in our present small temporary premises (a close shop and private rooms). Under these trying circumstances, E. B., an old friend of our work, anxious to effectually promote these endeavours, gladly offers £50 providing eleven others would give a like amount; or say twenty-two gave £25 each: making altogether the £600 yet required to complete and furnish. Promises in reply to E. B.'s offer, or the smallest sums, would be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, Mr. W. WARD, 211, Southgate-road, N.; or by the General Superintendent, Mr. WM. CHORLEY, 79, Norfolk-road, Islington, N.

Sept. 1, 1883.

Promises will be acknowledged in following CHRISTIAN.

THE "ONE TUN" RAGGED SCHOOL MISSION (formerly the "One Tun" (Thieves') Public House, Old Pye-street, Westminster), for training the children (boys and girls) of the destitute classes for service. Above 200 children, between the ages of 3 and 13, are in the Schools. Sixty-seven are in situations in and near London. Plain needlework and cookery taught. Mothers' Meetings. Wednesday mid-day Prayer Meeting. Band of Hope. Sabbath Band. Gospel Temperance Meetings. Men's Bible Class. Sunday-evening Mission Services. Open Air Meeting. Working Lads' Institute. Bible-woman visits all connected with the Mission. Blind Evangelist, &c. Special Fund of £80 required, if the Lord will. £81 received. URGENTLY needed. Will be thankfully acknowledged by Mrs. A. BARKER HARRISON. Hon. Secretary, 78, Coleshill-street, Eaton-square, S.W.

NEW HOMES FOR ORPHANS, Swanley.—The Committee are now prepared to receive applications for the admission of Boys to their new Orphan Homes. They must be fatherless, have been born in lawful wedlock, and be under 12 years of age. A payment of £20 a year is required, for which the boys are boarded, clothed, educated, and fitted by technical instruction for their future work in life. Forms of application may be had at the offices, Ludgate-circus.—A. O. CHARLES, Secretary.

MRS. WILKES begs to thank G. S. for £1: A. C. H. C., £1, and some kind friend from Gosport who sent 1s. Mrs. WILKES would like the addresses of her friends, so that she may send acknowledgments and reports of work. The Treasurer of the Rescue Work is HENRY GREEN, Esq., Blackwall, E.

ZENANA AND MEDICAL MISSION, School and Home, 58, St. George's-road, S.W.—The Committee urgently ask contributions towards increased and increasing expenses. Hon. Sec., Dr. GRIFFITH; Treasurer, G. J. GREEN, Esq., London and County Bank, Victoria-street, S.W.—Rev. W. H. Webb-Peploe, £1 1s.; Miss Scott, £3; Col. Dowé White, £1; Mrs. Evans, £5; G. J. Morris, £1 1s.

GEORGE YARD RAGGED SCHOOL, &c., Whitechapel, E.

GEORGE HOLLAND thankfully acknowledges receiving from B., a parcel of worn clothing and boots.

Industrial Classes for Lads.

Friends willing to teach any industrial pursuit to lads will be gladly welcomed. Classes are conducted during the evenings for fretwork printing, carpentering, &c. More helpers are required. The object is to give profitable amusement to Lads to win them from places having a bad influence, and to enable friends to speak a word for Jesus.

Friends are invited to visit the Institution any day but Saturday.

Post Office Orders should be made payable at 66, High-street, Whitechapel, E. Letters and Parcels should be addressed to GEORGE HOLLAND, The Ragged Schools, George-yard, High-street, Whitechapel, London, E.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

Supported by Voluntary Contributions.

President—

The Right Hon. the EARL of SHAFTESBURY, K.G.

Established 1833, for the purpose of employing humble Christian men, well versed in the Scriptures, to visit from house to house throughout the country, and visit all denominations. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required. The work is carried on in a spirit of love.

Subscriptions or Donations will be thankfully received by the Secretary, Capt. KEARNEY WHITE, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin; or at 9, Paternoster-row, London.

The Earl of Shaftesbury says in his last letter to the Secretary:—Many thanks for your kind letter, and many thanks to Almighty God for the good intelligence you give me about your Scripture Readers in Ireland. I wish I could more effectively assist you. Your letter is the best thing that I have seen or heard from Ireland.

I enclose my donation, and only wish it was more.—Yours, SHAFTESBURY.

N.B.—Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not as "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

A SALE of Useful, Fancy, and Ornamental Work will (D.V.) be held at the Public Hall, Clevedon, on Thursday, November 22, 1883, and following days if necessary, on behalf of Christ Church Clevedon Convalescent Home. Gifts of money or work will be gratefully received by the LADY SUPERINTENDENT, Belmont, Highdale-road, or by the Rev. E. FORBES, Elmhurst, Clevedon, and should reach them not later than Monday, November 19, 1883.

THE COMMITTEE of the Ladies' Samaritan Society of the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, 25, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, earnestly plead for Contributions in aid of the poorer patients and their families. The smallest Donations in money or clothing will be most thankfully acknowledged by the Committee.

GREAT COLEMAN'S, near Ongar, is now opened by Dr. and Mrs. S. C. GRIFFITH to give change of air and rest to educated people of limited means.—For particulars, apply to 45, Finsbury-square, E.C.

WINCHESTER CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE, September 12, 13, and 14. For information, apply, Lt.-Col. BEER, East Liss, Petersfield; or E. TANNER, Winchester.

Educational.

TO GODLY PARENTS.—The undermentioned (who is in no way connected with the school) is desirous of recommending an old-established YOUNG GENTLEMEN'S BOARDING SCHOOL, DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED FACING THE SEA on the South Coast, a short run from London, in which a thorough and first-class Education is given, based upon the teaching of the Holy Scriptures.

It is one of the few remaining schools in which the power of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ influences the hearts and conduct of the pupils.

The success, happiness, and training of the Boys have been so remarkable in this School that a BOOK OF TESTIMONIALS GIVEN BY THE PARENTS should be read to appreciate results so unusual. Two Vice-Chancellors have placed their wards as pupils in the school. Reference kindly permitted to Dr. THORN, Paddington, London.

THE OLD HALL SCHOOL, Wellington, Salop. Principal, Dr. CRANAGE, M.A. The next term will begin (D.V.) Thursday, September 20. Full particulars on application.

MENTAL AND PHYSICAL MALADIES:

THEIR CAUSE AND CURE.

IN nearly all cases which come under the name of GENERAL DEBILITY there is a sensible relaxation of all the muscles, and, in females, a mechanical falling downwards of the internal organs, owing to the weakness of the muscles which constitute their natural support. The series of organs located in the trunk of the body mutually support and influence each other. Within the thorax or chest we have the heart and lungs filling its entire cavity. Then comes the diaphragm, a muscular membrane, separating the organs in the thorax and abdomen, and curving upward, forming the floor of the chest, the heart and lungs resting on it. The alternate contraction and expansion of the diaphragm creates a partial vacuum, and the air, by the force of its pressure, rushes in and fills the lungs. The deeper and fuller the action of the diaphragm the deeper and fuller is the breathing.

The lungs are wholly passive in both inspiration and expiration, as much so as a sponge in absorbing water and yielding it when pressed. In cases of general debility, the diaphragm does not come back to its proper convexity, and consequently the heart and lungs gravitate downwards. Underneath the diaphragm are the liver, the stomach, the spleen, and the pancreas; below these the duodenum and the intestinal canal in a sort of spiral column; then the organs in the pelvic cavity. As a displacement of these organs interferes with their healthy functional action, it becomes an important question, "What holds them in position and counteracts their gravitating force?" They evidently cannot rest on nothing. They are all held in their appropriate places by the walls of the abdomen, which consist almost entirely of muscular tissue. The muscular bands are so contrived that when in a healthy condition, and the body is in a perfectly erect attitude, they hold up in their proper place within the trunk all the internal viscera. When in a relaxed state, all the organs tend downwards towards the pelvis, and by their superincumbent weight press down the pelvic organs—the bladder, the rectum; and in females especially this condition is manifest in derangements of the uterus. Then, like a watch when the wheels are displaced, the physiological functions of the whole organism thus become deranged.

Mr. G. BARROW, Marlboro', Wilts, July 8th, 1883, says:—

"I can speak in the highest terms of the Magnetic treatment. I am pleased to say I have been quite cured by it."

A Lady, writing to a friend, May 7th, 1883, says:—

"Thanks very much for Mr. Garratt's appliance. I do not think I should have been alive now if I had not worn it. The doctors had experimented on me till I was all but gone. I had not much faith in the treatment for a time till I found myself gradually and steadily getting better."

Mr. Garratt will always be happy to confer with any scientific or medical gentleman, either personally or by letter, upon any phase of the subject, or any case for treatment, and will send a private list of 850 names as referees to any address.—B. COPSON GARRATT, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

HOMES OF HOPE,

4, 5, & 6, Regent Square, Gray's Inn Road, London, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of Mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to associate with a lower class.

The applications for admission are painfully urgent.

Funds are greatly Needed.

SUNSHINE.

THE magnificent harvest weather of the last two or three weeks calls for devout acknowledgment and grateful praise from every heart. The bright sunshine we have had day after day has, indeed, been filling our hearts with food and gladness. Corn, which in many districts was very backward, has been ripened; the ground, drenched by previous continuous rains, has been dried; weeds, which were rank in all the stubbles, have been killed; many thousands of acres, covered with smiling grain, have been reaped, and their produce safely garnered.

The cheering result will be seen in many ways for months to come. Trade and commerce will be quickened; bread will be plentiful and cheap; agriculturists will be roused from the depression and gloom to which so many of them have for several years past been a prey. The whole nation must benefit from the splendid harvest weeks granted us this year.

Surely the hearts of men will be touched by this renewed manifestation of Divine bounty and care for our wants. Everywhere should the voice of thanksgiving and the song of praise be heard, celebrating the mercy of that God who has reserved for us the appointed weeks of harvest. Sunshine accounts, instrumentally, for all the gladness with which at this season our hearts are filled. Had the clouds continued to hide its rays, and obscure its brightness, our land would have been as mournful as it is now rejoicing, and all nature would have been clad in gloom. But we have had mornings without clouds, and the clear shining which has followed the rain has brightened all the land, and caused both hill and dale to laugh and sing for joy.

Have we not in this a spiritual lesson as well as a call to thankfulness? There is a sun in the spiritual as well as in the natural world, and sunshine is as essential to the fruitfulness of the soul as to the fertility of the earth. True, it would not be well for the Christian to know nothing of storms and clouds, to pass along one unbroken path of prosperity and earthly comfort. It is well for us sometimes to pass through the shady scenes of life, and to know the discipline of the dark valley, as well as the brightness and exhilaration of the sunny mountain top. Yet none the less is spiritual sunshine our normal privilege, and absolutely essential to joy and prosperity in the service of Christ. The Sun of Righteousness shines for us, his bright beams pour down from on high their warm and life-giving influence for every one who fears and trusts the Lord. Clouds and darkness may sometimes gather round us, and be charged with errands even of mercy on our behalf. As Cowper says:—

"Ye fearful saints, fresh courage take,
The clouds ye so much dread
Are big with mercy, and shall break
In blessings on your head."

Still, sunshine is our great privilege, and our essential need. Clear visions of Christ, bright unfoldings of his love, his Word, his truth, his person, offices, and work, are requisite to make us fruitful in every good work, and to develop in us the fruits of righteousness which are to the glory and praise of God. In the spiritual world as well as in the natural, "Light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the sun." Moreover, we are "the children of light;" it may be most emphatically said now of all true believers, as it shall one day be said of Israel, "Thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee."

Yet there are many who walk in darkness, who know little of the brightness and joy of a full-orbed experience of Christ and his grace. They pass the most of their time in doubt and fear, in gloom and mistrust, or in conscious failure and dearth. Why is it so?

"Why should the children of a King Go mourning all their days?"

Is there not a cause? Sometimes it is the just discipline and chastisement of an offended Father's hand. Just as God threatened the Jews of old, saying if they rebelled against his law they should be visited with judgments upon their land, so that the harvest should fail, rain and sun alike failing to keep their season; so now an unholy walk, an inconsistent life, may cause Him to withdraw the light of his countenance, and to leave the soul chilled and bleak. When God has had a controversy with a nation or community, He has often visited them with plague or pestilence, or he has turned the fruitful land into barrenness, and so may it be spiritually with individual cases as to spiritual experience. Or it may be lack of faith, weakness of confidence in the Divine promises, slowness of heart to believe all that the Lord hath spoken. In any case we may learn from his mercy now in sending the sunshine of to-day how ready He is to renew former loving kindnesses, and again to show to mourning souls his tender mercy.

How, then, shall we bring back to our hearts the blest experience of sacred joy in the Lord, how dwell once more, if we have lost its manifestation, in the sunshine of his presence? There can be no doubt that the fervent and believing prayer by which in all parts the present harvest weather was preceded availed to bring the gracious answer we behold. And so in answer to prayer He will appear to the joy of those who humbly and penitently seek his face. Let all who long for liberty, brightness, and lively hope in God, turn unto Him with eager purpose of heart, let them renounce all and every possible cause of disagreement between his will and theirs, let them yield themselves unreservedly to his Holy Spirit's loving guidance and control, and then they shall find Him turning their mourning into dancing, putting off their sackcloth, and girding them with gladness. It shall be fulfilled in them what the prophet Malachi so sweetly declares, "Unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his wings, and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall." The great need of the Church is that all her members should bask in spiritual sunshine, should live in union and communion with Christ, the only source of joy and fruitfulness. O house of Israel, children of God, disciples of Jesus, "Come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord."

THE THREE LOOKS.

A BIBLE READING.

By Rev. Dr. GORDON, Boston, U.S.

THE eye is the index of the soul, and wherever it turns, there the spirit may be supposed to be for the time directed; hence God's constant command that we should look. The great facts of redemption are set before us. And they are completed facts; we can add nothing to them by our faith; we can take nothing from them by our unbelief. But they must be appropriated, in order that they may become facts of experience and inner life. One opening of the eyelid, and all the beautiful landscape which lay spread out before us instantly becomes an inward experience, imprinted first on the retina of the eye, and from that mysteriously thrown upon the camera of consciousness.

Now, the three great facts of Christ's redemption are, atonement, advocacy, and advent. And there are three looks corresponding to these.

(1) THE BACKWARD LOOK. "Look unto Me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth" (Is. xlv. 22). The eye is first carried back to the cross, and to Christ's finished work thereon accomplished. Then, our Redeemer having satisfied the law concerning sin, bids us accept, by our consenting faith, the satisfaction He has made. "Having made peace by the blood of the cross," we gaze with consenting faith upon his work, and, therefore, "being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ."

(2) THE UPWARD LOOK. "Looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith; who, for the joy that was set before Him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God" (Heb. xii. 2). There He is in the place of advocacy, who was before in the place of atonement. Better for the present that He should be there rather than here. The lawyer must be in court if he would conduct the suit of his client; and therefore Christ has gone "to appear in the presence of God for us."

(3) THE ONWARD LOOK. "Looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ" (Titus ii. 13). This is the true expectation of the believer who waits for full salvation. Our Lord compares Himself to a nobleman going into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return. It is for us to wait that return, that we may share that kingdom with Him. "For our conversation is in heaven; from whence, also, we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ,"—Watchword.

THE NATION'S GREATEST PERIL.

By LYMAN ABBOTT.

[The remarks concerning America in the following paper well deserve attention as indicating similar perils in our own land.]

"A prudent man foreseeth the evil and hideth himself; but the simple pass on and are punished." —Prov. xxii. 3.

RARELY has any nation been more magnificently equipped in its infancy for a magnificent national life than was the Jewish nation. Never did nation more terribly illustrate, by its tragic end, the truth that national life depends not on the external equipment, but on the character within; not upon what it has, but upon what it is.

God had led it up and out of the land of bondage. God had bestowed upon it in the wilderness its divine constitution and its system of laws. These included the germ of all which subsequent history has proved to be essential to the existence and prosperity of a free people: popular suffrage; the three great political departments, executive, legislative, judicial, carefully discriminated; two representative assemblies, a Senate of the elders, and a House of the commoners; a system of laws not dependent on the will of an irresponsible despot; a system of penalties, just, and, for that age, wonderfully humane; a religion with an organised church and priesthood, but a priesthood without political power, without teaching functions, without even a knowledge of the future state, and wholly dependent on the people for support, and therefore, without, those powers which in later ages, in the hands of other priesthoods, proved so disastrous to the liberties and the progress of the people; a system of education, rude, indeed, as it must have been in that rude age, but such that out of it grew, in later years, a public school in connection with every Jewish synagogue. Slavery was not abolished; but it was hedged about with such restrictions that by the time of Christ not a Jew owned a slave in all Palestine. Polygamy was not abolished: but it was put under such regulations that the Jewish nation became early in its history the only monogamous nation in the Orient. War was not forbidden; but cavalry, the necessary means of offensive warfare, was forbidden, a great standing army was disallowed, and agriculture was encouraged. No communistic experiment was inaugurated; but concentration of wealth in land, the only way in which wealth could in those days be concentrated, was prevented by the declaration that all the land belonged to God, that the owner was but a tenant, and that his lease expired every fifty years.

The people, thus royally equipped, had been led by a series of signal providences out of the land of bondage, through the wilderness, into the land which had been given centuries before to their progenitor. This land, rich in all the qualities most desired by a people whose industry was agriculture and whose wealth was in herds of sheep and cattle, was given into their hands. And now it doubtless seemed to them that their troubles were over, and that they had only to enjoy in peace and quietness the possession of the inheritance which had been bestowed upon them. In fact, their trouble now began. Their history from this time is a history of a constant succession of decadences and revivals, apostasies and reformations, despotisms and re-establishments of just government, until at last it ends in the final conquest of their land by Rome, the destruction of the Holy City, and the dispersion of the people among all the civilised nations of the earth.

"And they forsook the Lord, and served Baal and Ashtaroth. And the anger of the Lord was hot against Israel, and He delivered them into the hands of spoilers that spoiled them, and He sold them into the hands of their enemies round about, so that they could not any longer stand before their enemies. Whithersoever they went out the hand of the Lord was against them for evil, as the Lord had said, and as the Lord had sworn unto them: and they were greatly distressed."

I turn from 1400 B.C. to 1883 A.D. to trace the parallel in our own times, and discern

THE WARNING APPLICABLE TO OURSELVES.

God has equipped the American nation as certainly no nation before was ever equipped. Across the sea he developed, through centuries of struggle, free institutions and a free people. In England were fought for us the battles which have established the right of the nation to govern itself without intervention from foreign prince, pope, or potentate; the right of every man to worship God according to his own conscience without limit or leave from priest or preacher; the right of the people to rule themselves without authority and without hindrance from king or oligarchy; the right of free discussion in press, in pulpit, and on platform; and all these rights have been organised for us into institutions—in a free Church, a free representative Parliament, and a free press. Then when these were established, the veil which had hidden this continent from the ages was drawn aside, and the liberty which had been rooted on other soils was transplanted to our own—to a country which need fear no foreign foe, and therefore need not maintain in a standing army a dangerous protection; to a country rich in great forests, in fertile soils, in incalculable mineral wealth, in wonderful commercial waterways, and in the most magnificent coast-line of natural harbours which the world possesses. We are in our promised land; the victory has been won for us by others; the treasure has been given to us by another; and now begin the dangers from ourselves—dangers of wasteful prodigality of our treasures, of supine indifference to our hard-won liberties, of apostasy from our God and disobedience to his law.

We are denuding our land of its forests, and subjecting it to alternate drought and flood. We are denuding our soil of its richness, and have already, as in Virginia and other points in the South, great tracts of impoverished and useless soil—a wasted patrimony. We are allowing our best and greatest commercial harbour to be filled up with the city's offscouring, and are labouring to do for the harbour of New York what nature did in centuries past for the once capacious harbour of Ephesus.

We are allowing—nay, encouraging and promoting—a concentration of wealth in the hands of the few, and a consequent despotism of capital over labour, for which labour finds no relief except in an organised resistance which impairs communication, cuts the nerves of the body politic, and paralyses commerce and industry.

We are allowing the sanctity of the family not only to be openly and flagrantly repudiated in great territories of the West by organised lust in the form of polygamy, but also to be more secretly and dangerously undermined by subtle influences in every State of the Union—in cities without homes, in homes without children, and in marriages without permanence.

We are allowing in the South great bodies of voters to grow up without education, unable to read the ballots that they cast; and in all the Union still greaters bodies of citizens—male and female—to grow up with an education that does little or nothing to develop conscience, clarify the moral judgment, and strengthen moral principle; an education which teaches everything but that which is most important to both individual and the State: the knowledge of right and wrong.

We are allowing our Sabbaths to slip away from us; by abandoning our rest-day are doing what we can to convert labour into a ceaseless drudgery; and by abandoning our day of worship, to degrade man from the image of God to a merely higher animal.

We are suffering the liberty of the press to run into an unbridled and unpunished license, whose first effect is to make every reputation subject to the attack of any slanderer, and to leave even the noble dead unprotected from the aspersions of the vile among the living; whose final effect, if it be not checked, will be to destroy a liberty which we shall then have proved ourselves unable to protect from abuse.

We are suffering corruption to eat out the heart of free government while its form remains; a process the end of which, if it be not stayed, can only be to leave liberty in America like a noble tree whose vitals the borer has eaten out, and which stands still beautiful in trunk, and bough, and leaf, but ready to fall when the first rude blast strikes upon it.

I am no pessimist. I believe in the future of the race, of the Church, and of America. It would be easy to set alongside these dangerous indications others full of hope and promise. But hope is not to be sustained nor promise to be fulfilled by shutting our eyes to the truth of history, that every nation has suffered lapses from its integrity, and consequent disaster; that in every race and in every nation the story of a fall has been repeated, and that danger of lapse, apostasy, and even death is to be guarded against only by seeing the danger, not by ignoring it.

I have but opened this topic. To thoughtful readers I leave it: What are the dangers that threaten us in our promised land? And how shall we go about to overcome them?—New York Christian Union.

NEW YORK MEDICAL MISSION.

YOUR issue for August 4, 1881, contained an account of the Lord's guidance in the commencing of this work. Since then two words are specially applicable to our experience, viz., Ebenezer and Jehovah-jireh. During the first two years I had 5550 cases to treat, many of these giving good hope of spiritual good having been received. We have two dispensaries now open, and next month will open a third, at 42, Baxter-street, near the noted "Five Points," comparable to the Seven Dials in London. This part of the city is crowded by Italians and Chinese.

A few days since I met a native of Burmah, who was on the eve of returning home to labour, after having been in this country thirteen years struggling to obtain his degree of M.D., which had just been granted him. When I told him that one special feature of our Mission was to educate and aid such as he, he was quite overjoyed, and remarked, "Why, I might have been working among my people for the past eight years if such a society had been in existence to help me." It is strange that no such work has hitherto existed in the United States. We contemplate holding a conference of ministers, physicians, and others, next month in this city to take into consideration the establishing of a Training Institute similar to the one in Edinburgh. Let me ask the prayers of your readers that He will grant us all needed wisdom and guidance.—Yours in the Master's service,

Geo. D. Dowkontt, M.D.

"HOW THE POOR LIVE."

THE striking series of illustrated articles, under this heading, in The Pictorial World, is now completed. The proprietors of that journal deserve the warmest thanks of the community for having commissioned such competent and sympathetic observers and such skilful artists as Mr. G. R. Sims and Mr. F. Barnard to record in its pages, with pen and pencil, the results of a tour of discovery among our poorer citizens. It is difficult to say which has done his work the best. The story they present is anything but pleasant to contemplate, and everything but flattering to our boasted nineteenth century civilisation, and our pretension to be the monitor of other and less favoured peoples. Applying, in a national sense, the words of the Apostle: "If any provide not for his own, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel," it would really seem as though we had small claim indeed to the name of "Christian."

Probably there is nothing told in these thirteen chapters that is new to the majority of Christian workers among the masses; these do what they can, with very limited resources, to relieve the intense poverty and misery that meet them on every hand. The articles speak with loudest voice to the ears of our law-makers. It is fervently to be hoped that these gentlemen, as trustees of the national weal, will make all convenient speed to usher in that "era of domestic legislation," the advent of which Mr. Sims, and many other social reformers, long to see. When Parliament has done its best, many of the poor will, doubtless, live in defiance of law, both human and divine; a perfect code of laws, perfectly administered, will not solve the problem of the presence and power of sin in the human heart. But at any rate let us, in the memorable words of England's Premier, make it as easy as possible for people to do right, and as difficult as may be for them to do wrong. Under the existing conditions of life in our great cities, the converse is the case.

In his introductory chapter, Mr. Sims tells us it was with an aching heart he returned from this journey "into a dark continent that is within easy walking distance of the General Post Office." In words that savour somewhat of satire, he hopes that "the wild races who inhabit it will gain public sympathy as easily as those savage tribes for whose benefit the missionary societies never cease to appeal for funds." The first phase of the question that naturally suggested itself to these explorers was the giant evil of "overcrowding," that is responsible for much of the crime that stains the pages of our daily and weekly broadsheets. Coupled with this is the disgraceful and iniquitous neglect of landlords in refusing to do needful repairs. A single extract will be sufficient to reveal a state of matters of which we suppose few of our readers have any adequate conception. Finding themselves in a certain London slum, Mr. Sims and his companion gained entrance to a block of houses, which he explains is "a very respectable place" compared to many others:—

"To the particular door attacked there comes a poor woman, white and thin and sickly-looking. In her arms she carries a girl of eight or nine, with a diseased spine; behind her, clutching at her scanty dress, are two or three other children. What a room! Poor creature! if she had ten pairs of hands, instead of one pair always full, she could not keep this room clean. The walls are damp and crumbling, the ceiling is black and peeling off, showing the laths above; the floor is rotten and broken away in places, and the wind and rain sweep in through gaps that seem everywhere. The woman, her husband, and her six children, live, eat, and sleep in this one room, and for this they pay 3s. a week.

"As to complaining of the dilapidated, filthy condition of the room, they know better. If they don't like it they can go. There are dozens of families who will jump at the accommodation, and the landlord is well aware of the fact."

Some landlords, says Mr. Sims, do repair their tenants' rooms. As a vivid illustration, he mentions one room—"condition indescribable"—the weekly rent of which was four shillings. The repairs consisted of "one piece of a broken soap box, one yard and a half of paper, and one nail; and for these repairs the collector raised the rent of the room threepence a week! This chapter winds up with a pencil sketch of a landlord, "a portly gentleman, with a big gold chain across his capacious form, and an air of wealth and good living all over him." He owns a whole block of such property, and waxes rich on his rents. No wonder that the writer indignantly exclaims, as he lays down his pen for a week:—

"That these one-roomed outcasts who pay so much for so little, and almost fight to get it, should be left to be thus exploited, is a disgrace to the Legislature which is never tired of protecting the oppressed of all races, except those of that particular race who have the honour to be free-born Englishmen."

In the next chapter attention is powerfully drawn to the deteriorating effects of this over-crowding on those who by the rude hand of misfortune, or by metropolitan improvements (!!), are forced to seek shelter in such pestilential human rookeries:—

"The honest poor have been driven by the working of the Artizans' Dwellings Act to come and herd with thieves and wantons, and to bring up their children in the last Alsatias, where lawlessness and violence still reign supreme. . . . The worst effect of the present system of packing the poor is the moral destruction of the next generation. Whatever it costs us to remedy the disease, we shall gain in decreased crime and wickedness. It is better even that the ratepayers should bear a portion of the burden of new homes for the respectable poor, than that they should have to pay twice as much in the long run for prisons, lunatic asylums, and workhouses."

At a very early stage of their investigations, Messrs. Sims and Barnard appear to have formed a strong opinion on a subject that is deeply exercising the minds of many social reformers in the present day. Chapter iii. is illustrated by a cleverly and faithfully drawn sketch of a public-house doing "a roaring trade." Mr. Sims thus delivers himself on the burning drink topic. With this extract we must for the present leave these able though painful records; our readers, we judge, have ample material for a week's cogitation:—

"Drink is the curse of these communities; but how is it to be wondered at? The gin-palaces flourish in the slums, and fortunes are made out of men and women who seldom know where to-morrow's meal is coming from. Can you wonder that the gaudy gin-palaces, with their light and their glitter, are crowded? Drink is sustenance to these people; drink gives them the Dutch courage necessary to go on living; drink dulls their senses, and reduces them to the level of the brutes they must be to live in such styes. The gin-palace is Heaven to them compared to the Hell of their pestilent homes. A copper or two, often obtained by pawning the last rag that covers the shivering children on the bare floor at home, will buy enough vitriol-madness to send a woman home so besotted that the wretchedness, the anguish, the degradation, that await her there have lost their grip. To be drunk, with these people, means to be happy. Sober—God help them!—how could they be aught but wretched?

"There is not only temptation to drink wrought by the fearful surroundings of the poor; a positive craving for it is engendered by the foul and fetid atmosphere they continually breathe. I have often wondered that the advocates of Temperance, with the immense resources of wealth and organisation they command, have not given more attention to the overcrowding and the unsanitary condition of the dwellings of the poor, as one of the great causes of the abuse of stimulants.

"It is not only that crime and vice and disorder flourish luxuriantly in these colonies, through the dirt and discomfort bred of the intemperance of the inhabitants, but the effect upon the children is terrible. The offspring of drunken fathers and mothers inherit not only a tendency to vice, but they come into the world physically and mentally unfit to conquer in life's battle. The wretched, stunted, mis-shapen child-object one comes upon in these localities, is the most painful part of our explorers' experience. The county asylums are crowded with pauper idiots and lunatics, who owe their wretched condition to the sin of the parents, and the rates are heavily burthened with the maintenance of the idiot offspring of drunkenness. The drink dulls every sense of shame, takes the sharp edge from sorrow, and leaves the drinker for a while in a fool's paradise."

GIVING GOD OUR BEST.

THE vessels used in the temple service were of pure gold; none were of silver, for it was not anything accounted of in the days of Solomon; therefore it was not considered worthy to be mixed with the gold offered for the service of the King of kings. Whatever was for his service must be of the best quality. May we not learn a lesson from this? Does it not teach that we are to offer to the Lord nothing but gold—pure, true gold?

What, then, is the gold which we are to give to God? Can we all give it? Yes, it is the soul's offering to Him we call our King. It is the "soul's best" for God. How freely we give the best we can possibly afford to those we love! Shall we less freely offer ourselves and our best to Him who first bestows whatever we possess of talent, influence, or substance? Think you He will accept our silver if we withhold our gold? In our service for Him let our energy be the gold of our strength, not the dribblings of a spent power. We willingly give our best exertion to obtain pleasure or recreation; let us see that we expend it not alone in this, reserving only the silver for God's work.

Some of us may think we have not much to give compared with what many others have. This may also be true, but if that little is really our very best we may confidently offer it for God's acceptance. It is not the quantity He asks but the true pure metal, however small the quantity.

ZENANA & MEDICAL MISSION SCHOOL.

IT is now some three years since the Zenana and Medical Mission School was commenced. A large number of students have already passed through its portals, bearing with them the dual spirit—the missionary and the medical. We have already done, and are still spared to do, good work in the cause of the Master.

Some time since God enabled me to purchase the house, 9, Lupus-street, Pimlico, S.W., and I have devoted it to the purposes of a hospital for women and children. Since February of this year there have been over 1500 patients received, and the numbers promise a steady growing increase. The students of the Zenana Medical Mission School and Home have the privilege of being pupils at it. I now want to fit up the hospital for in-patients, and would be glad of the kind help of any Christian lady as hon. lady superintendent, whose knowledge of nursing would enable her to supervise the nursing and teach the zenana pupils to become skilled nurses.

BEREAVED AND BROKEN-HEARTED.

A STORY OF THE ISCHIA CATASTROPHE.

DEAR SIR,—I think the following extract from the deeply interesting letters of my sister, Madame T. Meuricoffre, written from Naples, will interest your readers. I send it, hoping that the hearts of Christians may be moved to cry to God for these poor sufferers in the Ischia calamity. The inhabitants of the island are an affectionate people, passionately attached to their children and to their homes. The sorrow of those bereaved seems beyond the reach of all human comfort; nothing but the knowledge of God and the sympathy of Jesus can heal, and in respect of these they are in general very dark. My sister, who has been labouring night and day for the sufferers, gives, among many others, the following picture of hopeless woe:—

"As I left the house to-day to find the mothers of some children sent to us, I saw, through the tall iron gate at the lodge, a wild figure, a lean, lithe, bronzed man, in a torn coarse linen shirt, and drawers to the knee. When he saw our flock of Ischia children in the court before the house, he slipped through the gate, and sprung up the short drive; he darted upon them like a famished tiger, took hold of one after another; and when he found not what he wanted, he reeled up against the parapet of the well in the centre, his lips drawn back, his white teeth clenched, and the veins starting on his lean brown hands as he pressed the nails into the palms. We offered him wine and water; he tried to swallow it, but it stuck fast with a gurgle in his throat, and he threw it on the ground.

"He was turning away with a look which haunted us for days after (his sunken brown eyes were wells of unspeakable woe, and wild with incipient madness), when I took his two clenched hands in mine, and said, 'Tell me what it is; I will not leave you till I have done all I can to help you.' He said, in a hollow voice: 'I lived on the mountain. I dug my dear wife and four sons out from the ruins with my own hands. I always hoped the next one might be alive. It took me twenty-four hours. All, all were dead! I dug another hole, and buried them again; but I found my little boy of six still alive, with a wound in his head; I brought him to Naples, to the Ospedale Pelegrini, and to-day I came back to see him, and he is not there, and his bed is not there, and they will not tell me where he is. I have been through every hospital. I heard there were children here, and I thought I saw him through the gate. Let me go! let me go!' I said, 'Yes, we will go together, and they shall tell us where he is.'

"I made him get up beside my good coachman, Vincenzo, with orders to the latter to soothe him, and not let him dart away. We drove to the Pelegrini. When we stopped at the gate, the man—Cristofero Tedesco was his name—leaped down, and went off across the court, and up the staircase, with the soft, fleet, panther-like run of those barefooted men. I went after him as fast as I could, and a gendarme after me, who evidently thought the man was mad. He went up and on, through salle after salle, till he came to the last, flew to the far end, and pointed, with a terrible gesture, to an empty corner, and cried out, 'I left him there, THERE! where is he? where is he?' Some of the young men nurses smiled, and said, 'There is the madman again;' and he looked as if he would spring on them like a tiger. I turned him round away from them, and kept my hands on his breast, whose heavings shook my arms, and said to them, 'Yes, mad with pain. Send me some of those gentlemen.' The Marquis —— came and took me to the Direction, i.e., three priests. I told them the story more calmly, as poor Tedesco gasped so. We looked through the books, but there was no Tedesco, and they could not remember.

"I said, 'This won't do; there is no mistaking the man's story. Send me the Sisters of Charity of that salle.' One of them came, looking bewildered with fatigue, but after holding her head awhile in her hands, she said, 'Yes, there were two children moved on Tuesday to the Ospedale Lina.' Then I called the Governor, the good old Duke della Rocca, and said the matter must be cleared up. In the books we found a note of two children severely wounded in the head, being bound up with snow, and carried by a certain doctor to the Lina, but in the crowd and confusion there had been a mistake in the name. We returned to the carriage, and drove all down Toledo, and to the farthest end of Chiaja. One cannot go in a carriage to the Lina, which is up the long steep slope of the Arco Morilli, and through a labyrinth of convent gardens. Tedesco flew on before me (though he had never been there before) like a hound on hot scent. It was scorching hot, and I was faint. When I arrived, I met him coming out, with some startled nuns after him. He had entered, and asked for two boys brought on Tuesday from the Pelegrini. They told him, 'One died yesterday; you can see the other.' He pounced upon the other. It was not his! He turned away without a word. His woeful eyes did not see me facing him, but I stopped him. The nun handed him a little bundle of the child's clothing; he turned away his head, and pushed it from him. I put some notes into his hand, which he did not notice; but when I stroked his face, and said soothingly, 'Where are you going, Cristofero?' he said, 'To Foris (Ischia), without house, without wife, without child.' With a sob as if his heart would burst, he stopped, and kissed my hands, one after the other, as a dying dog might lick the hands of his master; then he fled down the long hill on his fleet, bare, brown feet, and I saw him no more."

This is only one of many stories of broken hearts among those poor, ignorant, but loving people. I wish that all who read this one recital, and who love God and their fellow-men, may be moved to join in a constant prayer that the knowledge may quickly be brought to these people of the only Comforter,—of Him who alone "healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds."

JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER.

Neuchâtel, Aug. 26.

MODERN ROME.—A correspondent of The Christian World, who resides for half the year in the Eternal City, says: "What is modern Rome to-day, after long centuries of culture at the hands of 'the legitimate successors of the Apostles?' I fear no contradiction in saying that in its more respectable society its people are puerile, frivolous, non-progressive, and atheistic; while among the lower ranks, gross ignorance, dark superstition, ungoverned passion, and brutal cruelty prevail. The Papal Church will not lift a little finger in the cause of elevation and reform outside its own mystic circle of sacerdotal mumbo-jumboism. The sweetness and light of its influence on society at large are nil. One simple instance of this may be cited in the fact that there exists in Italy no national law prohibiting cruelty to animals; the result, certainly, of the apathy and indifference of the Church. So it comes to pass that in Rome and Naples the sinless servitors and companions of mankind are treated with savage and ruthless tyranny; and humanity, the very first lesson of Christianity, is altogether 'conspicuous by its absence.'"

MR. JOHN BRIGHT ON TEMPERANCE.

THE Birmingham community has again been favoured by its illustrious representative in Parliament, with one of those eloquent and thoughtful addresses which have established his claim to be regarded as the greatest popular orator of the day. This time his theme has been Temperance Legislation; the occasion was the opening of the new Cobden Coffee Palace which has just been erected by the Birmingham Coffee House Company. Mr. Bright's testimony in favour of total abstinence principles was very decided and weighty in its force. He said that he had personally practised them for ten years past, and amid his many and arduous duties, and in connection with a weak state of health, he had found them in no way prejudicial but otherwise. He believed they were contributive in every way to the well-being of the community, and were more intimately connected with the real advantage of the people than almost any other public question.

Mr. Bright also stated that Mr. Cobden had more than once told him that he found, when driven by much hard work in writing and speaking, he could perform his duties much better without the use of stimulants than with them. Such evidence ought to count for much in the estimation of those who hesitate to join the Temperance movement, on the ground that they cannot do without the moderate use of alcoholic drinks. The balance of medical testimony is exceedingly strong on this subject, and when to that is added the practical example, and unhesitating endorsement of not a few of our busiest and hardest-worked public men, as well as of workers in every sphere, the argument in favour of abstinence becomes unanswerable.

Notwithstanding the presence of Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Mr. Bright did not hesitate to express his continued disapproval of the principles of the Prohibitory Permissive Bill, but proceeded to suggest what he deems to be feasible legislative reforms on the subject. His proposition is to enact that municipal corporations should have the granting of licences, that they should be forbidden to increase their number, except where population is largely increased, and also forbidden to reduce them more than one-half. He would give these bodies power to increase the cost of licences, and place the revenue thus obtained in the hands of the Corporation for the relief of local taxation, or the compensation of those who are deprived of their licence.

Whatever may be thought by the advocates of local option and other more extreme forms of legislation than Mr. Bright approves, all must feel that there is much that is worth considering in his suggestions. If they should form the basis of any future attempt on the part of Government to meet the demands of the Temperance reformers they will certainly deserve the candid consideration he asked to be afforded them. It is, however, as the great statesman said, to the Christian churches of the country that we must look for powerful aid in this great work. They ought to be "a great instrument of power in this direction," and we may hope to see them growingly united in the endeavour to banish the evil of drunkenness from our land.

MR. T. P. DIPROSE.—This Evangelist writes us that his address is now Michaelchurch, Ross, Herefordshire. He says he has had a very delightful summer's work in the villages and hamlets of Herefordshire, where he has found many Christians who were converted at meetings held eight and ten years ago.

THE GREATEST MIRACLE OF ALL.

By Rev. G. S. BARRETT, Norwich.*

WE know how often a life of active and exhausting service for God in the world is unfriendly to devoutness of spirit; how quickly we may lose the spirit of prayer in the excitement and strain of spiritual work; how hard it is to be in the world and yet not of it; and how easily we excuse ourselves in remissness of prayer, or neglect of our own spiritual culture, by the plea of fatigue incurred in the work of God. But it was never so with Jesus Christ. Engaged, and ceaselessly engaged, in labouring for others. In "preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom," in going about doing good, He never lost the sacredness and nearness of his Father's presence. His feet trod the roughest ways of our earthly life, but his face was ever turned up to heaven and touched with the light of God. He shared with us every experience of human weakness and weariness, but never once did He allow the pressure of the most absorbing work to interfere with his communion with God. He was among us "as one that serveth," and yet, to use his own sublime words of Himself, He was ever "the Son of Man who is in heaven."

The life of temptation was with Him also a life of uninterrupted victory over temptation. "He was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin." It is in this light that the sinlessness of Jesus becomes so amazing. It has been asserted by a sceptical criticism that the miracles which the Lord Jesus is declared in the Gospels to have wrought are inconsistent with the laws of nature, and are therefore unbelievable by "the modern scientific intellect," but that if the Christian Church would be content to accept the lofty ethical teaching of Jesus of Nazareth, minus the miracles, no great difficulty in the way of faith would remain to the reason. No mistake could be greater. The miracles wrought by Christ are not the only, or the most startling miracles of the Gospel. Christ Himself is his own greatest miracle. His absolute sinlessness, his freedom from the least taint of human infirmity and folly, his pure and perfect life, are a far more wonderful exception to the so-called "laws of nature" than the healing of the sick, or the stilling of the storm, or the raising of the dead; for not only was Jesus "without sin" in the outward acts of his life, but He was free from that consciousness of a sinful nature, of an inherited bias towards evil, which makes its appearance with the first dawn of consciousness in every other human life. And it is only when we remember that this sense of sinfulness is as truly "a law of nature" as any of the great laws of the physical universe, that, to use the words of the late Professor Mozley—perhaps the profoundest thinker of the English Church since the time of Bishop Butler—"The sinlessness of Christ appears in its true light as a supernatural fact, an inward visible miracle, surpassing in wonder any of the visible miracles which He wrought."

It is idle to imagine that it is possible to get rid of the supernatural in the Gospels, by blotting out the miracles wrought by Jesus. The miracle of Jesus remains: the miracle of a human life in all other respects like our own, save in this, that it was "without sin;" the miracle of a will ceaselessly assaulted by every temptation "common to man," but as ceaselessly victorious over each successive assault; the miracle of a character, from the first hour of life to the last unconscious of evil; the miracle of a goodness touching, like the sunlight, the darkest and most festering pollutions of this world, and remaining as untainted as the sunlight by contact with impurity. So long as this supreme manifestation of the supernatural meets us on every page of the Gospel history, it is worse than a waste of time to be discussing the possibility of the miraculous.

FROM DARKNESS TO LIGHT.

A PERSONAL EXPERIENCE.

A FEW years ago my poor soul was rescued from dead orthodoxy and found rest and peace in a living personal Saviour. The change has been so great, so grand, and so many sided, that it seemed to require the endless variety of illustration given in Scripture to convey anything like a true conception of it. In speaking of it my thoughts naturally turn to the first three verses of the fortieth Psalm:—

"I waited patiently for the Lord; and He inclined unto me, and heard my cry. He brought me up also out of an horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock, and established my goings. And He hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God: many shall see it, and fear, and shall trust in the Lord."

Waiting upon God! Whoever did that without making most wonderful discoveries? The "horrible pit!" If there be one pit more horrible than another, it is surely "having a name to live while we are dead:" going straight to perdition in the midst of the wealth of the Gospel! Such was my terrible state for many years. Brought up in a Christian family, I voluntarily united with the Church at seventeen years of age under a sense of duty, was regular in attendance on the means of grace, engaged in the activities of Sabbath-school and Mission work, gave liberally of my means for the spread of the Gospel, and when old enough to have a family of my own, had family worship morning and evening. So long as I compared myself with other people I was satisfied, but when I went to God's Word, it spoke of a peace and love and joy which I did not possess. I was determined to find the secret some day, but had not time to attend to it then

Years passed: years of trial and sorrow, which seemed in part to arouse me from my sleep of death; but like one half awake I soon fell asleep again. Oh, when I think of these wasted years of precious time, God's wonderful patience overwhelms me! During the second week of prayer in January, 1880, I resolved, cost what it might, to find the true Christian life, and went to God as a little child, asking for light and guidance in this, to me, the most important step of my life. As I drew near to God, I was confronted with Luke xiv. 26, 27:—

"If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple. And whosoever doth not bear his own cross, and come after Me, cannot be my disciple."

No compromise here. Christ must be everything or nothing. The will must be surrendered. Sin must be confessed and forsaken. This step was very humiliating, but once taken, wondrous light came upon the word of God. The promises invited me to step out upon them, and, cautiously and timidly, I did so, testing one after another, and soon had the amazing blessed consciousness that my feet were, at last, planted on the solid Rock. It is simply impossible to convey in words the sublimity of that hour. Verses committed to memory in my boyhood passed before me like Plenipotentiaries from the Court of Heaven, clothed with the authority of the King of kings, pointing me to the Christless eternity from which I had been redeemed by the blood of the Son of God, and revealing the wonders of my new relationship to God and my fellow-men. As I searched for these verses in the Word of God, I found others, and still others; and as I spread them out before the Lord in prayer, or rather as He spread the mout before me, I could only exclaim in utter astonishment, "O Lord, is there no end to all this? and is it possible that my poor soul has been in the midst of this imperishable wealth these long years and did not know it?" Now I could say with the psalmist, "I rejoice at thy Word as one that findeth GREAT SPOIL." "How precious also are thy thoughts unto me, O God; how great is the sum of them."

My sense of responsibility became very great. I had the feeling of being surrounded with omnipotent power. True, I had but one talent, but it was not a question of talent, but of faith in God. And as I looked at the promises, as real as if Christ stood beside me uttering the very words, and at the command of Christ, just as real, to give this blessed Gospel to every creature, the question was, "What can I, an obscure, unlearned individual, do to fire the centres of Christendom, to give the Gospel to the whole world?" Strange as it may seem, it was to me the most practicable thing imaginable. I had experiences in prayer and communion with God in connection with this which I have never been able to understand, and, perhaps, never shall, until "the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ."

The tempter was very busy. He tried to persuade me that it was all excitement, and would pass away in a few days. From this fear I found rest in John xiv. 16—18, and kindred promises. I then made a solemn promise to God that so long as He would continue to give me his Holy Spirit to guide, teach, sanctify, and keep my poor soul, I would henceforth be his, to be used as seemed best to Him; and ever since, notwithstanding great crushing sorrows, the Lord is in them all, blessing me, and making me a channel of blessing to my fellow-men."

And now comes the "New Song," and "many shall hear it." God helping me, this shall be my joyful task the rest of my days. Some of our Church members, surrounded by Christian agencies and influences, may be living as I lived, having the Gospel in hand, yet strangers to its light and joy. Oh, how can I reach these dear souls? How can they be persuaded to wait upon God, and find out where they stand? Then will sin cease to be the trifling thing it seems to many, and appear in all its hideous blackness. Then will Christ become the Centre of all that is grand, glorious, beautiful, and heart-captivating. The worst with Christ is a thousand times more than the world at its very best. "The reproach of Christ is greater riches than the treasures in Egypt." Ever since my own rescue, the voice of the Lord is ringing in my ears and firing my heart: "Go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee, and hath had compassion on thee;" and as I can see but few of them face to face, I give these words of humble, grateful testimony, with the earnest prayer that "many shall see it and fear, and shall trust in the Lord."

"Oh, make but trial of his love,
Experience will decide
How blest are they, and only they,
Who in his truth confide."

SERVING THE LORD.

NOTES OF A SERMON TO YOUNG MEN.

By Rev. C. H. SPURGEON,

At Exeter Hall, Sunday evening, Sept. 2.

"O Lord, truly I am Thy servant; I am Thy servant and the son of Thine handmaid; Thou hast loosed my bonds."—Psalm cxvi. 16.

I BEGIN by commending the service of God to you from my own personal experience. A young man entering on his life work will say to someone else: "You have been at such and such a business; how do find it?" One will say it is a decaying trade; another will say it is very trying work; a third, perhaps, will say it is all right, and he will recommend it. I come to-night on purpose, first of all, to give my own experience; and I wish to say, concerning the service of God, that I have never once regretted I entered it. Surely at some time or other during the thirty-four years since I put on Christ's livery, I should have found it out if there had been anything wrong with it. I must somehow have discovered it if I were under a delusion. It has never been so; I have regretted many things I have done, but never that I gave my heart to Christ and became his servant. I have never had the least suspicion of the goodness of my Master or the excellence of his service. There have often been siren voices calling me to return; but never since I enlisted as the servant of the Lord have I said to myself, "I am sorry I am a Christian."

Another thing will show that in my judgment the service of the Lord is a good one. If a man finds that his business does not pay, he will take care not to bring up his boys to it. The greatest desire of my heart was that my sons should become the servants of God; not that they might be famous or rich, but that they might give their young hearts to Jesus. It was one of the happiest days of my life when I baptized them upon public profession of their faith; now, while I am preaching here, one of them is preaching in Australia and the other at Greenwich. If God's service had proved a bad one in my experience, I would not have advised them to take to it.

I would add this other word of personal testimony. So blessed is this service that I would like to die in it. When I am unable to preach from physical pains, I have taken up my pen to write; when my hand has been unable to hold the pen, I have wanted to talk about my Master to somebody or other. When David Brainerd was very old, and could not preach to the Indians, he sat up in bed teaching a little Indian boy his letters, so that he might read the Bible. God's service is a delight, and it is a great joy to have anything to do with such a Master.

Look at the subject now in the following lights: First, to serve God is the most reasonable thing in the world. God has made you; a most wonderful piece of mechanism is the human body, and a wondrous thing the soul. Yet Jehovah's lament too often is: "The ox knoweth its owner, and the ass its master's crib, but my people doth not know, Israel doth not consider." What! have you lived to the age of twenty-one, perhaps thirty or forty, and never bent the knee in reverence to Him who has all the time kept the breath in you, without which you would long ago have been a loathesome carcase in the grave? In addition to that, it may be, you have often insulted Him, spoken against Him, profaned his Sabbath, neglected his Book, turned your back upon the Son of his love. Is it not high time that you should render what is a most reasonable service to Him who has made, and redeemed, and preserved you in being?

Again, this is the most honourable service in which you can engage. Seraphim and Cherubim count it a glory to serve Him; would you not like to get into such company as that? An earthly emperor is but a scullion in the kitchen, if he be disobeying God, compared to the one who is a servant of the Lord. Knights of the Garter have no glory in comparison to the man whom God will call his servant in the day of the appearing of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. You are doing the highest style of service and in the grandest company if you are servants of the Lord.

Once more, this service is full of beneficence. If I were in business I would like to get into one that did no hurt to anybody. I would hardly like to deal in deadly weapons. I am sure I would sooner starve than earn my bread by selling the accursed drink or anything else that would help to degrade my fellow-men and make them like brute beasts. When a man becomes the servant of God he is doing good all along; there is no part of his service that can do any harm to anyone. What does God ask of us in his service? What, but that we love Him with all our heart and our neighbour as ourselves.

Another thought is, that this service is a most remunerative one. "Not always to-day," someone may say; yet I venture to say, Yes, always to-day. How? A quiet conscience is better than gold. Have not some of us lived long enough to know that the most part of the things of this world are very much like the froth upon the top of the cup? The chief joy of life after all is, to be right towards yourself, your neighbour, and your God. What is anything you may suffer for the cause of God when compared with the peace of mind his service brings? A martyr, who was about to be burnt to death in Switzerland, said to the magistrate who was superintending his execution, "Will you please to lay your hand upon my heart, and if it beats any faster than at ordinary times do not believe in my religion." The magistrate, with a palpitating heart himself, laid his hand upon the martyr's bosom, and found that he was just as calm as if he were going to bed instead of in the fire. All that we can ever get in this world is but paltry at the best. Young man, a very short time will see your hair powdered with grey; soon this whole company will be gathered into the grave. That only is worth having that we can have for ever. The reward of being God's servant is hereafter as well as here. If you are His servant, and meet with any losses here, you will count these light afflictions, that are but for a moment, as nothing to be compared with the glory that shall one day be revealed.

Someone says: "I do not want to be a servant." But you must be a servant of somebody. "Well," you say, "I will serve myself." If you do you will be serving a fool. Listen to this sentence: "The man who is the servant of himself is the slave of a slave." I cannot imagine a more degraded position for anyone to be in than that; but that is what he is who is his own master. Look at this city, how full it is of freemen (?). There is the freethinker; who is so much in bondage as he? Who so credulous as the man of unbelief? He swallows difficulties in tons where we swallow them but in ounces. Then look at the free livers; who hath woe and redness of the eyes like the man who is a slave to strong drink? Who hath rottenness in his bones but the man who is a slave of his own passions? Was there any slave that ever tugged at a Spanish galley, or in that negro life of oldtimes, now happily gone by, half so much a slave as the man who will be led this night by his lusts as a bullock to the slaughter? If I had to be a slave, I would be a slave to a Turk or some other strange being, sooner than serve myself; that were to court my eternal destruction.

Who among you will enter the service of God? There is room enough in it. Other places are crowded; you may go from shop to shop, wearing your shoes off your feet in trying to get something to do. But there is room here. God is willing to receive you; and if you enter his service, it will help you in everything you have to do in this life. There is nothing you have to do but you will do better by becoming a servant of the Lord. If you have resolved on this service, let me utter a word of caution. Notice David said: "O Lord, truly I am thy servant." God is not mocked. It is the curse of our churches that we have so many nominal servants—so many who put on Christ's livery, but yet will not do a hand's turn of service. If you mean to serve God, man, do it. Some professing Christians serve their business much more actively than their God. Surely God deserves to be served with thoroughness. Is He to have the cheese-parings of a man's life as if that were all that He was worth, while the business of this world has the very centre of his life and the best of his being? God does not want such service, nor do I invite you to render it to-night. Count the cost. You cannot serve God and mammon—Christ and Belial. He is not God's who is not God's only. You must cease from your sins; though it be a right hand or a right eye, you must cut it off or pluck it out. If you will not follow Christ fully, you cannot be his disciple.

Now a word of counsel as to the matter of distinct confession. Every young man who is a Christian ought to say so. There should not be one among us who follows the Lord Jesus Christ in a mean, sneaking kind of way. It has too much become the custom for men to become Christians, but never to say anything about it. You may not be burned now for confessing Christ, but you will have to run the gauntlet, perhaps. Run it. If the Lord was never ashamed of us, why are we to be ashamed of Him? Every man in the presence of the Cross-bearing Christ should feel that to take up his Cross and follow Him is the simplest, most natural thing that can be, and should resolve that, God helping him, he will never be ashamed of it.

It is the easiest way after all. Many have resolved that they would serve God, but they would keep it very quiet. If you are genuine it is sure to come out in some way. Down at Mitcham, in the lavender time, you may shut all the doors, but the perfume will get into the house somehow. So it must be with the Christian, and it is much better to begin as you mean to go on. Do not furl your real colours, and try to sail under false colours for a time. Come straight out; live a consistent life, and the other fellows will soon know where you are. If you are sincere, they will not let you alone, and, generally speaking, it will be so much the worse for them. By your holy life you will by-and-by make them feel that it is hard for them to kick against the pricks. Anyhow, come right out. Do not be like rats, who come out from behind the wainscoting at night to eat some crumbs, but very soon go back again.

After some further exhortations in this ein, Mr. Spurgeon closed his earnest and mpressive discourse by congratulating those ho had attained the freedom which comes om truly engaging in the service of God. Thou hast loosed my bonds," says the salmist in the text. The preacher referred riefly to the grandeur of being set free om the bonds of sin, from the fear of man, om the unrighteous maxims of the world, nd from the fear of death. He quoted nstances of those known to himself who egan life when he did, and who are now in he jail, the workhouse, or in a dishonoured rave.

The downward path commenced with eglect of God's house; then they tampered ith their accounts or lapsed into vicious abits, and step by step they descended the cale. Those things can never come upon he true servants of God, who manfully and oldly declare themselves on his side.

At the close of the sermon a largely ttended prayer-meeting was held in the ower Hall, when various friends were resent to converse with the anxious.

"THY SPEECH BEWRAYETH THEE."

TRAVELLING from place to place we encounter people of various nationalities, nd are generally enabled to recognise them y their talk. Even when foreigners have earned English, still there is something in heir accentuation which betrays their origin. Frenchmen, Germans, and Italians, are asily recognised. Coming nearer home we know a Scotchman by his guttural articula- ion, an Irishman by his brogue, and an American by his nasal speech.

But, alas! we do not as easily recognise he Christian by his talk. The language of Canaan is seldom heard in the busy throng. The worldling's gossip is too often the talk of the Christian. "The striking of the clapper betrays the metal of the bell." Even ministers are not always distinguishable from the world by their manner of life, while their wives are sometimes bedecked with finery, and chatter glibly on the frivolities of the day.

Brethren, these things ought not so to be. We have topics of meditation and conversa- tion not to be ashamed of—such as God's Wondrous Love, the Sayings and Doings of Jesus, the Motions of the Spirit, the Future Glory. Let heavenly themes form part of our conversation, and we shall not hear the scoff of the unsaved. We shall permeate daily life with our testimony, and wherever we go the children of God shall be distin- guished, so that it shall be said, "Thou art a Christian, for thy speech bewrayeth thee."

Grindelwald. CHEYNE BRADY.

ALL NIGHT IN THE STREETS.—A midnight tea and meeting for our young fallen sisters was held by Mr. James Pye, in the St. Jude's Schoolroom, Turk's-row, Chelsea, on Tuesday evening, August 28. Nearly eighty young women were gathered in at the close of the meeting, which was a very affecting one; nearly twenty expressed themselves desirous of leading a new life, but owing to the want of funds all the cases could not be dealt with. One of the young women, who had helped her parents in a private boarding school, which they formerly kept, was found by several of the workers in one of the parks appa- rently dead, and it was with considerable effort that she was brought to the meeting, where she said that she had tasted no solid food for four days. Another young woman had tramped all the way from Windsor in search of employment, and was rescued when in great danger of being led astray. These two cases are only examples of many more which might be named. Help for this work will be thankfully received by Mr. James Pye, 2, Kempsford-gardens, South Kensington, S.W.

GOD COUNTS.

A BROTHER and sister were playing in the dining-room, when their mother set a basket of cakes on the tea-table and went out.

"How nice they look!" said the boy, reaching to take one.

His sister earnestly objected, and even drew back his hand, repeating that it was against their mother's direction.

"She did not count them," said he.

"But perhaps God did," answered the sister.

"You are right," he replied; "God does count, for the Bible says that 'the very hairs of your head are all numbered.'"

STORY OF A LITTLE TURKISH BOY.

From the region of Sivas in Western Tur- key comes a story of a little boy who had in some way become acquainted with Gospel truth. He was dying, and his friends called in a very holy dervish to pray for him. The child said to the dervish, "But you did not pray, you did not use the name of Jesus." The next day the dervish came to pray again, but the boy objected, saying that he wanted a prayer in Jesus' name. "But if you trust to that name," said the dervish, "you will be lost." "I had rather be lost trusting in Jesus," replied the little boy, "than be saved without Him."

STORY OF A FAITHFUL SHEPHERD BOY.

Gerhardt, a German shepherd boy, was one day watching his flock, which was feed- ing in a valley on the borders of a forest, when a hunter came out of the woods and asked, "How far is it to the nearest village?" "Six miles, sir," answered the boy; "but the road is only a sheep-track, and very easily missed." The hunter looked at the crooked track and said, "My lad, I am very hungry and thirsty; I have lost my companions, and missed my way. Leave your sheep and show me the road; I will pay you well."

"I cannot leave my sheep, sir," rejoined Gerhardt, "they will stray into the woods, and may be eaten by wolves or stolen by robbers." "Well, what of that?" queried the hunter. "They are not your sheep. The loss of one or two would not be much to your master, and I'll give you more than you have earned in a whole year." "I can- not go, sir," replied Gerhardt, very firmly. "My master pays me for my time, and he trusts me with his sheep. If I were to sell my time, which does not belong to me, and the sheep should get lost, it would be the same as if I had stolen them."

"Well," said the hunter, "you will trust your sheep with me while you go to the vil- lage and get me some food, drink, and a guide? I will take care of them for you."

The boy shook his head. "The sheep," said he, "do not know your voice, and ——" He stopped speaking.

"And what? Can't you trust me? Do I look like a dishonest man?" asked the hunter, angrily.

"Sir," said the boy, "you tried to make me false to my trust, and tried to make me break my word to my master. How do I know that you would keep your word?"

The hunter laughed, for he felt that the lad had fairly cornered him. He said, "I see, my lad, that you are a good, faithful boy. I will not forget you. Show me the road, and I will try to make it out myself."

Gerhardt then offered the contents of his scrip to the hungry man, who, coarse as it was, ate it gladly. Presently his attendants came up, and then Gerhardt, to his surprise, found that the hunter was the Grand Duke, who owned all the country around. The Duke was so pleased with the boy's honesty that he sent for him shortly after that, and had him educated. In after years Gerhardt became a very great and powerful man; but remained honest and true to his dying day.

A CALL TO DECISION.

Oh, happy hearted, who rejoice
In pride of youthful bloom,
Shun not religion as a voice
That speaks of fear and gloom.

For each pure pleasure you will gain
A yet more ardent zest,
And sunny gladness still shall reign
Undimm'd within your breast.

Then, when in dark adversity,
Your head droops—as it must—
Your refuge and support shall be
The God in whom you trust.

Though few as yet the steps you've trod,
Your life experience small,
Each, like young Samuel, has from God
Received a loving call.

Turn, then, to Him without delay,—
"My Father, here am I:
Myself I consecrate this day
As thine to live and die."

Oh, dally not with follies light,
Trust not futurity—
The word may come this very night,
"Thy soul's required of thee."

AUSTRALIAN ABORIGINES.

HAVING just passed our ninth year of resi- dence among this strange people, we can only wonder at the abounding grace which has led us and carried us over so many great trials and difficulties. When our eyes fall upon up- wards of one hundred of these poor despised people, who have come to us for help and sym- pathy, we cannot but yearn over their souls; and although they have been passed by for nearly a century as utterly unworthy of our attention and solicitude as a Christian people, thank God my dear wife and I have discovered there is much in them that merits our tenderest pity and love.

Different from the majority of Mission efforts in other parts, we have to gather in the young and aged from the scattered tribes, and provide them with food, clothing, and shelter.

For years we have gone on, and been supplied from week to week, by God's bountiful hand, through the contributions of Christian people in the Colonies and Great Britain. Just lately, however, the Lord has disposed the Government of New South Wales to give us some help in providing food. Our necessities are many, but we rest upon the promise, "My God shall supply all your need, out of his riches in glory, by Christ Jesus." Not a few of these dear people, who were sunk very low in vice and misery, are soundly converted, and living consistent Christian lives.

We are very much concerned for the large number (between 8000 and 9000) who wander as outcasts over the land, as sheep without a shep- herd. Surely the Christian people of this land should feel their responsibility, and do something to raise them from the depth of degradation to which they have been dragged. I am happy to say the children who attend our schools are making excellent progress in learning. We beg an interest in the prayers of Christian England for this Mission, that multitudes of the blacks of Australia may be among the redeemed in "that day." DANIEL MATTHEWS.

P.S.—I cannot tell you how much pleased we are to receive regularly from a lady in the neighbourhood of London copies of THE CHRIS- TIAN. They cheer us much in our Bush life.

Notes and Comments.

OUR readers will be glad to hear that Dr. Somerville is slowly recovering from the severe illness which he contracted in South Africa. He is still residing at Garelochhead.

A pleasing item of Christian intelligence from France is that two young men are about to leave that country for the coast of Senegal: one of them, a grandson of the saintly and sainted Adolphe Monod, goes as a medical missionary.

They were noble words spoken a few days since by M. Jules Ferry when distributing the prizes to the successful pupils of the Lycées of Paris and Versailles at Sorbonne. He said:—

"Higher, always higher, is for the individual as well as for peoples the only means to avoid a fall on that pacific battle-field where all must combat. He who stops is soon left behind."

His object was to incite those who were leaving college to enter the world, to aim at continuous advancement in mental culture, rather than to rest satisfied with their attainments.

It would certainly tend to make the young of both sexes much more useful to society, and far less liable to become the prey of the temptations which surround them, if they acted upon the advice given by the French Minister of Instruction. Life is far too valuable to be all spent either in business pursuits or in rounds of pleasure. The mind needs cultivation in order to making the best of the world while passing through it. Knowledge furnishes a rich source of enjoyment, and fits its possessors for extensive usefulness, although it is too often overlooked when it might best be obtained.

But there are other senses than the one that M. Jules Ferry had in view in which his words are striking and suggestive. They are as true in the spiritual as in the mental sphere. The motto of true and successful spiritual life is "Higher, always higher," and action upon this principle is essential if the disciple of Christ would "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." There is too much contentment with present attainments on the part of many who are learners in the school of Christ. It is good to hold fast the first principles, the rudiments of the doctrine of Christ, but we shall soon be left behind in the Christian race if we are content to stop short at them. We are failing in duty and privilege both, if we lack holy ambition and aspiration after those higher attainments which are held out to us.

Difficulties have already sprung up in reference to the work of Missions to the "refugees" under the protection of the London Jewish Society's agents in Jerusalem. A dispute about the burial of a refugee child led to a riot, which resulted in several refugees being imprisoned by the Turks. One Jew was killed by a stone thrown by an unknown hand, and the feeling of bitterness against the foreign Jews is increased, so that the Mission work is likely to be hindered through it all. It is strange how the old spirit of rigid exclusiveness and intolerant bigotry of sect continues through all the ages to linger among the Israelitish race. All the more do they need Christian forbearance and earnest endeavour to win them over to the faith of Christ.

We understand that a scheme which has been under consideration in Glasgow for reaching the non-church-going class has now been settled; during the coming winter a united effort will be made by all the Evangelical denominations to gather in the outsiders. We trust this praiseworthy action on the part of the Glasgow Christians will be imitated in all our thickly-peopled communities.

The report of Rev. Chauncy Maples, of the Central Africa Universities Mission, concerning the slave trade in East Africa, is one which must stir feelings of deepest concern and commiseration in the hearts of all true philanthropists. It appears that the traffic in slaves is very great, in spite of its being an illicit and forbidden practice. The india-rubber trade thrives among the Makonde people to a large extent, and by its means the slave trade is maintained and extended. The indiarubber is exchanged at the coast towns for cloths, brass, wire, and other goods coveted by the Yaos and up-country people. These give ivory, tobacco, and slaves in return, the slaves having been captured and brought from Nyassaland.

It seems to be the Kilwa Coast people who do most to uphold this accursed and inhuman system. They purchase them for use on their "Shambas," from the Magwangwara, who sweep the country far and wide to capture their poor and hapless victims, for whom they find ready sale among the Kilwa buyers, who await eagerly the arrival of caravans from the interior laden with these human chattels. It is of course very difficult to deal with these wild and lawless tribes at present in reference to enforcing authority in the matter, but it forms a powerful argument to induce all possible aid to be given to every agency employed to bring the power of the Gospel and of civilisation to bear upon "the dark Continent."

Another of those disasters which cannot be either foreseen or prevented has occurred in Java, where volcanic eruptions have caused ruin and loss of life to many thousands. The island is situated in the centre of one of the greatest volcanic districts in the world, no fewer than forty-five vents being known to exist in the neighbourhood. Such an eruption as that which has just taken place at Krakatoa, in the Sunda Strait, may therefore prove to be only the beginning of a series of similar shocks throughout the region. Krakatoa has entirely disappeared, and the whole coast-line been transformed. The terrors of the scene surpass description. The city of Batavia was for several hours in darkness, owing to the thick rain of ashes and dust which fell from the burning mountain; so also was Serang and other towns and villages in the district.

Batavia was simultaneously visited by a tidal wave that swamped the lower parts of the city. The seaport of Anjer, together with the towns of Tzeringen, Telokbetong, and the lighthouses of the Straits, are completely destroyed. The Chinese camp at Merak was also swept away, and much havoc and distress caused to a large tract of country by the bursting of river banks inundating the land. It is estimated that by this convulsion of nature seventy thousand persons have lost their lives. Such incidents are no novelty in this part of the Malay Archipelago, having been of frequent occurrence from time immemorial, but none the less do they invest our times with serious and portentous interest.

Last week we commented on a case of maternal faithlessness which had recently occurred. The following touching story, illustrative of the strength of a mother's love, related in the daily Press, will serve as a counter picture:—

"A touching story comes from Belgium. A few days ago the wife of a gateman on the line between Sottegem and Alost was attending to her husband's duty when her little boy strayed in front of a fast train. Without a moment's hesitation the mother sprang across the rails, and seizing her child, tossed it upon the bank the very second before she was caught by the locomotive and killed. The child escaped with a few bruises."

Of all the natural forces in the world a mother's love is perhaps the strongest; hence the vast extent of a mother's influence. The Church of Christ owes to the strength of sanctified maternal affection most of its noblest workers. The French Emperor, when asked what was the greatest need of France, replied, "Mothers." So to-day let the mothers of England be truly and heartily on the Lord's side, and their loving example, influence, and prayers, will do more to bring the rising generation to Christ than all beside.

Our Premier has found time, amid his multifarious duties, to translate into Italian, for publication in the Nineteenth Century for the current month, Cowper's well-known hymn commencing—

"Hark, my soul! it is the Lord,
'Tis thy Saviour, hear his word;
Jesus speaks, and speaks to thee,
'Say, poor sinner, lov'st thou Me?'"

It is a hymn eminently calculated for usefulness in any language, and Mr. Gladstone's version of it cannot fail to be of good service in connection with Italian Missions, so that, whether purposely or not, he has furnished the good cause with a new weapon of much value in the evangelistic warfare. It is by no means a common feature of statesmanship to find Cabinet Ministers engaged in such work. It betokens something more than mere literary skill and industry to find a Prime Minister translating an Olney hymn.

The anti-Jewish riots in Hungary continue to increase with such ferocity and to such an extent that they have assumed alarming proportions. In many localities the Jewish inhabitants have had to seek refuge in flight, but safety can scarcely be found anywhere; the hatred felt for the despised sons of Abraham finds vent in merciless outrages upon their persons and property in all directions. The attacks made upon them appear to be greatly accelerated and sustained by robbers and brigands from the woods of Bakony and the district of Zala Egerssek, plunder being evidently one of the chief objects aimed at. The darker the clouds which gather round the fortunes of the chosen race, the nearer in all probability is their final deliverance. "There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and He shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob."

Croatia is in a state of upheaval. A national insurrection is feared by the authorities, little being required to drive the people into open revolt. Hungarian rule seems to be detested, and a spirit of firm determination to throw it off, if possible, to be generally manifest. Oppression and the exorbitant demands of the tax-gatherers are said to account for this. At any rate, the Croatians furnish another example of the spreading spirit of unrest which is seen on all sides.

The death of the Comte de Chambord, which occurred last week, closes the history and line of that ancient dynasty the Bourbons. He seems to have looked upon death as a relief rather than otherwise, for he is reported to have said "It is fortunate that I am going to die. My friends torment me to do something, and where are the elements for action of any kind?" He was far too retiring and quiet a spirit to lead any revolutionary movement, and always maintained that it was not for him to go to France, but for France to come to him, if his crown and kingdom were ever to be regained. He was deservedly respected and esteemed among his own circle of friends and retainers, as also in the district where he lived.

The history of the Bourbon family furnishes an apt illustration of the vanity of human greatness, and of the insecurity by which all earthly attainments and possessions are attended. It is at once touching and instructive to reflect upon the extinction of an earthly dynasty, and that amid all the accompaniments of exile and exclusion from royal prerogatives. Only the kingdom of our Saviour King can stand for ever, and that is ours if we are his. The race of which Christ is the federal Head can never become extinct, or its privileges pass away.

Would that all the bishops of our English Church were possessed of the same liberal and evangelical spirit which animates the worthy prelate of Liverpool. Dr. Ryle last week preached to a crowded congregation in the Presbyterian parish church at Moulin, Perthshire. In the ordinary walking dress of a bishop, without gown or bands, he occupied the pulpit, and went through the whole service in accordance with the Presbyterian mode. A collection for the Religious Tract Society fitly closed proceedings which may perhaps be censured by those to whom sectarianism and party strife are more than unity and Christian charity, but which will strike all impartial observers as simply a compliance with the injunction, "Love as brethren."

The reported death of the Queen of Madagascar, Ranavolana II., if it be confirmed, is an event which may materially affect the future history of Christianity in the island. The late Queen's adoption of the Christian faith in 1868 introduced a new epoch altogether in the history of her people, and was followed by a complete moral revolution in their habits and customs. It is an interesting fact to recall that her conversion was owing to her perusal of an old Bible which had lain for some time on a table in the palace during the life of her predecessor. She laboured hard to put down idolatrous practices, and to help forward in every way the propagation of the Gospel of Christ.

The civilisation as well as the evangelisation of Madagascar owes much to the spirit and conduct of the departed Queen. She encouraged education by personally distributing prizes to successful pupils in the schools, and by exempting teachers from Government service. Indeed, reforms calculated to spread confidence and content among the people were constantly aimed at and supported by her, while the emancipation of all the Mozambique slaves in her dominions, and the rendering it illegal to import slaves, must ever be a monument to her memory of the noblest and most enduring kind. We can only hope and pray that her successor may be imbued with similar zeal and earnestness in the right direction. Her reign is a wonderful testimony to what the grace of God will effect.

The Paris correspondent of The Record gives some very interesting and gratifying facts indicating a growth of Sabbath observance in that city. He says that wholesale business is altogether stopped, while retail trade is greatly lessening. In most localities only one distribution of letters takes place, and most public offices are closed. The new rules for military exercises leave the soldiers free to take part or not on Sundays, as conscience dictates. The subject is being brought to the front by various means, and that with most promising result. This should surely encourage the advocates of Lord's-day observance among ourselves to redoubled vigour and effort in opposing the inroads that many seek to make upon the Day of Rest. May God speed the movement in France, laden as it is with good to that land!

Magistrates have responsibilities in reference to the correction of social evils which it is right they should be reminded of from time to time; the more so, because they do not all seem to be duly conscious of the fact. It is a strange kind of justice which the case reported as having been heard recently before one of our London magistrates illustrates. A man was charged with having brutally assaulted his wife, because she refused to give him some money she had saved. The magistrate properly described him as "a despicable fellow," and sentenced him to two months' imprisonment with hard labour. On learning, however, that he was "well to do," he gave him the option of a fine of £5. Surely this kind of class legislation is a mistake, and to protect men of means from the due deserts of their crimes, while we severely punish those who are too poor to buy themselves off, is a miscarriage of justice, to be looked upon with indignant regret.

There is much of this sort of doing homage to money and social position to be seen around us, and the fact accounts for not a little of the discontent and the chafing at authority which prevails among the poorer classes of society. Nothing sooner leads to anarchy and civil disorder than an impression that there is one law for the rich and another for the poor. Crime, moreover, feeds upon such instances, and borrows boldness from them. Many are quite willing to pay for wrong-doing who would shrink from meaner penalties. In these days, "respect of persons" is a crying evil in many quarters, and partiality in judgment calls for censure, alike on the ground of Divine rule and human rights.

A correspondent who has read with thankfulness the notice of the good work done at the Amsterdam Exhibition by Mr. Philip Philips and others, is very desirous that similar efforts should be put forth at the exhibiton to be held in Calcutta during the coming winter. As there will doubtless be a great gathering of Europeans and natives from various parts of India, the opportunities for Gospel work would be plentiful.

We learn that the Fisk Jubilee Singers, whose former visits to this country are so well and so favourably remembered, contemplate returning to England next spring. Having largely accomplished the object that first brought them amongst us—the equipment of the Fisk University for their coloured brethren and sisters—they are now seeking by the exercise of their special gifts to provide for their own support. We are sure, however, that they will receive a hearty welcome from all classes of the British community.

An article in The Standard of August 31 on "The Congo and Its People" gives many interesting details as to the conditions and habits of the native tribes inhabiting the confines of the famous river. It would appear from the writer's statements that the modern growth of commerce in these regions has fostered popular freedom and largely mitigated the evils of domestic slavery. The following remarks will show that there is ample field for the efforts of all the civilising and missionary agencies now at work on the Congo:—

"The people have no religion, properly so-called; they have the last remnant of fetishism, from which all trace of homage or worship has departed, and they have heard from whites of a Supreme Trinity—which they suppose to be Father, Son, and Grandson—but they consider this as something of interest to white men which does not concern them. They regard their fetishes as magical instruments for the aversion of magical evils, and to discover or chastise thieves, but they are so little inquisitive that they never inquire in what the magic consists. The fetishistic theory is, of course, that certain objects containing portions of dead men or animals become imbued with the virtues of those men or animals, and so the system is affiliated on the worship of relics, but even this link in the chain of theories from ancestor-worship to fetishism has been let drop, and nobody cares to pick it up again. Unspeculative, heedless, the native takes for true and correct what his father thought and did, and never thinks of innovations. If asked why he does not do so and so, he will probably answer that it is not black man's custom."

The writer evidently has a very low estimate of the practical worth of Mr. Stanley's Expedition:—

"Mr. Stanley's road alongside the rapids is utterly useless for purposes of trade. Not a pound of African produce that leaves the river ever comes along it. . . . There exists a perfectly friendly feeling between the traders and the Expedition, but the former have nothing whereat to be grateful. The objects of the Expedition are an impenetrable mystery to the onlookers."

This, if true, must be rather discouraging news to the King of the Belgians; the lapse of time will probably correct the views of The Standard's correspondent, and show that his statements are not altogether free from bias and exaggeration.

"Woe to her that is filthy and polluted, to the oppressing city." Using these words of the prophet with a present application, a preacher said, "There are books sold at the railway stalls which a girl cannot read and remain modest, innocent, and pure." These books are largely read by our young people of both sexes, with the above destructive result. If it is coming to be regarded as a crime to fatten upon the sale of intoxicating drink, will not Christian opinion rise to recognise it as a crime against society to produce and to spread this intoxicating and demoralising literature?

"An Evangelical Ritualist who reads THE CHRISTIAN" objects to the remarks made on "The Advance of Ritualism" in our last issue, p. 5, and cites a well-known clergyman who, with his curates, "practices most of those points for which Ritualists are condemned." Our correspondent adds, "You will hardly deny that he is a true and earnest preacher of the Gospel, and thank God there are many like him." We do not deny it, and we thank God for those like him, but we think that the more earnestly and the more simply the Gospel—the Good Tidings of the Kingdom—is held and preached, the less will Ritualistic practices be thought of and observed; that as the love of the former increases, the love of the latter will decline.

A pamphlet has reached us, entitled "Jannes and Jambres," apparently issued for private circulation only, as it bears no publisher's name. It is by a writer whose nom de plume is "Senex." We are sorry to find an old man occupying himself with such slanderous and libellous falsehoods. We commend to him the commandments: "Thou shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people." "I exhort, therefore, that first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men; for kings, and for all that are in authority."

The Gospel alone can effectually remedy the woes of Ireland. But "the Gospel" is a very wide word, and covers every means by which we can "do good unto all men." Jesus regarded it as giving employment to men standing idle in the market-place, and paying them not according to the strict principles of business and political economy. It does far more good to employ discontented people than to send them to gaol. We therefore rejoice in the Industrial Exhibition at Cork, and we hope that by some means Irish fisheries will be promoted, and that Irishmen and Irish companies will get as much work as they can done at home, rather than sending it elsewhere.

"Out-of-the-Way Ministries" is the title of an able and useful article in this month's number of the Catholic Presbyterian, from the pen of Dr. Marshall Lang. The volumes published by the Rev. W. Haslam, "Form Death unto Life," and "Yet not I," from the basis of the Doctor's paper, which is sympathetic and appreciative, although at the same time discriminating and frank. The lessons drawn from the life and work recorded in those now well-known books are the need of an experience in order to give force to a preacher's message, and the advantage and value of close acquaintance with the Word of God, and of growth in the personal knowledge of Christ. These are illustrated and urged in a way at once striking and convincing. Their practical importance it is impossible to exaggerate.

While fully recognising and rejoicing in Mr. Haslam's eminence and success as a revivalist and special Mission preacher, the article points out what are, in the writer's opinion, the defects of much modern evangelistic work connected with his and other leading evangelists' methods. These are the lack of teaching definite religious instruction for new converts, the overlooking the work of the Spirit through the Church as an organisation for the perfecting of the Saints, and the tendency to undue excitement, as distinguished from a holy incitement from God. These undoubtedly are points calling for attention and care on the part of out-of-the-way ministries such as Dr. Lang has in view, and the spirit in which he deals with them commends them forcibly to consideration.

We cordially commend the essay to the notice of our readers. Read side by side with Mr. Haslam's autobiographical works, it cannot fail to awaken and stimulate spiritual fervour in Christian efforts and spiritual experience. Among the many serials which in these days are poured forth from the religious press, the Catholic Presbyterian holds high place for firm, unwavering fidelity to truth, and for the originality and utility of the matter with which its pages are filled. This month's issue is specially worthy of thoughtful perusal all through.

Readers of Regions Beyond will have seen in the number for July an intimation that Christian friends could meet at Hulme Cliff College during the vacation. We had the profitable pleasure of spending a week there at the close of last month, in company with about fifty Christian brothers and sisters from different parts of the country. It is one of the most beautiful localities in Derbyshire, and was a refreshing reminder of Mr. Moody's convocations at Northfield. It was no small additional attraction to their visitors to have the instructive conversation and addresses of Mr. and Mrs. Guinness. We hope these delightful re-unions will be repeated next year. Many young people were there, enjoying themselves and adding to the enjoyment of their elders, as well as learning for themselves that cheerfulness and happiness are not only compatible with, but essential elements of true Christian life.

Mr. Spurgeon has brought upon himself a rather vigorous, if not severe rebuke from the Daily Telegraph, which devoted a lengthy leader last week to a criticism of his recent utterances on behalf of the Strome Ferry Sabbatarians. Mr. Spurgeon is reported to have said that he wished we had people in England good enough to commit a similar crime on behalf of the Day of Rest, their sin being simply that of stepping in to prevent what they conceived to be a breach of God's law. Of course the line to be drawn between lawlessness and rioting for the sake of gaining one's own ends and resisting that which aims at subverting the appointments of God is wide and clear, and Mr. Spurgeon's words cannot be construed into justification of the former course. "We ought to obey God rather than men," is an old axiom of the truth which is according to godliness, and we hold that it is as true to-day as when the Apostles defied the authority of judges who sought to interfere with the rights of conscience, and to set aside Divine institutions.

The lesson that the laws of God are supreme, and should claim higher obedience than those of men, is one much needed in these days, and we are glad Mr. Spurgeon has boldly spoken in defence of those who dared to take a stand in so good a cause. Where Divine rights are not in question, we are bound no less as Christians than as citizens to uphold law and order, but to condemn a protest such as the hardy Scotchmen of Strome Ferry made against an encroachment upon what they and their fathers had always been taught to regard as a sacred privilege and a duty, is to side with Belial against Christ, to choose darkness rather than light.

LITERATURE FOR SOLDIERS.—Mrs. Evered Poole is earnestly desirous of forming an association for the supply of literature weekly to the Christian soldiers of various regiments, who will undertake the distribution of periodicals, tracts, &c., in their respective barrack-rooms. She will be glad to receive the names of any willing to undertake the sending of a weekly packet to one or more soldiers whose name and address she will forward on application to her at Enfield House, Southampton. A number of names are waiting the kind help of friends.

RIVERSIDE, GLASGOW.—On the arrival of the Irish steamers at the Broomielaw—the busy thoroughfare of Glasgow shipping—large crowds congregated, and a beginning was made a few weeks ago to reach the large number of wharf labourers and seamen. The men were invited to accompany the workers to the Brownfield Church. The attendance has been all that could be desired, and a blessing has already been showered down on the efforts put forth. In other seaport towns a similar meeting might be organised, and encouragement given to those who reside in populous districts to enter churches which they are not in the habit of attending.

BE NOT AFRAID.

LONG toiling in rowing far out from the shore,
Mid billows that threaten and tempests that roar,
The Fishermen Preachers, on board their frail bark,
Have pull'd o'er the foam through the night-watches dark,
When, lo! in the distance, a spirit-like form
Comes over the waters, unheeding the storm.

The white-crested billows yield not to the tread
Of the strange apparition that fills them with dread;
With uplifted eyes, and a cry of despair,
They kneel in their vessel, and breathe out a prayer
That God will protect from the wild raging sea,
And from spirits of evil, if any there be.

"O God of our fathers, that rulest the storm,
How great were the wonders they saw Thee perform;
Repeat them again, that thy fame may be told,
Through ages to come with thy doings of old.
O God of our fathers that rulest the sea
And holdest the tempest, we call upon Thee."

They look and they list, when a Voice through the air
Comes floating, like music, in answer to prayer.
How welcome that Voice, and its accent how dear!
Now hope takes the place of each soul-chilling fear.
No trumpet of silver, with clarion ring,
Could fill them with joy like the voice of their King.

Oh, toilers in rowing, now be of good cheer,
And be not afraid, with your Jesus so near.
He witnessed your trouble, and came to your aid;
Oh banish your terrors, and be not afraid
Of the sea, or the darkness, or dangers in sight,
But be of good courage, and all will be right.

Oh toiler in rowing o'er life's troubled sea,
This story has sweetness and comfort for thee.
Has long been the darkness and fierce been the blast?
Thy bark tossing wildly? this comfort thou hast,
Thy dear, loving Saviour is nigh with his aid,
To cheer and to rescue; then, be not afraid.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN SICILY.

IN an "Occasional Paper," just issued by the Evangelical Continental Society, we have an interesting account of evangelistic work in Sicily, by Revs. J. J. Varnier and J. Scuderi. At Limina and Barracca many have listened to the Word of life. About Barracca we read:—

"For nearly two hours we read, expounded, and prayed. Their attention was rivetted by what the Lord gave us to say. At the last prayer one of the travellers, an old man of about seventy years, kneeling down, began to cry in a loud voice, 'Lord Jesus Christ, forgive my many sins, and give me that eternal life of which thy servants have spoken, promised in thy book! Lord Jesus Christ, forgive me!' The interest and earnestness evinced rejoiced our hearts. The men insisted on accompanying us to the station, while the women pressed to shake hands, desiring us to pray for them and their families.

"At St. Alessio we were literally besieged by the good people. We preached and prayed without interruption, having scarcely time to take refreshment. One incident I must relate. There was a man of some influence in the town who had been bitterly prejudiced against us by the priests. He looked upon us as perverters of the people. The Word of God struck him so that after a while he rose up and asked to say a few words. 'Sirs,' he said, 'I came here with the intention of disturbing your meeting, and even of insulting you, being under a false impression. I now ask your pardon, and confess that your words come from God. I will go now and call my friends to come and hear you.'

"At Messina the Lord had opened the hearts of many to receive the Gospel. 'And now,' said one man, 'there are forty of us going to America. I promised them that they should hear from your own lips the blessed truths of the Gospel. Come, then, and finish the work begun in the name of the Lord, for they are waiting for you.'"

A MISSIONARY MEETING IN SOUTH AFRICA.

WE have received some "notes from the pocket-book" of our brother, Mr. S. Aitchison, of the Ikweci Lamaci Mission, Natal, which we feel sure will be read with the deepest interest and gratitude. This Mission, we may remark, was at one time fostered and provided for by the Young Men's Foreign Missionary Society of Birmingham. These friends still render help but do not hold themselves specially responsible, so that any practical interest shown towards the work by Christians generally will be of signal service in furthering its operations. In a private note which accompanies the following extracts, Mrs. Aitchison reports cheering progress in the evangelistic and school work of the Mission throughout the district:—

A NOVEL MISSIONARY MEETING.

On June 20 we had our annual missionary meeting at the breaking up of the school for the harvest holidays. This day had been looked forward to for some time past by many of the heathen around, as well as by the Christian natives; the school children, in their own way, made not a little preparation for the event. The day previous they had finished reaping our own mealie garden, having voluntarily turned out this year for that purpose, which was a great help to us. The morning was bright and not too cold, as the sun was shining. The wind, blowing off the snow-capped mountains which lie in full view to our west, filled the air with a freshness which made one feel full of vigour and energy, greatly adding to the zeal of each person for the proceedings of the day. The hour appointed for the meeting was midday, but long before this time the people were gathering from all quarters. The Christians had come even earlier with their cooking vessels and provisions, with which they intended to swell the feast. By one o'clock there were between three and four hundred people present; the feast being ready, all arranged themselves quickly, the men and boys on one side, the women and girls on the other, according to their own custom. There was not a sad face to be seen in the assembly. Every one appeared to try and outshine the other in being happy and well-behaved, as befitting the occasion.

When all had satisfied their excellent appetites, the service was announced. An extempore platform was raised under the shade of the trees, and in the midst of this happy-looking throng we had a very attentive audience to the Gospel message, and trust that the hearts as well as the ears were reached, so that they took home with them the "Bread of Life." We closed with a stirring Kaffir hymn, sung to the tune of "Home, sweet Home," and intimated that if anyone had anything to say we should be glad to listen. Then came and others. Paulos (our native Evangelist) stood up and said his heart swelled with gladness to see so many people there. He called their attention to the length of time the missionary had been with them, and the benefits they had received from this privilege. He asked why there were not more converts, and why there were not more children coming to school; each month they were allowing this great privilege to slip through their hands, and time that never could be recalled; would they not awake and take hold of Christ before too late? They could see what Christianity had done for himself and for all the others who had received it. "You all know what I used to be, a man who was prepared to fight and quarrel with everybody. There was rarely a beer-drinking party in the neighbourhood which I did not attend, and seldom came away without having a quarrel with somebody. In those days I was considered a great man amongst you all, but look at my arms! These assagai wounds have had time to heal since I became a Christian, but the old scars will still remain, to keep me in mind of what my Saviour delivered me from, and from far greater dangers than these. See how different those children and young people are who come regularly to school to be taught! They used to be like 'wild things' coming out of the bush; now they are not only taught to be clean and wear clothes and become intelligent and useful, but some have given themselves to Jesus. With all our thankfulness for so much done for us poor heathen as we once were, we must never forget those good friends in England who have through God's guidance been led to help us, and send us a teacher and to keep up a school for both ourselves and our children to be taught at."

After this speech, which was listened to most attentively, the school children sang "Hold the Fort" in Kaffir. Then Faniswa, an earnest Christian woman, rose and gave a powerful exhortation to the same effect as that which had just been delivered. A few more speeches from some of the other Christians, and the heathen were asked if they had anything to say or questions to ask.

SPEECHES FROM THE HEATHEN.

So Intamo, a man about sixty years of age, said he would like to say a few words; he sat while giving his speech, after native fashion. The Umfundisi, he said, must not get discouraged or wish to go away from us. "Although we heathen do not come to the services as often as we ought to do, we often come to talk with him and to ask his advice about matters, and we all feel that we have a friend here now. Although our hearts do not yet tell us to become Christians, we hope they will some day. We black people are not like white people; if a white man wants anything done he does it quickly; it is like putting fire to the grass on a windy day in the winter, it is all off in a flame in a moment; but when we intend to do anything we take a long time to think about it and talk about it, then we go on with the thing slowly. So it is just now that we are beginning to wake up." After Intamo's speech, which was applauded by the people, Duli, a man aged about forty-five years, said: He hoped the Umfundisi would take charge of them all in the Location and still be their friend, and allow them to come and talk with him about troublesome matters as he had always done. Although we are not Christians ourselves, we are glad of what is done for us by the Umfundisi. We know that when we or our children are sick, and our doctors cannot cure us, he is always ready to help us with his medicines. This speech was assented to by all present.

As the day was drawing to a close, I thought it time to end our meeting, and so gave out another hymn and closed with prayer. But instead of the people leaving, one after another came forward and placed on the table at my side and all around me, small gifts to the Mission, entirely free-will offering. These gifts consisted of a number of threepenny pieces, some sixpenny, and a few shillings, and two or three half-crowns, in all amounting to £1 5s. Others brought a fowl each—numbering twenty-nine; others presented small baskets of Indian corn, which filled two and a half sacks. Then came four handsome gifts of three sheep and one goat; the value in all amounted to £4 5s. As there was a debt on the school building, we have applied this amount to that purpose. I felt quite overwhelmed with joy and thankfulness by this mark of interest in the Mission, and their efforts to do something towards it. By this time the sun had set, and all prepared for their journeys home, with farewells and expressions of pleasure at having spent a very pleasant day.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for week ending September 15:—Sept. 9, Luke xxii. 1-13; Sept. 10, Luke xxii. 14-23; Sept. 11, Luke xxii. 24-38; Sept. 12, Luke xxii. 39-53; Sept. 13, Luke xxii. 54-71; Sept. 14, Luke xxiii. 1-12; Sept. 15, Luke xxiii. 13-26.

CONFERENCE ON UNFULFILLED PROPHECY.

AVENUE-ROAD CHURCH, GOLDHAWK-ROAD, SHEPHERD'S BUSH, W.

Oct. 9, 10, and 11.

BELOVED CHRISTIAN FRIENDS,

IT is again our privilege to invite you to a Conference on Unfulfilled Prophecy. Our Conference last year was blest, to the instruction and profit of many. We trust, assembling in a worshipping and receptive spirit, similar, and even greater, blessing may be granted us this year. We are encouraged to expect increasing light on the prophetic Word, and with increasing light increasing blessing, from the command to the prophet, with its accompanying promise: "And thou, Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the book, unto the time of the end. Many shall diligently examine, and the knowledge shall be increased" (Dan. xii. 4, Amended Tr.). From the command of John in Patmos, we draw similar encouragement: "Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this Book; for the time is at hand" (Rev. xxii. 10).

We cannot doubt that the lesson, with its encouragement in the last of the prophets, has a special reference to the closing days of our dispensation: "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before Him for them that feared the Lord and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him" (Mal. iii. 16, 17). Is it not eminently cheering and animating to know from the Word of God that by united prayer and conference we are hastening the day of the Church's redemption and of the world's blessing? For is not this the meaning of the Apostle's words: "Looking for and hastening the coming of the day of God" (2 Peter iii. 12, Gr.)?

On the important themes to be considered in our Conference, we desire to avoid all mere theories and speculations, and to have our ears open to hear only the voice of God in his written Word.

CHARLES GRAHAM, }
JOHN S. TOPPING, } Conveners.

SUBJECTS.

Tuesday, October 9—The personal premillennial advent of the Lord in relation to the Church.

Wednesday, October 10—The personal premillennial Advent of the Lord in relation to Israel.

Thursday, October 11—The personal premillennial Advent of the Lord in relation to the world.

Meeting each afternoon at 3 o'clock; evening at 7. Among the speakers will be a number of Christian ministers and others well and widely known as students of prophetic truth.

Sacred Songs and Solos will be used. Tea will be provided in the lecture-hall of the church at 6 o'clock. In the rooms of the adjoining Mission-house friends can sit and rest in the interim of the meetings.

NEW YORK.—Mr. W. Boynton, resident missionary of the International Tract Society at New York, thanks the kind friend who has sent THE CHRISTIAN to that institution in response to an appeal in our columns. It is much prized, and Mr. Boynton hopes it will be continued.

SARRASS.—Mrs. Yeoland has again visited Sarrass. Her stay amongst us was short; but we have great reason to rejoice; for the power of God was manifest throughout all the services, in the awakening of many in this place. A large number owe their conversion to Mrs. Yeoland's earnest, simple, and straightforward way of putting the Gospel. G.W.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.—The report of this society, just issued, gives an interesting account of its year's labour. The work of the Memorial Hall, Bethnal-green, continues to prosper. The Temperance and other free lectures during the winter months were much appreciated by those who attended them. The Young People's Mutual Improvement Classes and free library have been useful. The visitation of workhouses, free meals to the destitute, open air mission-work, and Ragged and night-school work have all been productive of real results. The Secretary, Mr. J. Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road, South Kingsland, N., appeals for continued support. The liabilities are heavy and the work is deserving of sympathy.

ENGLISH GIRLS IN PARIS THEATRES.

LAST week the Paris correspondent of The Times telegraphed the following:—

"Dr. Hellmuth, late of Huron, Coadjutor Bishop of Ripon, on his way to consecrate two churches in Switzerland, opened Miss Leigh's Home for respectable English girls who are employed in Paris theatres, this afternoon, at 20, Rue Beaurépaire. A party of Miss Leigh's friends, including the Rev. W. A. Yeatman and others, were present. The young people evidently enjoyed the good old-fashioned fare of roast beef and plum pudding as heartily on a sultry August day as if it had been snowy Christmastide. The home will accommodate fourteen or fifteen young women, besides giving them an excellent dining and reading room. Mr. Yeatman has promised a piano, a set of French books to each who will promise to study the French language, with daily newspapers and monthly periodicals, which will no doubt be a great attraction.

"In opening this, the sixth of Miss Leigh's institutions for the benefit of her countrywomen in Paris, the Bishop spoke of the gratification with which he had visited Miss Leigh's other institutions, and referred later on to their economical administration. This new Home is intended for respectable English girls who have already made engagements in Paris theatres, to protect them, and to befriend them in sickness, and in any difficulties which may arise from the peculiar circumstances in which they may at any time find themselves in a foreign city. Already one of the little party is in a hospital. It is scarcely necessary to state that this is the first Home of the kind opened in Paris."

ALDERSGATE-STREET Y.M.C.A.

IT has hitherto been the custom of the above Institution to arrange annually a course of scientific lectures, with experiments, illustrations, &c. In recent years, however, the great development of high-class magazine literature has brought the information formerly conveyed by this medium within easy reach of the intelligent reading public in their own homes. Through this and other causes the old style of lecture has fallen almost into desuetude. The Committee have, therefore, this year taken a new departure and in conformity with their object have arranged a series of lectures on the pressing religious questions of the day. They have secured the services of Rev. Dr. J. Monro Gibson, of Marlborough-road Church, St. John's Wood, formerly pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, Chicago. In connection with the Young Men's Christian Association in that city, for several seasons he sustained a weekly lecture of similar character, commanding large and deeply interested audiences of a thousand or more.

The proposed lectures are entitled "Rock and Sand." They will be delivered in the Lecture Hall every Monday evening, commencing Sept. 24, at 8 p.m., and will be open to both ladies and gentlemen. While dealing with fundamental truths in an evidential manner, they will also treat of the criticisms and speculations that are current. In these days not only of abounding scepticism—incipient and developed—but also of genuine inquiry and truth-seeking, it is felt that this course will meet a widely recognised want.

KING'S CROSS ROAD.—Mr. W. F. Chambers wishes us to state that meetings are held at No. 41, King's Cross-road, on Sunday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday evenings.

LIVINGSTONIA MISSION.—The last mail from Rev. Dr. Laws brought two items of intelligence of very great interest—the completion of the translation of the whole New Testament into Chinyanja, the language of the people at the south end of the lake, and the arrival in the Ilala of the sections of the London Missionary Society's steam launch Good News at the head of Lake Nyassa on the Queen's birthday.

RELIEF OF PERSECUTED JEWS.

VIOLENT persecution of Jews in Christian countries has again broken out. The newspapers daily report fresh outrages—here the burning down of a Jewish village—there the destruction by a furious mob of the Jewish quarter of a large town; in another place, a mere village, an attack made by twenty peasants armed with hatchets, cudgels, and scythes, upon an old man, very poor, whom they murdered, driving the women of the family naked into the fields. Well is it said that "nothing short of madness seems to have seized upon the people of Hungary and of South Russia," the ignorant peasantry who not only rob and murder, but destroy wholesale the property of villages, towns, and districts.

It was estimated by Russian Government authorities that during the anti-Jewish riots of 1881-1882 above twenty-two million pounds worth of property had been destroyed, and now the same insane work is being revived in Russia, and carried on in Hungary. Millions' worth of property is annihilated; life is sacrificed in a thousand ways by the mob, and in Russia the State—the Government itself—is helping forward the work of destruction, by closing to the Jews industry after industry; here ruining by one stroke of the pen 20,000 Jewish agriculturists by abolishing their leases, there driving thousands of manufacturers into bankruptcy by a sudden edict commanding them to dismiss all their Christian employés. Because "the employment of Christians by Jews is proved, on the one hand, to be opposed to the national spirit of the Russians; and, on the other hand, a lengthy intercourse between Christian employés and Jewish employers is found to be subversive of the religious feelings of the workmen, who become indifferent to religious ceremonials, and are even found to absent themselves from church on Saints' days and festivals!" This is a quotation from the official Russian document.

During the whole of last year riot and plunder, massacre and expulsion, were brought to bear upon sixteen out of eighty-six districts in Russia, where alone Jews may dwell. In one town 6000 persons were driven out during an outbreak lasting only a few days; in another large city 20,000 Jews were systematically expelled, and so on, until it became wearisome to read the repetition of similar occurrences in hundreds of places large and small. The last twelve months have been remarkable for the promulgation of new and grinding edicts, which multiply tenfold the disabilities under which Jews have hitherto existed. And now the acute symptoms of persecution with violence have reappeared. There is one most grave feature now to be observed in South Russia and in Hungary. Special agitators are going about stirring up the ignorant people and leading the mob against the Jews. In Hungary bands of peasants, from 100 to 1000 strong, have appeared in various parts of the country, usually led by some one who, though dressed as a peasant and wearing a mask, betrays himself by his style of language and deportment as belonging to the better classes. There is good reason to believe that the money and the emissaries who act thus are provided by the German Anti-Semitic Party, who have long been preaching an active crusade against the Jews. Shall we say, as some do, that the Jews have brought all this upon themselves by their usury, their greed and their fraud, goading to madness those whom they have oppressed?

On another occasion I hope to adduce facts and statistics which completely refute the allegations which have been, I believe, thoughtlessly accepted by those whose nature revolts from the cruelties inflicted upon the Jews, and who find some relief in the suggestion that the Jews have themselves to blame if they are hated and ill-used. Long acquaintance with the Jewish people, and acquaintance with their habits, convinces me that in these matters they have been unjustly accused. It is well to remember that neither race-hatred, religious fanaticism, brutish ignorance of the masses, nor all of these combined, can account for what is now going on. Not only in barbarous Russia and uncivilised Hungary, but in enlightened Protestant Germany, are to be found thousands who hate Jews with a blind, unreasoning hatred, and combine to do them harm.

We feel that the causes lie far deeper than those alleged in the newspapers of the day. Where the Old Testament Scriptures are not read, known, or believed, there hatred of the Jews is to be found. Here in England, thank God, we owe it to the wide-spread acquaintance with the Bible that there is Christian sympathy with persecuted Jews. Prejudice still exists, but this is often due to a want of knowledge. Jews and Christians see but little of each other. Christians know little of the religious feeling and domestic habits of their Jewish fellow-countrymen; but many thousands in Christian England reverence the nation of Israel for the sake of Abraham and David, and our Saviour Himself. In future papers it will be my endeavour to give facts which may tend to remove erroneous impressions, to show that this persecution is not mainly due to Jewish misconduct, but that the hand of Divine Providence can be traced in the convulsions which are shaking the Jews out of the lands of their dispersion, and preparing them, even by the sufferings which they are enduring, for return to their own land.

To succour those ready to perish is a Christian duty. "Relief of persecuted Jews in token of Christian sympathy," is felt to be one means of softening the hearts of the sufferers towards Christianity. Amid all the distressing accounts of cruelties inflicted by Christians, it is comforting to turn to the record of Christian effort to relieve, to hear of the refugees placed in safety in Cyprus, even though but a few families; and that a beginning has been made, and that under British protection Jewish hands are at this moment at work upon the land granted to them at the instance of Lord Shaftesbury, that they have begun to dig their wells, and to prepare for sowing their seed in that island—known to us chiefly by its New Testament history, until our Jewish Prime Minister's action brought it into notice as a British possession. E. A. FINN.

EVANGELICAL CONTINENTAL SOCIETY.—I have been asked to put the Christian public on their guard against a French pastor lately come to this country, who will probably be asking for help towards some religious society or object, but really for his own benefit. He has left France for very sufficient reasons. R. S. ASHTON.

EPSOM.—For twenty-five years Miss Alexander, of Epsom, has arranged for Mission work at the time of Epsom races, collecting the necessary funds, securing lodgings, purchasing tracts, and generally encouraging and helping the work. To mark their appreciation of these long-continued and self-denying labours, thirty-nine members of the Open-air Mission, city missionaries, and other workers, presented Miss Alexander, on August 28, with an illuminated address and a copy of Doré's Bible. The deputation which waited on Miss Alexander, for this purpose, was headed by Mr. Gawin Kirkham, Secretary of the Open-air Mission.

A Y.M.C.A. FOR HAMMERSMITH.—A branch of the Young Men's Christian Association has been formed for Hammersmith. It has been decided to take Wycombe House, King-street East (a few yards from the Broadway stations of the District and Metropolitan Railways), for the accommodation of the members. An invitation was issued from Stafford Rooms, Edgware-road, for several gentlemen to meet to take into consideration the formation of a branch of the association at Hammersmith. Mr. Croft and others attended at the Stafford Rooms, and afterwards a meeting was called at Mr. Croft's residence to discuss the subject, with the result that a committee was chosen, who were empowered to look for suitable premises. The honorary secretaries of the branch are Messrs. E. Franklin and E. W. Wyatt. It has been resolved to at once adapt a portion of Wycombe House for the meetings of the Association. The alterations will necessitate a large expenditure, and it is estimated that about £1000 will be required for furnishing, purchase of lease, building a hall, &c. A number of gentlemen have given donations towards founding the branch. Further help will be thankfully received and acknowledged by Mr. Croft, Stanley Villa, Shepherd's Bush-road, Hammersmith, W. Forty members have already joined the branch.

FAREWELL TO MR. G. KIRKHAM.

ON Tuesday morning, August 28, by invitation of Mr. Richard Turner, a few members and friends of the Open-air Mission met Mr. Kirkham to breakfast at Exeter Hall previous to his departure for a three months' tour in America. After breakfast a meeting for prayer was held to commend Mr. Kirkham to the Lord during his absence from England.

Rev. G. BURSON, brother of Mr. Burson, of Exeter Hall, spoke of the great need of workers in Canada. Emigrants are streaming in, and there are few to preach the Gospel to them. Mr. SAMME spoke of the need of true testimony for Christ on board ship. Mr. KIRKHAM said he desired to visit America that he might help Christian workers as opportunity offered, and also further open-air preaching among the churches. The members and friends of the Open-air Mission in this country will, we trust, pray for many open and effectual doors to be given to their Secretary. Mr. John Pamment will attend to the secretarial duties during Mr. Kirkham's absence.

TEMPERANCE WORK IN NAPLES.

THE "Seamen's Temperance League" instituted here a few months ago has been cheeringly successful; some hundreds of seamen have joined it. A committee of English ladies of different denominations supply a red, white, and blue badge. The ladies have also opened a "Sailors' Rest" on board the Bethel ship.

Not long ago I gave a lecture on "The last days of Casamicciola," and among other results ten men in one ship joined the Seamen's Temperance League; one young man is a publican's son. Almost every day the seamen are joining it. Strong drink is doing a dreadful work in our English ships: men under its influence jump overboard. Our British sailors are really very noble fellows, but they are very simple, and easily led. The badge of red, white, and blue, has pleased them very much.

I have planned a scheme to extend the movement to the Mediterranean ports, commencing with those ports where there are no Mission stations. A few Christian men who are thoroughly acquainted with this great highway of commerce have volunteered their services to man a Gospel Temperance Yacht of 60 tons, the crew to act as missionaries, to have the vessel utilised as a floating shop, with the Scriptures, in various languages, and other good books for sale, one of the crew to act as colporteur, and in every port to have branches of the Seamen's Temperance League.

In the Bethel at Naples we have no difficulty in uniting all the sections of the Christian Church. Each of the ministers comes in his turn, and preaches the Gospel to the seamen.

S. BURROWES.

THE LATE DR. SCHOFIELD.—Referring to the death of Dr. Schofield, of the China Inland Mission, a further telegram mentions that he died of typhus fever on August 1.

REVIVAL IN JAPAN.—Rev. C. S. Long, of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Nagasaki, Japan, tells of a remarkable work of grace in connection with his Mission. In that newly-opened country missionary work is in an initial state, and the Church at Nagasaki, till the manifestation we speak of, was a very small affair indeed compared with Mission churches in India. It is one of the most impressive marks of the recent awakening that it began within the Church, and spread at once, as on the day of Pentecost, among the heathen congregation. Mr. Long writes: "We have now continued the meetings eleven days with marvellous results. Fifty have been genuinely converted, and forty-two have been added to the Church. Last Sunday (June 3) I baptized twenty-seven persons in Nagasaki, and we have now a large number of candidates for baptism. I have never witnessed anything even at home more marvellous than the great revival now in progress here." The letter concludes: "A Buddhist priest, who has been attending our meetings, has just slipped in to tell me that he has renounced Buddhism, and accepts Christianity as the true religion."—Indian Witness.

BELIEVERS' MEETING AT NIAGARA.

THIS annual meeting for Bible study has closed. More remarkable than any former convention of its kind, both in the increase of numbers, the strength of the speakers, and the subjects presented, it deserves a more extended notice than the present sketch. Many of the students—if we may be allowed the expression—gathered from distant parts of the United States and Canada, while the teachers came from fields widely apart. This annual assembly has gradually become a Bible-school, and its influence is being felt in many lands. The brethren who teach communicate such knowledge as is acquired by prayer and earnest study, the hundreds of listeners forming in the meantime a class of learners and inquirers. The themes chosen are purely Biblical—doctrinal, prophetic, and experimental. The whole aim is that of expounding Scripture subjects on a systematic plan, to benefit evangelists, pastors, mission-workers, and others, in supplying them with material, and in giving hints for their further study to be utilised in coming days.

Dr. Brookes, on the Premillennial Advent of our Lord; Professor Moorehead, on the Covenants and on the Land of Promise; Dr. West, on Prophetic Outlines; and Mr. Congden, on the Doom of the Wicked as opposed to Annihilationism and Restorationism, not only cleared up points of obscurity, but harmonised the Scriptures, and vindicated the old theology which has been so violently assailed of late on both sides of the sea. Messrs. Parsons, Erdman, Pierson, Whittle, and others gave addresses, with proof-texts, on such practical and experimental subjects as "The Flesh and Spirit," "The Holy Spirit," "Inspiration of the Bible," "Crucified and Risen with Christ," &c., &c. The doctrine of the Cross was ever kept in view, and the exaltation and glory of the Lord Jesus frequently enlarged upon.

Hours for prayer, praise, and brief addresses to quicken devotion and enrich experience, formed a daily item in the programme, so that the freshness of Christian life was kept in view, by the leaders, as well as spiritual growth through the teaching of the Word. Evangelistic services were held nightly, when many well-known brethren and a number of new evangelists preached to the strangers and citizens who gathered to these meetings.

The emphatic protest of this assembly against false doctrine is timely. The discovery has come to light that various persons are now busily engaged in spreading Materialistic doctrines, and thereby "overthrow the faith of some." The result is that many are thus drawn away and enticed. In addition, popular preachers, more honest and less dangerous than the secret underminers of the faith, array an amount of learning and talent on the side of error, which seem overwhelming and conclusive. Their teaching can only be met by honest, thorough Scripture exegesis; therefore the simple-minded Christians throughout the land would rejoice if they could hear in how masterly a manner the modern fallacies were exposed at Niagara by men who ask for nothing but candid Scripture investigation.

Another fatal error, appearing in many guises and under various names, necessarily met with opposition in Scripture exposition. I refer to the Perfection theories. Hydra-headed, they constantly reappear. These delusions, based on visions, emotions, or pretended revelations, sweep away in their current some of the best and noblest in the land. And this fact, that gracious souls advocate Perfectionism, is the argument for others to commit themselves, also, to the enchanting river which soon carries them from their firm footing into deeps that know no sounding. The charitable plea to cease opposing that which may have some good things to commend it, loses its value as the real tendency of such error is seen, in the general demoralisation which it entails. Evangelical Christians are again fighting the battle against these abounding errors; and the vigorous teaching at Niagara rejoices many a heart that men are found who stand in the good old ways in these days of apostacy.

The singing was conducted by Mr. and Mrs. James McGranahan, who thrilled all hearts with their Scripture chants, and led the congregations in genuine devotional praise.

CONTINENTAL NOTES.

THE FRENCH MISSION INTÉRIEURE

IS much occupying itself in seeking after the means of bringing about a true revival. It lays particular stress on the union of Christians: "Whenever Christians unite in forgetting their little variances or quarrels, and meet in order to humble themselves, to pray, to believe, to seek after more entire sanctification, and to labour for the salvation of others, there will be a revival."

GENEVA.

A correspondent writes to us as follows:—"When staying in Geneva last autumn, we used to hear Mr. Sankey's hymns wafted to us at night, from a little street in a poor and populous part of the town, at the foot of the Cathedral and prison walls. The hymns were sung by men, in French, and evidently with hearty good will. We soon found at a street corner one of the Mission-rooms (like Mr. McAll's) where meetings are held weekly in Geneva, well-lighted, the passers-by attracted by the pleased look of the 'ouvriers' in attendance, and by the singing."

THE HAGUE.

The British, Continental, and General Federation, for the abolition of tolerated and legalised vice, will hold its third Triennial Congress, at The Hague, Holland, September 17—22. The Dutch authorities have afforded every facility to the convener. The Minister of Public Works has placed at the disposal of the committee a Government room, and the Burgomaster has kindly consented to open his drawing-rooms for the reception of the Congress Members, on the evening of Monday, September 17. Inquiries respecting accommodation should be addressed to Mons. C. M. A. Hartman, Nassauplein, No. 25, La Haye, with as little delay as possible.

BAREFOOTED NUNS.

A writer relates in The Figaro that there exists an order of women, very little known, the "Barefooted Klarissenites." They have a cloister in the quarter of the Invalides, and number only eighteen, with some lay sisters for their service. Fourteen of these nuns are under twenty-three years of age, for the regulations are so severe that most of those who enter the house die young. They wear a coarse woollen garment, and go all the year round barefoot on cold stone floors; they never warm themselves at a fire, eat meat only once a year, sleep upon a narrow plank which is not long enough for them to stretch out the limbs upon. Ten hours of every day are spent kneeling in the chapel, they live of alms and the produce of work which they do in addition to their religious exercises.

These devotees belong for the most part to families of rank. Of course they are entirely shut off from the outer world, but they are once a year shown to their relatives from a distance, through a lattice in the chapel. When a nun dies, her companions lay her in her coffin, which is placed outside the bounds of the cloister to be examined by the authorities.—Evangelisch-Kirchlicher Anzeiger.

CHICAGO.—A good work continues to be carried on here in connection with the Bible Work Room, of which Miss E. Dryer is the superintendent. A Home has recently been opened for the reception and training of Christian women as workers in the Mission-fields at home and abroad. The Bible-Reading and Prayer Alliance is found most helpful and profitable in furthering the knowledge of the Scriptures, and cementing the bonds of union and fellowship among the student workers.

EVANGELISTS AT WORK.

FRASERBURGH, N.B.

GOSPEL services have been conducted here during the fishing season by several ministers and others, assisted by Mr. John Mitchell, evangelist, from Edinburgh. Outside as well as inside meetings have been held as often as practicable, which were largely attended, and considerable interest manifested by the attentive audiences and encouraging "after-meetings." Altogether we have reason to believe that much good has been effected by this special effort.

LITTLEHAMPTON.

Mr. Seagrove, of the Children's Special Service Mission, has had good meetings here for a month past, twice a day on the beach, besides the morning prayer-meeting in St. Saviour's Church. Messrs. Dennes and Bishop were here on Sunday week, and held a special meeting for boys only, in the church. The place is crowded with visitors. W. H. Simms.

St. Saviour's Parsonage.

BILSTON.

A fortnight's Gospel services have been held in the Methodist New Connexion Church by Mr. and Mrs. Hutchinson. The place of meeting has been filled to excess each evening, and we believe many have been brought to the foot of the Cross through the preaching of God's Word. We had some grand prayer-meetings. Each Sunday afternoon there was an experience meeting; these have resulted in adding to the church a goodly number of young converts.

John Grove.

A BLIND EVANGELIST AT HULL.

A deeply-interesting Mission has been held by Mr. Thomas Houston, the blind Evangelist, from Bessbrook, Ireland, in connection with the Friends' Adult School, Mason-street. Large and interested gatherings of the scholars were addressed, and Gospel services were held every evening. The solos sung by Mr. Houston were most telling. The interest gradually increased as the week went on, and the house was crowded on the last Sunday. It is thankfully believed that many souls found pardon and peace through Christ Jesus; also that many backsliders returned to the fold.

SHEPHERD'S BUSH.

Miss Ruth Brryman has been labouring with her companion, Miss Cresswell, for four months at the Athenæum; their labours have been wonderfully blessed to the conversion of many. The Mission was closed on Sunday, August 26, with a farewell address to the converts in the afternoon, and a Gospel address in the evening, when the hall was filled to overflowing. It was a pleasing sight to behold the eager listeners to the Gospel from the text, "Is it well with thee?" (2 Kings iv. 26). Several came forward at the close and confessed to have found Christ. Fervent prayer was made that God would continue to bless the labours of these servants, as He has undoubtedly done in the past.

AMONG THE CHILDREN AT WEYMOUTH.

Messrs. Dennes and Salisbury's four weeks' Mission to children on the beach has ended; the Lord Jesus is now in visitors' homes, and families still here, to an extent for which much praise daily ascends to Him. On the evening of Friday, August 24, at Gloucester-street schoolroom, in the after-meeting, several joyfully and peacefully whispered responses to workers moving about during the final hymn. Old hearts wept in sympathy and desire. On Saturday morning the prayer-meeting was early attended by groups of recently-decided young people and smaller children to hear some final loving counsels from Mr. Salisbury. The last beach-meeting on Sunday afternoon, 26th ult., was large, and the address on the brazen serpent very impressive. A second birthday is now the joyful possession of many youthful hearts. J. T.

THE MISSION KETCH AT BOULOGNE.

We have received from Mr. A. S. Lamb some additional particulars of the evangelistic work at this port, briefly noticed in our last issue. Our correspondent says:—

"As the time drew near for the departure of the Annie for Calais, after a fortnight's stay here, the interest awakened at these meetings was so great that all available space was occupied in the spacious cabin of the vessel. Even the stairs leading to the cabin were thronged, while those who could not find sitting room elsewhere lingered about the deck and in the immediate neighbourhood of the boat. To see soldiers, sailors, women, and children, in the very striking attire peculiar to the French people, crowded together in the vessel, to hear the familiar hymns of Mr. Sankey sung with evident enthusiasm, and to see the deep interest in the faces of the hearers, as one after another of the speakers in loving tones held up Christ to them, was indeed cause for praise.

"I should like to lay before your readers the need in this Romish town of a Mission-building suited to the wants of the people in the neighbourhood of the docks. The Salle in the rue Faidherbe, where the McAll réunions are held, is not conveniently situated, and, moreover, is uncomfortable as a place of meeting, owing to the imperfect ventilation. M. Dégremont, the devoted pasteur who has charge of the McAll meetings, will be glad to receive any help which your readers may be disposed to send towards securing such accommodation. His address is 84, Rue de la Colonne, Boulogne-sur-Mer."

AT THE FAIR IN AYRSHIRE, N.B.

In the September number of The Reaper, the organ of the Ayrshire Christian Union, some interesting accounts are given of the Gospel work among the young children at Saltcoats and Dalry by Mr. Mackeith and his helpers. At the latter place there was a novel and memorable open-air meeting on the closing night of their visit. The meetings coincided with the annual fair, when the Cross is crowded with all kinds of travelling shows with their usual paraphernalia, and their varied attractions, glaring lights and hideous din, draw the people together, till—at night especially—the streets are thronged with old and young. It was thought that good might be done by giving these crowds an opportunity of seeing the magic lantern views and listening to the truths they illustrate. This idea was at once taken up, and carried out with great effect. A convenient gable served as a background for the screen, and with the lanterns mounted on a lorry, the evening calm and still, our friends could not have desired a better "cathedral" for their service. Soon over 1500 people gathered around, and listened with hushed attention as Mr. Mackeith briefly explained each view thrown on the canvas, and sought to send home its teaching. We have never attended a more solemn meeting. With the starry heavens above, the voice of the preacher sounding out clear and full, heart-searching, soul-stirring truth, and now and again texts of Scripture or verses of psalms and hymns standing out in wonderful clearness on the screen, a deep and solemn impression rested upon the people, and almost involuntarily their pent-up feelings found expression in such verses as—

"He took me from a fearful pit,
And from the miry clay."

"Sense of sin, and fear of wrath,
Make the burden pilgrim hath."

"Oh! may we stand before the Lamb
When earth and seas are fled."

The impressions made will linger long, we believe, in the memories of all present, and we trust will bear fruit to the glory of God.

THE LATE MR. T. B. SMITHIES.—Mr. G. D. Dowkontt, Superintendent of the New York Medical Mission, and who formerly did a good work in the British Navy, writes to us to say that Mr. Smithies was the first Christian friend who helped him at the outset of his Christian service. He supplied The British Workman for distribution on several of H.M.'s vessels, and this was the beginning of Mr. Dowkontt's work among our sailors.

JEWS IN NEW YORK.

ON Thursday evening, August 30, the Rev. Jacob Freshman gave an interesting address on the "Manners and Customs of the Jews," to a large audience, at 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C. Mr. Freshman leaves Liverpool this day, per the City of Rome, for New York, where he purposes devoting himself to the spread of the Gospel among the Jews of that city, of whom there are 80,000. He takes with him two young Jewish missionaries, who go to help him in his Mission.

Mr. Freshman is deeply grateful for the kindness he has met with in this country, and for the many opportunities he has had of seeing the work of the Lord among the sons of Abraham. He is anxious to purchase a house for his Mission in New York, towards the cost of which many British Christians have kindly contributed. His work is not supported by any Society, and he and his co-workers depend upon God to incline his people to enable him to go on with his service, and desires prayer that Jehovah may be glorified in all the efforts put forth.

FAREWELLS TO MR. F. MURPHY.

ABERDEEN.

THE Temperance folk of Aberdeen assembled in the Royal Albert Hall to bid farewell to Mr. F. Murphy on Thursday evening last. It was estimated that at least 15,000 were present on that occasion—a proof that the Temperance question had not in any measure died out in that city.

The Chairman, Mr. James Paterson, referred with thankfulness to the great blessing Mr. Murphy's visit had been to Aberdeen. About 15,000 had put on the blue ribbon, and 80 per cent. had remained steadfast to Temperance principles.

Mr. Murphy thanked those present for their great kindness to him, and exhorted them to continue in the good work.

DUNDEE.

At this place Mr. Murphy had a pleasing reception at Lamb's Hotel, at which many friends assembled to say "good-bye" to their old friend. One and another bore testimony to the real good done by Mr. Murphy and those who rallied round him in Dundee, the former expressing his hope that they would not lose faith in the power of the Gospel while prosecuting the movement. It was stated that about 3000 adults and 1000 young people were enrolled in the Temperance pledge-books of Dundee.

RICHARD WEAVER IN DUNDEE.

THE services in the tent here have just concluded. They have been the most successful series of meetings ever held in the tent. There was a deep interest manifested in the first meeting, which showed that the Lord had been preparing the soil for the good seed of the kingdom, and this, no doubt, in answer to the prayers of his people. The Word was spoken in power; sinners were faithfully warned to escape from coming wrath, as well as affectionately entreated night after night to come to the Cross.

Our hearts were made glad at the close of each address in seeing so many coming forward acknowledging their need of a Saviour. These were spoken to by the Christian workers, and members went away each evening professing to have put their trust in the Lord. As the crush on Sunday evenings was so great in the tent, we secured the Drill Hall for the last two Sundays, and then very much larger congregations listened to the Word.

On Monday evening a most happy tea-meeting was held in the tent. Addresses were given by Rev. R. Milligan, Mr. Weaver, Mr. Edgar, and others. P. W.

MR. T. E. MURPHY has during the past week been carrying forward the Blue Ribbon warfare in Ballymena, with much energy and success. Letters for him should be addressed to 18, Lombard-street, Belfast.

Notices of Books, &c.

The Life and Work of Luther. By W. Wileman. 1d. 34, Bouverie-street, E.C. This brief sketch of the career of the great German Reformer will no doubt find a ready acceptance at the present time, in view of the "Luther Commemoration."

Messrs. S. Bagster & Sons have issued a very attractive packet of Outline Sunday Pictures for Little Fingers to Colour, designed by Mr. C. R. Birch, A.R.A. (price 6d.). As they are illustrative of Scripture incidents, the youthful artists will gain a deeper acquaintance with the sacred story, while they cultivate a very agreeable accomplishment.

The Temptation of Christ. By Rev. G. S. Barrett. 2s. 6d. Macniven & Wallace. This seems to us a very admirable exposition of a difficult subject. There is so much that is mysterious and unfathomable, to our finite understandings, in the wonderful life of our Lord—at once human and Divine—that unusual caution and reserve become us in seeking to analyse and apply those scriptures that record the Temptation. Mr. Barrett has, we think, safely steered his course between the Scylla of free and speculative handling and the Charybdis of timid or modest neglect, because of the transcending nature of the subject. These chapters are eminently popular in style and practical in aim; their calm perusal cannot but throw added light on their glorious theme, and tend to exalt the Divine Son of Man in the heart and thought of the ardent believer. On a previous page we give a brief extract that will indicate the quality of the book.

The Heavenly Bodies: Their Nature and Habitability. By William Miller, S.S.C., Edinburgh. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Many wonderful facts as to the elements of which the sun, moon, and stars are composed have recently been discovered by means of the spectroscope. The well-known author of "Wintering in the Riviera" here assembles these and other accepted truths, and, viewing the matter not as an astronomer, but as a lawyer, he weighs the evidence pro and con. in a profoundly interesting and instructive manner. His argument is conducted with ability and trenchant vigour, yet in a reverent spirit, and entirely without dogmatism. The result at which he has arrived is that in none of these far-off worlds of which it has been possible to make a spectrum analysis have any conditions been found that are favourable to life, either vegetable or animal, and, above all, to rational life as it exists on this earth. Whether or not every reader may be disposed fully to admit the author's deductions, we feel certain that no one can peruse this handsomely got up volume without real pleasure and profit.

The Ministry of the Beautiful; or, The Christian's Companion for Field and Forest, Sea and Shore. By Rev. B. B. Wale. 3s. 6d. Partridge & Co. This book is a prose poem wherein on every page the beautiful and marvellous in nature is traced upwards to nature's God. "The Woodland Aisles;" "The Dawn of Summer;" "Nature's Minstrelsy;" "The Voice of many Waters;" "The Symbolism of Nature," and many like topics form steps in one grand scale of harmony. It glows, too, with notes of sympathy. The following brief extract will touch a sensitive chord in many hearts: "The tender interest which every rightly ordered mind feels in the frailty of the beautiful, both in nature and art, is akin in character to the sorrow we feel for the loved and the lost. To have laid a strong affection down among the dead may be a great sorrow, but it is not a real misfortune. Whatever the after events of our life may be, there is a deposit for a future life, a stake in the better country, a part for the soul which the grave keeps holy in spite of the evil there is in the world. The living may change towards us, or we towards them: strife may come between us, but through all times and fortunes the dead remain the same to our memory and our love. The child taken from us long ago is still the innocent lamb who was not for our folding; the early-lost friend is still the blessed companion of our youth, a hope not to be withered, a promise not to be broken, a possession in which there is no disappointment." We regret that Mr. Wale should have deemed it necessary to introduce into one of his suggestive chapters several paragraphs that seem to deny the natural immortality of the soul.

SOME SEPTEMBER MAGAZINES.

Our Own Magazine (1d. Morgan & Scott) gives a pretty group engraving of "a few of our Scripture Union members in India."

The pages of The Sentinel (1d. Dyer Bros.) are filled with earnest and weighty utterances on the topic of social purity and righteousness, a cause that owes much to this brave little monthly.

Among the contents of Old Jonathan (1d. Collingridge) we read with much interest the story of how a dog saved the life of a young woman who had thrown herself into the Thames. There is an excellent picture of the "noble and intelligent" beast, from the pencil of Mr. S. T. Dodd.

In the Quiver (6d. Cassell & Co.) we have a judicious and appetising mixture of literary dishes. Rev. A. R. Ruckland wields his pen to good purpose in describing the work of the Thames Church Mission among the navvies at Tilbury Docks. The "Short Arrows" are a very helpful department of the magazine.

When the young readers of Our Darlings (3d. J. F. Shaw & Co.) see the engraving of "Our Home in the Backwoods of Canada," and read the description of it, they will be almost tempted to wish they were London waifs, that they might get transported to such a lovely retreat. The "Prize Tournament" goes on merrily; all cannot get the prizes, but all may increase their knowledge and the power to make use of it; that is better than any prize.

On the Road is the organ of the "Commercial Travellers' Christian Association," published at 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C. This month's number is full of spicy articles well suited for the class it represents, and might be read with profit by any one else. We are glad to find the circulation is increasing. The secretary is just now aiming at placing the Word of God and other good books in hotels for the use of travellers, the libraries so sent out remaining the property of the Association.

In view of the coming "Luther Commemoration," the Sunday at Home (Religious Tract Society) has a discourse by the late Professor Gaussen, of Geneva, on "National Reformation and Personal Revival of Religion." The sketch of Thomas Boston, author of the "Fourfold State," will revive the memories of an ancient Scottish "worthy." The Girls' Own Paper has another very appreciative reference to the work of the "Princess Louise Home," written by Miss Annie Beale. The Cottager and Artizan is a singularly attractive number.

Among the portraits this month in The Welcome (6d. Partridge & Co.) are those of the late Mr. Smithies and Dr. Moffat—both excellent likenesses. The article on the "Monaco Gambling Tables," from a well-known hand, will we trust help in uprooting this sore evil from one of the fairest of Continental resorts. The front page engraving of The Band of Hope Review (same publishers) represents the "Bluecoat Boys at the Mansion House" who would not drink of the Lord Mayor's wine. The British Workman for this month ought to have a large circulation among those that go down to the sea in ships.

Messrs. Cassell and Co.'s Budget furnishes an ample store of material for all classes of bookworms. Dore's Illustrated Bible, Dr. Roberts's Holy Land, Archdeacon Farrar's St. Paul, Bishop Ellicot's Commentary, and The Bible Educator, appeal to the student of sacred history; Old and New London and Greater London have special charms for the antiquarian and contemporary historian. (Why does Mr. Walford omit all reference to Dr. Barnardo's Village Homes, in his sketch of Ilford, in the latter serial?); Our Own Country will feed the flame of patriotism and make the Briton content with his tight little island; The World of Wonders and the People of the World will act as a counterpoise to overweening insularity; the lover of nature and the beautiful will find much satisfying mental food in The Magazine of Art and Familiar Garden Flowers; the house-keeping part of the community ought to read and study Our Homes and how to make them healthy; the literary devotee and the young searcher after knowledge will pay their devoirs to the Concise Cyclopædea and the Popular Educator; while the man who has become wearied of his routine studies or duties will turn with relief to Gleanings from Popular Authors, which, by-the-by, is concluded with the present issue. Not content with past achievements, we observe that this "universal provider" of the literary world is about to launch a new venture—Cassell's Saturday Journal; perhaps it would be best not to commend it till we see a copy.

We have also received the following:—

Books.—From Partridge & Co.: Richard Slade.
From Trubner & Co.: The Jerusalem Bishopric, by Professor W. H. Hahler.
From Religious Tract Society: Present Day Tracts, by R. Payne Smith, D.D.; The Pentateuch, by Rev. R. Wheler Bush, M.A.; Cleopatra's Needle, by Rev. Jas King, M.A.; Present Day Tracts, by various authors.

Magazines.—Footsteps of Truth, Young England, Our Darlings, British Workman, &c., Jewish Herald, British Messenger, Friend of Missions, Our Own Magazine, Sacred Melodist, Preacher's Analyst, Sunday School World, Children's Advocate, Sabbath School Magazine, Sunday School Magazine, Notes for Bible Study, Free Church Monthly, Dr. Adam Clarke's Commentary, Universal Instructor, Rosebud, Hand and Heart, Church Missionary Intelligencer, Evangelical Christendom, Church Standard, Fireside, Home Words, Day of Days, Woman's Work, Christian Church.

Pamphlets, Tracts, and Reports.—Gospel Temperance Stories, Life and Work of Luther, Fancy Fairs, Remarks on Mr. Lilly's Articles, Scripture Beatitudes, Apostolic Succession.

Requests for Prayer.

For myself that I may be converted.——For a fourteen days' Mission at Carluke, N. B., commencing on Sept. 6, by Mr. Spencer Walton.——For blessing to accompany the reading of Gospel texts in local newspapers. The first appears this week.——For a patient who is dying of consumption and cares not to hear of Jesus.——For a mother in ill-health.——For Mission services for children by Mr. Israel Sida, at Bognor.——For a sister who has gone to Droitwich to use the brine waters for rheumatic gout.——For an unbelieving husband and his afflicted wife.——For guidance and temporal support for a tried Christian.——For peace and salvation for troubled, dark Ireland.——For blessing on Mr. George Gillingham's work among hop pickers at Ivy Hatch and neighbourhood.——For the conversion of a son-in-law who has a Christian wife.——For three weeks' Mission at Dundee by Oscar Owers.——For much blessing on meetings to be conducted by John M. Scroggie in Elgin, N.B., from Sept. 9.——For blessing on work among the young people at St. John's Free Church, Southampton.——For two young men leaving England on 15th inst. for Jamaica, for missionary work.——For blessing on and guidance and power in service in France conducted by Lord Radstock.

WALL TEXTS.—A correspondent writes to us suggesting that Christians who go from home for rest and change should procure some plain texts of Scripture, and get their landlady's permission to place them on the walls of the bedrooms, so that they may be able to leave something behind them which may be a means of blessing to those who come after.

GONE HOME.—Rev. Sydney Gedge, M.A., died on the 29th inst., in his 82nd year, at Cromer, Norfolk. Mr. Gedge had been staying there for some weeks, and died very peacefully. He was formerly Fellow of St. Catherine's College, Cambridge, sometime second master in King Edward's School, Birmingham, and late vicar of All Saints, Northampton, and Rural Dean.

BOW.—The Gospel services at Bow, for non-churchgoers, which were so largely attended during the past winter, will be re-commenced by Rev. W. Evans Hurndall, pastor of Harley-street Congregational Chapel, Bow-road, in the great hall of the Bow and Bromley Institute on Sunday, September 9, at 8.15 p.m. Mr. Hurndall will be glad to receive help towards the expenses, which are large.

DEMERARA.—Last July was a time of revival among the Methodists in this colony. Special prayer had been made for an outpouring of blessing, and "on July 8," says a correspondent of The Methodist Recorder, "the work began in earnest at Trinity, when, in response to an appeal, several went into the inquiry-room at the close of the service. During the whole of the week the interest and influence increased. Large congregations assembled each evening, and many seekers found their way into the inquiry-room, where they were spoken and prayed with, and their names and addresses taken. At Kingston, the following week, similar successes followed the use of similar means. Each night there was the blessed sight of penitents before God. All effort and interest concentrated in the Bedford week. Early morning prayer, open-air meetings, and preaching-services each night with crowded congregations, were fruitful in decision. Perhaps the greatest foe to God's work and prosperity in general in the colony is strong drink. Rum-shops are more numerous than public-houses at home. There is much room for real evangelistic and missionary enterprise here."

Home and Foreign Gleanings.

A branch of the Y.M.C.A. has been established at Valparaiso.

With a population of 35,000, Oxford has 319 licensed houses for the sale of intoxicants.

The Protestants of Zacatecas, Mexico, dedicated an old Catholic temple to Protestant worship on July 16 last.

The shares of the Liverpool Cocoa Rooms, which were started eight years ago, are now at 100 per cent. premium.

Lady Bredalbane has established an Orphan Home for Boys at Kenmore, charmingly situated on the banks of Loch Tay.

The London and China Telegraph states that two ladies of the higher class in Siam are coming to England to study medicine.

A ten days' Blue Ribbon Mission is in progress at St. Albans, where a large increase of drunkenness is said to have taken place.

It is reported, but we hope it will prove untrue, that Mr Stanley has closed the navigation of the Upper Congo for general commerce.

Mr. Wm. Tallack, of the Howard Association, writes to The Times advocating the establishment in barracks of reading rooms for soldiers.

On account of the severe competition with the Government schools of France the Protestant churches are said to be gradually giving up their schools from lack of funds.

The Spezia Mission, Italy, has now fourteen stations, twenty sub-stations, twenty-seven workers, six day-schools, six Sunday-schools, a Bible, Tract, and Sailors' Mission.

The American Sunday-school Union, Philadelphia, offers a premium of 1000 dollars for the best book, written for the society, upon "The Obligations and Advantages of the Day of Rest."

The Evangelical Christendom states that every minister elected in the Protestant Church of Geneva since 1874 is either an avowed agnostic or a declared opponent of Christianity.

The Spectator, in a recent issue, declaims in strong terms against the exclusion of the public from many romantic parts of the Scottish Highlands for the purpose of game preservation.

The death is reported of Mr. Henry Thompson, of Ealing, a gentleman who for many years has been a hearty and liberal supporter of various religious and philanthropic societies and enterprises.

Rev. Dr. Happer, of Canton, writes that the reports at the late meeting of the Synod of China, at Shanghai, showed an increase of members of the Presbyterian churches of nearly 100 per cent. in the last five years.

The licensing magistrates of one of the divisions of Cheshire have produced much consternation among the publicans by announcing that next year they will refuse licences in every case where a fresh application would not be granted.

At the Congress Hall, Clapton, last week, a monster meeting of the Salvation Army was held, when Mr. Bramwell Booth "presented colours" to 500 newly-made "sergeants." Mr. Booth said the Grecian Theatre had not been given up.

Owing to an adverse vote in the Victorian Parliament, the Art Gallery of Melbourne, which had for some months been opened on the Lord's Day, has been closed. The Southern Cross thinks it will not be opened again this generation on the Day of Rest.

Two young ladies, members of the St. John's Wood congregation, and devoted teachers in the Mission School, Pembroke-road, Kilburn, are about to proceed to China as workers in connection with the Women's Mission of the Presbyterian Church of England.

A special sub-committee has been nominated by the General Committee at Exeter Hall, for the purpose of concerting measures whereby work amongst young men in London may receive due consideration on the occasion of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's visit.

A correspondent of The Daily Chronicle states that there are about £12,000,000 annually consumed in Ireland in intoxicating liquors, and without any other return as far as those are concerned who drink them than an increase of pauperism, criminals, and demoralisation of all kinds.

Switzerland, it is reported, has taken the initiative in an attempt to establish a system of international arbitration The Swiss overtures have been favourably received by the United States, Honduras, and Colombia, and the negotiations will be watched with interest both in the Old World and the New.

The Canterbury Music Hall was visited by a crowd of at least 3000 persons on Sunday week, when Rev. W. Williams, of Upton Chapel, Lambeth, conducted the closing service. The services have exceeded the most sanguine expectations of Mr. Williams and his friends, great masses of people visiting them who seldom, if ever, attend any place of worship.

In connection with the hearing of a recent case, the magistrate at the Marylebone Police-court said there would not be one half the drunkenness in the neighbourhood if the public-houses were properly conducted. The prisoner appeared to have gone into the house drunk and to have remained there drinking for half an hour. If the police did their duty it would be put a stop to.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Philadelphia has for a long time been labouring under a crushing 400,000 dollars debt, arising from the new and fine building on Chestnut-street. Through the efforts of Mr. Wanamaker and a few other men, assisted by Mr. Moody, arrangements have been made for the funding of 200,000 dollars at a very low rate of interest, while the remainder has been raised by subscription.

PUBLIC-HOUSE WORK.—The London City Mission Magazine for this month gives some striking evidence of the good which is being done by visiting the metropolitan public-houses. The conversations detailed in many cases indicate the uneasiness which the patent evils of "the trade" produce in the minds of those engaged in it. The expressions of gratitude for the visits of the missionary and the real results of his labours are causes for thankfulness. The office of the Mission is 3, Bridewell-place, New Bridge-street, E.C.

Mission Appeals.

WESTERN HOSPITAL, TORQUAY.—This hospital receives patients in the early stages of consumption. If a county raises £20 per annum, any number of patients can be sent from that county, as space permits, by each procuring a nominator's ticket, which costs two guineas. The chaplain, Rev. J. A. Jamieson, makes an urgent appeal for funds to pay off a debt of £470, and also for continued support of so excellent an institution. Communications may be addressed to Mr. W. DALLEY, 4, Somerset-place, Ellacombe, Torquay, or to Mr. JAMIESON.

HOME FOR FOREIGN GOVERNESSES, BRIGHTON.—In consequence of the death of Pasteur A. Gonin, the resolution had been come to that this valuable institution, so mainly dependent on him, must be closed. The great regret that was expressed by many, and the generous promise of help for the present moment which has been given, encourages a hope that it may be possible still to carry on the work. The affairs of the Home during the last year had been in every way encouraging, and the expectation was that it would soon be self-supporting. This appeal is made with the hope that it may meet the eye of some who will come forward and save this much valued Home from being given up at Christmas, by undertaking to act on its behalf. Communications may be addressed to Miss WHYTT, 8, Sillwood-place, Brighton.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK

LETTER from REV. J. W. ATKINSON, 308, Old Ford-road, Bow, E.

"DEAR MR. CONGREVE,—I am pleased to bear my testimony to the value and efficacy of your medicine. Remarkable cases of restoration through its means are continually coming before me. One young person (Jones) has recently been brought from the brink of the grave to the enjoyment of comparative health and vigour."

LETTER from Rev. H. ROE (P.M. Minister).

Mr. Roe, from Sutton, Macclesfield, visited me in the Autumn of last year. Examined by Dr. Brown: right lung somewhat affected.

Writing me, June 13, he says: "I took your medicine, and followed your advice, and went a sea trip up the Mediterranean. I am now, thank God, enjoying good health."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

The Things that God Uses.

AN ADDRESS TO CHRISTIANS.

By D. L. MOODY.

"People say they have no strength; but the trouble is that they have too much. It is when we become as nothing, and are emptied of our own strength, that God can take us up and make use of us. He will do the work, and He shall have the glory."—Extract.

BOOKS FOR ENQUIRERS AND CONVERTS.

Young Converts;

Or, Beginners in Zion's Ways. By Rev. R. BOYD, D.D. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

"I have been continually asked by young converts where they could get a book in which they might find advice that would be helpful to them. This book seemed just the thing needed at this time. I have known the author, Rev. Dr. Boyd, for many years as a dear father in Israel. I have read his work carefully, and recommend it to all young Christians for prayerful meditation." D. L. Moody

The Way of Life.

A Book for Enquirers. By Rev. ROBERT BOYD, D.D. Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth Boards, 1s.

"About fifteen years ago this little book attracted my notice. I read it with interest, and felt so much profited that I re-read it several times, and then circulated hundreds of copies among the soldiers during the American war. The number that then seemed blessed through reading the book has induced me to ask Messrs. Morgan & Scott to republish it, hoping that it may be the means of good in this country, as it has been in America." D. L. Moody

All About Jesus.

Thoughts and Reflections on the Person and Work of Christ. By ALEXANDER DICKSON. This book was printed at the express desire of Mr. D. L. MOODY. Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, 2s. 6d.

"The volume sets forth Jesus very much in Scriptural language, for we have counted over 1340 passages of Holy Writ, chastely and lovingly interwoven in the discourses. Throughout, Jesus is the subject of delightful meditation, affection, and adoration."
The Methodist.

Addresses to Young Men.

By Rev. DANIEL BAKER. With Preface by D. L. MOODY. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

"These discourses were designed to be of an awakening character. They were preached (in substance) in numerous revivals, and were blessed to the hopeful conversion of many precious souls, of whom some fifty or more have become ministers of the Gospel. May He who was pleased to bless these discourses when they came from the pulpit, bless them also now." AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

BOOKS SUITABLE FOR BIBLE STUDENTS AND TEACHERS.

Published by MORGAN & SCOTT.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE

To the Old and New Testaments. Handsomely bound in cloth, price 7s.6d.

POPULAR EDITION, CLOTH, FIVE SHILLINGS.

THE SPECIAL FEATURE in this Edition is the NEW TRANSLATION, Revision, and Extension of the PROPER NAMES of the OLD and NEW TESTAMENTS, with their Meanings in the Original Languages. By Rev. ALFRED JONES, M.A., Author of "The Proper Names of the Old Testament Scriptures, Expounded and Illustrated."

CHRIST LIFTED UP.

Meditations on the Death, Resurrection, and Ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ. By Rev. ROBERT GILCHRIST. Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"An earnest, practical exhibition of the Gospel under a variety of aspects. Christ lifted up on the cross, and at the Father's right hand, is the grand theme, and affords scope for setting forth a wide range of Gospel teaching. The writer does this in an interesting, while simple style."—British Messenger.

"Old-fashioned divinity presented in a pleasing form. May its readers be many."—Sword and Trowel.

THE GOSPEL IN LEVITICUS.

Chapters on the Old Testament Foreshadowings of the Great Redemption. By the late Rev. Dr. FLEMING, of Kentish Town. Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"The subject is set forth with a clearness, a directness, and a persuasiveness which leave little to be desired Every lover of sound Scriptural theology, especially in regard to the momentous doctrine of the Atonement, will find in the book a rich treat."—Baptist Magazine.

JOHN, WHOM JESUS LOVED.

Sketch of the Character, Writings, Theology, and Influence of the Beloved Disciple. New and Enlarged Edition. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. With Chromo-Lithographic Views of the "Sea of Galilee" and the "Island of Patmos." Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d.

"It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."—Sword and Trowel.

"THY FIRST LOVE."

Christ's Message to Ephesus. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. With Chromo-Lithographic Frontispiece. Cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"It is a heart-searching and stimulating little book."

British Quarterly Review.

"Its language is chaste and clear; its thoughts are fresh and invigorating; its tone is evangelical without being sentimental. While there is a genial warmth of devout feeling, there runs through its pages a healthy breeze of robustness."—Literary World.

BEHOLD, I STAND AT THE DOOR & KNOCK.

Christ's Message to Laodicea. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. Tinted Covers, 1s; cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"The exposition is fresh and original, displaying great critical skill and discrimination, together with happy quotations of Scripture. The style is all that could be desired—chaste and polished, yet full of force; here and there, as in the author's other works, we meet with passages of great poetic beauty."

Aberdeen Daily Press.

THE NUMBER "SEVEN" IN SCRIPTURE.

Compiled by S. A. BLACKWOOD, Esq., C.B. Paper Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d. Presentation Edition, Cloth Boards, Bevelled, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

"Many other attempts have been made in tabulating the circumstances connected with the word "seven" in the Bible, but we cannot think of any one which is so complete, so concise, and so systematic as in the small volume compiled by Mr. Blackwood. From Genesis i. to Rev. xxii. all the many times the word occurs are [illegible]ted, and each book is dealt with seriatim, so that reference is easy. One object of the book is "to stimulate search and to arouse inquiry," and with this book by the side of the Bible one course of study can be made very profitable indeed."—The Rock.

SEARCHING THE SCRIPTURES

In order to abiding Communion with God. Also, Suggestions for Bible Reading and Study, and a Plan for Consecutive Daily Reading. By Dr. ANDERSON. Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d. Second Edition.

"Whether viewed as an analysis of the whole Bible, or as a plan for its daily perusal, or as a directory to the spirit and intention with which it should be studied, it is equally judicious and complete. The one design of the whole Scriptures is kept in view throughout."—Sword and Trowel.

CHRIST AND THE SCRIPTURES.

By Rev. Dr. ADOLPH SAPHIR. Cheap Edition.—Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth, Limp, 1s. 6d. Superior Edition.—Cloth, Elegant, 3s.; with Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"This book is original. Dr. Saphir has the power of originating and combining, which is the mark of genius. It is the old truths to which we listen; but the old truths clothed in a living language, set in new lights, and drawn out in fresh applications."—Weekly Review.

BIBLE READINGS BY HENRY MOORHOUSE.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.

"We do not wonder that those who heard Moorhouse's Bible Readings found them full of power and suggestion. To him the Word of God was a sword—the only one worth using in spiritual warfare."—Liverpool Courier.

"This volume will be heartily welcomed by not only workers in the field, but by all who love to study the Divine Word. A careful reading must stimulate moral seriousness and earnest service for Christ."—Christian Commonwealth.

THE SURE MERCIES OF DAVID;

or, God's Dealings in the Sanctuary. By ANNA SHIPTON. Best Edition, toned paper, Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 4s. 6d. Cheap Edition, Cloth neat, 2s. 6d.

"This is a well-written volume of spiritual instruction, interspersed with interesting narratives, from the able pen of Mrs. SHIPTON. It is well worthy of a wide circulation, especially amongst members of Christian congregations, Sunday-school teachers and scholars."—Free Press.

NOTES FOR BIBLE READINGS.

A Collection of over Six Hundred Subjects, carefully compiled and arranged. Suitable for Bible Readings, Cottage Lectures, Sermons, Addresses, Sabbath-school Lessons, &c. Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d. A cheap edition may also be had in tinted covers, 2s. 6d.

"A book which every Bible student should possess. It will be of special value to the class teacher, and an assistance also to the preacher. It supplies valuable matter for private meditation, and those who conduct Bible Readings will find it most suggestive."—Christian Progress.

THE KINGSLAND GOSPEL MISSIONS IN EAST LONDON.

THE PROPOSED NEW HALL NEAR OLD FORD.

A Special Appeal. Who will help?

FROM the almost entire suspension of help for the above proposed Hall for many weeks, we have not yet felt justified to proceed with its erection. The builders are anxious to save what remains of fine open weather before the dark days, and we are sorely tried to be compelled to remain in our present small temporary premises (a close shop and private rooms). Under these trying circumstances, E. B., an old friend of our work, anxious to effectually promote these endeavours, gladly offers £50 providing eleven others would give a like amount; or say twenty-two gave £25 each: making altogether the £600 yet required to complete and furnish. Promises in reply to E. B.'s offer, or the smallest sums, would be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, Mr. W. WARD, 211, Southgate-road, N.; or by the General Superintendent, Mr. WM. CHORLEY, 79, Norfolk-road, Islington, N.

Sept. 8, 1883.

M. A. L., kindly promises £25. Further replies are earnestly invited.

THE "ONE TUN" RAGGED SCHOOL MISSION (formerly the "One Tun" (Thieves') Public House, Old Pye-street, Westminster), for training the children (boys and girls) of the destitute classes for service. Above 200 children, between the ages of 3 and 13, are in the Schools. Sixty-seven are in situations in and near London. Plain needlework and cookery taught. Mothers' Meetings. Wednesday mid-day Prayer Meeting. Band of Hope. Sabbath Band. Gospel Temperance Meetings. Men's Bible Class. Sunday-evening Mission Services. Open Air Meeting. Working Lads' Institute. Bible-woman visits all connected with the Mission. Blind Evangelist, &c. Special Fund of £500 required, if the Lord will. £96 received. The smallest donations will be thankfully received by Mrs. A. BARKER HARRISON, Hon. Secretary, 78, Coleshill-street, Eaton-square, S.W.

GEORGE YARD RAGGED SCHOOL, &c., Whitechapel, E.

GEORGE HOLLAND thankfully acknowledges receiving from Mrs. S., a parcel of clothing.

M. B.—We shall be very thankful for the remnants and patchwork.

Industrial Classes for Lads.

We shall be glad of the assistance of friends willing to teach any industrial pursuit on Thursday Evenings.

T. T.—Yes, anything to amuse and instruct the Lads (upon which we can ask God's blessing) will be acceptable.

Friends are invited to visit the Institution any day but Saturday.

Post Office Orders should be made payable at 66, High-street, Whitechapel, E. Letters and Parcels should be addressed to GEORGE HOLLAND, The Ragged Schools, George-yard, High-street, Whitechapel, London, E.

MRS. WILKES begs to thank R. W. P. for 5s.; M. P. W. for a parcel by Post. Any clothing most thankfully received, as she has a number of young women going out to service now.

The Elms, Coppermill-lane, Walthamstow.

HOLINESS AND FAITH-HEALING MEETINGS.

TRINITY CHURCH, Triangle, Mare-street, Hackney, London.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

Supported by Voluntary Contributions.

President—

The Right Hon. the EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.G.

Established 1822, for the purpose of employing humble Christian men, well versed in the Scriptures, to visit from house to house throughout the country, and visit all denominations. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required. The work is carried on in a spirit of love.

Subscriptions or Donations will be thankfully received by the Secretary, Capt. KEARNEY WHITE, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin; or at 9, Paternoster-row, London.

The Earl of Shaftesbury says in his last letter to the Secretary:—Many thanks for your kind letter, and many thanks to Almighty God for the good intelligence you give me about your Scripture Readers in Ireland. I wish I could more effectively assist you. Your letter is the best thing that I have seen or heard from Ireland.

I enclose my donation, and only wish it was more.—Yours, SHAFTESBURY

N.B.—Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not as "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

A SALE of Useful, Fancy, and Ornamental Work will (D.V.) be held at the Public Hall, Clevedon, on Thursday, November 22, 1883, and following days if necessary, on behalf of Christ Church, Clevedon Convalescent Home. Gifts of money or work will be gratefully received by the LADY SUPERINTENDENT, Belmont, Highdale-road, or by the Rev. E. FORBES, Elmhurst, Clevedon, and should reach them not later than Monday, November 19, 1883.

MENTAL AND PHYSICAL MALADIES:
THEIR CAUSE AND CURE.

The favourite prescriptions for Nervous and General Debility include protoxide of iron, and various tonics and stimulants. Drugs are not adapted to such a state of things, and therefore a more subtle chemistry must be brought to the aid of the enfeebled and negative state of the system. Ordinary drugs may stimulate organic action, remove obstruction, and give temporary relief. An emetic empties the stomach; a cathartic excites intestinal action; an opiate dulls the brain into insensibility. Skilfully administered, such medicines may mitigate an attack, or help through a crisis, or for a time remove any local impediment to a healthy condition, but stimulants and tonics are often powerless in a case of nervous exhaustion, when whipping the flagging energies can only be followed by a corresponding depression. Only the gentle energies of nature can restore vital energy. How often are these natural restoratives prescribed, as the last, if not the only hope of an enfeebled patient! The ozone of the sea, the free electricity of the mountain air, generally contribute to the health and comfort of the invalid; but, as we often find, a return to former circumstances, or the recurrence of the seasons, brings a return of the symptoms; so that really there is no improvement of health, but it was merely the improved conditions which were effectual for the time. Such means must often be resorted to again and again to prolong life, whereas an efficient application of Odo-Magnetic influence has frequently rendered such changes unnecessary, and not only relieved symptoms, but restored a healthy condition by its life-infusing and exhilarating qualities.

Under a judicious Magnetic influence, the renewed force of will manifests itself by the body assuming an erect attitude, and the person exhibiting the consciousness of increased strength. The breathing becomes full and deep, and the whole body shows renewed vigour. These effects, however, are but the secondary results. The potent efficacy of Magnetic influence has corrected the mental and physical depression underlying the symptoms of bo ily exhaustion, so that even in extreme case (incurable cases) a mental composure and manifest power of endurance become strikingly apparent.

From Mr. H. BEELS, HILL HOUSE, HAMPTON, Mid.

"I am delighted to inform you that I have derived great benefit already from your Magnetic treatment. Since adopting it, I have not had that dull, lazy feeling that troubled me, nor that faintness I described. I have woke in the morning much fresher, and ready for work, and have lost the inclination to sleep in the daytime.

"I am delighted most that I am able to go about my duties with more zeal and real pleasure, and I desire humbly to thank God and yourself for this deliverance.

"I do not consider the treatment has had time to fully operate; so, after a little time, I will give you a further report."

Mr. Garratt will always be happy to confer with any scientific or medical gentleman, either personally or by letter, upon any phase of the subject, or any case for treatment, and will send a private list of 850 names as referees to any address.—B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

CLOUDS.

WHEN writing the article on "Sunshine," that appeared in our columns last week, we did not expect that the bright and genial weather we were then enjoying would so soon give place to storms, and clouds laden with rain. If this had been foreseen, perhaps we might have written less cheerfully, and our spirits have been less buoyant and hopeful. Scarcely had we parted with our little homily before dark clouds gathered in the sky, heavy rains began to fall, and furious gales, destined to cause distress on sea and land, commenced to blow.

Yet we ought not to have been less thankful for the weeks of sunshine which preceded the storms. The tendency of our degenerate nature, as we have often proved, is to forget mercy when judgment is nigh. It is a distinguishing mark of grace when we can sing of mercy and of judgment both, when we can bless the Lord at all times, believing that He is in cloud and storm as well as in sunshine and calm. It is a lesson many of us need increasingly to learn, that we have as good ground for trusting God in the dark as in the light, and may find as much cause for praise and thankfulness in the hour of trial as in the day of prosperity. Happy those who, like the Prophet Habakkuk, can say, "Although the fig-tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labour of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls; yet I will rejoice in the Lord, and will joy in the God of my salvation." It is a noble attainment, and a blessed experience when we can be inwardly tranquil amid howling winds and raging storms, knowing that we are anchored in the Rock of Ages, and sheltered in the hand of Him who—

> "Rides upon the stormy sky,
> And manages the seas."

In spite of all we may then be writing still our songs of praise, and directing them as the Prophet did to the chief singer on our stringed instruments.

Why should clouds, dark and heavy though they be, prevent our joy or disturb our confidence? Clouds have a twofold aspect, bright as well as dark, although men do not always see the bright light which is in them. The voice of the Lord, speaking in tones of grace and love, is heard from out of the cloud as well as in the sunshine. The disciples on the Mount of Transfiguration feared as they entered the cloud which overshadowed them, but we are told that the cloud was a bright one, and that a voice came out of it, which said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye Him." And in the midst of that overshadowing it was that Jesus touched them, and said, "Arise, and be not afraid." Was it not out of the cloud that God spake to Israel of old from day to day, and were they not led through all their journey by the cloud, the Lord going before them in the midst of it? As the Psalmist says, "He spake unto them in the cloudy pillar, they kept his testimonies, and the ordinance that He gave them." Yes, clouds may serve to bring us nearer God than we could possibly be without them. God said to Moses and Aaron, "I will appear in the cloud upon the mercy-seat;" and when He communed with his people from thence, it was out of the same cloud He shone into their hearts, and illumined their minds with the light of his infinite wisdom and truth.

True the clouds oftentimes bring trouble and sorrow in their train. During the last few days many a hapless vessel has encountered the fury of the storm, and hardy mariners have found a watery grave. On the land some of the hopes kindled by the sunshine of the closing weeks of August have been disappointed by the darkness of the early days of September; but, on the other hand, the heavy rains with which these storms were charged have proved highly beneficial. In some districts the grass fields had become bare and brown, the root crops were suffering from drought, and everywhere, except for thoroughly ripened produce, moisture was greatly needed. Should fine weather again set in, as we may trust it may, good rather than evil must result from the cloudy visitation. Not unmixed good, not good perhaps to all, but good generally and in the aggregate. Even amid the wreck and ruin wrought at sea there are some set-offs to the sadness and gloom which has been occasioned. The very winds which have driven some vessels nearing the coast-line to destruction, have served to hasten on their way others on the open sea, and while some, alas! have perished, others sing their songs of deliverance, and have seen the loving-kindness of God and his wonders on the deep. So long as sin reigns in the world, and the powers of darkness rage under the guidance of the "Prince of the power of the air," unmixed good cannot prevail, evil as well as good must be beheld, and mysteries of Providence be mixed with its manifest mercies. Hence, full often, what brings weal to one, is laden with woe to another. But it behoves us to look, as far as possible, beyond the narrow bounds of private interests, personal requirements, and merely local incidents, and to see how, over all the intricate and perplexing scenes of life, there is a superintending power which is controlling events, and causing cloud and sunshine both to bring their modicum of good.

We may profitably lay to heart two or three lessons suggested by the recent change from sunshine to cloud, and the consequences which have resulted therefrom. Let us take first the grand lesson that clouds without need not prevent sunshine within. Trials may and must chasten the spirit, and sometimes sober the joy of the soul, but if faith be in exercise it will show us the silver lining of the cloud as well as its dark exterior. The sun shines above and behind the cloud, and a Father's love is not lessened, or a Saviour's grace withheld, because for a time the brightness of our outward circumstances is obscured. All the same the purposes of God are being worked out, the care and love of God are being exercised, and He who "giveth songs in the night," is at hand to sustain and cheer.

> "Mountains by the darkness hidden,
> Are as real as in the day;
> Be, then, unbelief forbidden,
> In a dreary hour to say:
> God hath left us,
> Oh, why hath He gone away?"

Walking on the waves, speaking louder than the storm, the believer may ever hear and see One who says, "It is I, be not afraid." And so discerning his presence, while without all is dark and drear, within, the sun shines with genial warmth and radiant light.

Again, in the midst of sunshine it is wise to prepare for storms. One of the saddest incidents connected with our seaport annals is that recorded last week concerning the wreck of the barque G. J. Jones off the Cornish coast. When help was needed, and the lifeboat summoned, instead of being ready for service, a hole was found in its side, some of its crew also were the worse for drink, so that before this only hope of safety could be sent to the rescue, it became too late for its employment to be possible. Thus precious lives were sacrificed to the negligence of those who ought to have seen to it that all was ready for the time of need. Has it not been so with us in other spheres of duty and experience? Trusting to the sunshine we have forgotten the possible approach of clouds, and resting on our frames and feelings rather than on the God of grace, whose love has granted us the long-continued season of peace and joy, we have been unprepared when testing times have come. It is written, "The ants are a people not strong, yet they prepare their meat in the summer," and because of this they are said to be "exceeding wise."

Yet we must not be always looking at the clouds, or expecting the storms, so as to be hindered in our enjoyment of the sunshine, or deterred from making the best possible use of it. "He that observeth the wind shall not sow; and he that regardeth the clouds shall not reap." As Matthew Henry says: "If the husbandman should decline, or leave off sowing for the sake of every flying cloud, and reaping for the sake of every blast of wind, he would make but an ill account of his husbandry at the year's end." While prepared for storms, let us all the same rejoice in the sunshine, then shall we, with hearts tuned for praise, cheer the hour of darkness with the song of hope.

Once more, let us bear in mind clouds are not the perpetual law of nature, nor are we always to dwell in a land where they are requisite to the economy which prevails. Here they are often necessary, and so are beneficently sent, as well as sometimes permitted to unseasonably and even disastrously appear, but of the land to which we go, we may say with certainty,

> "No clouds e'er pass along its sky,
> Happy land!
> No tear-drops glisten in the eye,
> Happy land!
> They drink the living streams of grace,
> And gaze upon the Saviour's face,
> Whose brightness fills the holy place;
> Happy land!"

Well may we, with such a prospect in view, rejoice even in tribulation, and walk with firmness even in the midst of darkness and gloomy surroundings. Perhaps the reader is now experiencing one of the cloudy and dark days which are appointed to us all more or less as we journey through life, and maybe is tempted to despair, or sit alone in sadness and despondency. If so, child of sorrow, lift up thy head, look through the clouds; it may be like peering into the thick darkness, but nevertheless look, employing well the eye of faith, and lo! thou shalt see that the clouds are shifting, the storm breaking, and the light yet shining strong and clear. Soon thou shalt pass out of the region of shade into the cloudless light, and learn that He, whose "faithfulness" and "truth reacheth to the clouds," and who "hath his way in the whirlwind and the storm," hath had thee in his keeping, and has but been training thee for "the perfect day."

"The Christian" Pulpit.

HOW JESUS WINS SOULS.

By Rev. CHARLES GARRETT.

"He must needs go through Samaria."—Jno. iv. 4.

THE text is full of blessed meaning, and contains not merely instruction and stimulus to the Church, but a wealth of mercy that ought to drive unbelief away from every seeking soul. There is our Lord on his way to Samaria. It is a long journey. It was forty miles from Jerusalem, but He looks across that distance. He sees a poor lost soul. He sees there is no hope for that soul unless He goes, and He who always works on a plan "must needs go through Samaria." What are we to learn from this? Two things: first, the value of a single soul; secondly, how to win souls.

I.—THE VALUE OF A SINGLE SOUL.

This is a lesson we all need to learn, and if we learn it, it will have a most beneficial influence upon our own experience. One of our constant dangers is that of losing ourselves in a crowd. Do not you feel it yourself, do not you see it in others—the danger of losing yourself in a crowd? Ah! it is comparatively easy to believe that God cares for us all, but hard work to believe that He cares as constantly for me as if there were not another person in the world; such easy work to believe that Christ died for us all, but hard work to believe that "He loved me, and gave Himself for me." Let a man get to understand that he is of more value than all the stars of heaven, and he will realise at once his true dignity.

A belief in this glorious fact would regenerate the world. Look at the masses round about us. They are saying, "No man careth for my soul." This lesson, the value of a single soul, will affect our conduct to others. Here, again, we lose the individual in the mass. I have been to convention after convention, where I heard the topic discussed: How to reach the masses. I have never yet heard the topic suggested: How to reach a single soul. We want the world to be saved, but we overlook the fact that the world is made up of individuals. But we need to learn the lesson that it is the individual we are to seek after, that we may save him. Christ comes to teach us that lesson, the value of a single soul. Some of us would be willing to make a sacrifice, and go and preach a sermon, if it were certain that we should have a thousand to hear us, but how would it be if somebody told us there would only be half a dozen, and the storm was high and the snow was deep? The Sunday-school teacher, a young lady, perhaps, on a hot Sunday afternoon, with loving friends about her, and everything bright at home, may excuse herself and say, "I dare say there will only be a few there," and so she forsakes the post of duty.

I want you to see the value of a single soul. Christ preached his most glorious sermon to a single soul—to Nicodemus, who came not when the sun was shining, but under the shadow of the night, and talked with Jesus; so we have that glorious sermon which we have rejoiced over ever since. And here we have the woman of Samaria, a single soul. There were long weary miles to walk, but across that distance He went till at Jacob's well He was waiting to receive her. What! walked! when legions of angels were ready to carry Him? Yes, but if legions of angels had borne Him thence there would have been no example to you and me. No angels come down to bear us to our appointments. He left us an example that we should walk in his steps. I see Him yonder going over the hot sands, and He was weary; yes, our Divine Lord was weary, and all to reach and save a single soul. Ah! you say, but there was perhaps something special about that soul. There was, but it was something especially repulsive, and not specially attractive. I am glad that there was not anything attractive about that woman, for if there had been there would have been no encouragement to you or me. No, there was everything repulsive about her.

She belonged to a bad family to begin with—a Samaritan devil—for whoever heard of a good thing out of Samaria? Then she was born in the midst of idolatry. And she was not only a member of a bad family, but she was a bad specimen of a bad family. You often find flowers where you do not expect them, and good sons and daughters coming out of bad families. But this woman was a bad specimen of a bad family; her mind dark, her heart hard, her soul guilty, and so degraded in her very position in life that she had not a waiting-maid to go and fill her cistern; she was the poor slave of merciless tyrants, with nothing at all attractive about her. But, thank God, when I see this bad specimen of a bad family, and when I see my Saviour walking for five long hours to save her, I feel there is hope for everybody. The value of a single soul! Would that our people would understand the value of the individual.

This is such a sensational age that we can do nothing unless on a large scale. Somebody says, "Well, we had one brought in last night." "Ah!" says another, "you are in a poor, cold state." Yes, but that one may ultimately be of vast value to the Church. Under Christ's teaching this single soul became a glorious woman, winning the whole city to love the Saviour. The one thing I want to impress upon you is the importance of looking after the individual—the servant-girl, the waif, the dock labourer, the policeman. "Ah!" said a poor fellow, a policeman, to me the other day, "nobody ever says anything good to me." Would to God instead of wanting this blare and sound of trumpets, you would give yourselves to the saving of your friends and homes! It is a more glorious thing to save a servant girl than to die a millionaire. Will you remember, my poor trembling friend, who think that you are nobody and nothing, that you are of more value than the brightest jewel in England's crown, or the most magnificent mansion which you pass on your way to chapel? Understand this, that God is caring for you, loving you, longing for you, and wanting to put you amongst his sons and daughters.

(2) He must needs go through Samaria to teach us

HOW TO WIN SOULS.

Souls, if they are to be saved, must be won. You cannot coerce a man into Christ's Church; you cannot coerce a man into heaven. God has no slaves in his family. Every man on the road to heaven chose to go. I hear some of our young ladies sometimes singing—

> 'The heart is a free and a fetterless thing,
> It mocks at all bonds and scorns the decree
> Of the world and its wise ones, and dares to be free.

It is so. Every man has the terrible power of choice. Every man can say "No" to God and "Yes" to the devil. And when God comes to us He comes to win the soul. "God commendeth his love to us." He does not roll out his thunders in our ears, or flash his lightnings upon our eyes: He woos. As our beautiful hymn-book says, "He stoops to ask our love." He begs, He stands at the door and knocks. He does not coerce, He does not batter in the door. He stands till his locks are wet with the dews of the morning—waiting, waiting, waiting, waiting for you. Oh! what an era in a man's life when he knows the love God has for him, when he holds up the sun-glass of faith and gathers in all the rays of God's love and says, "He loved me and gave Himself for me." Then there comes the glad response—

> "Take my soul and body's powers;
> Take my memory, mind, and will,
> All my goods and all my hours,
> All I know, and all I feel,
> All I think, or speak, or do;
> Take my heart—but make it new!"

And as good old John Bunyan says, he lays all the keys of Mansoul at the feet of his Conqueror, and cries, "I am his and He is mine to all eternity." And thus you are won and you are serving God, and you would serve Him infinitely better if you could. There is not an archangel that should serve Him as well as you if you had the power.

> "More shouldst thou have, if I had more."

And now it is the Church's business, it is every Christian's business, to win souls. Oh! what folly it was on the part of Rome to fancy that they could make Christians by the rack and the thumbscrew and the heated furnace and the fires of Smithfield. You cannot make Christians that way. We must win. We must not go with a band of soldiers to apprehend men; we must win them. How is this to be done? When Christ was on the point of departure to heaven He told his disciples to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. To every creature. Mind that: go to every creature, and follow that every creature, and follow him everywhere, in order that you may win him for Me. Now, how is this to be done? It is clear of people around us that they do not know God and do not love Him. If they knew Him they would love Him. It is the Christian's duty to go and tell them about God. There are multitudes in our own land who do not know God, and God wants you to tell them about Him, and their relation to Him.

First, Jesus goes to meet the woman. That meant walking for five long hours. But He walked. Christ always goes to meet sinners, and He always goes more than halfway. There He is at the well. He has walked more than five hours, and that woman has walked a mile and a half. They are at the well. He is there first. We often keep Him waiting, but He never keeps us waiting. He went to meet the woman. Some people are very anxious indeed for the conversion of men and women, but do not go to meet them. They pray for the conversion of the world. But when you ask them to do something to bring it about, they say, "I pray thee have me excused." Oh, how they pleaded with God for the conversion of souls. They said it was with God; but I do not believe it. If you ask them to take a class at a Sunday-school, they say they have no tact with children. If you ask them to take a tract district, they say they do not like to go in and out amongst the poor. "Well, then, there's the Band of Hope. Surely you can find something to do there!" But they say that they do not know that teetotalism is right. And so they evade the duty and lose the honour which God has set before them. We say let the people come to chapel. But the Master said, Go. We have a capital preacher. All right. We have a splendid chapel. All right. We have beautiful singing. All right. We have there a few gentlemen standing at the door to welcome visitors, and yet they do not come. But have you gone to them? You invert the order. You expect the people to come; but Christ said, Go to them. "Ah!" said a poor fellow in the winter, when he was converted to God, "I have got a cousin somewhere in Liverpool, and I must find him out and tell him what a wonderful Saviour Jesus is." Well, to do that he would have to lose half a day's work; but he said he would rather lose a whole day than that his cousin should lose his soul. Christ goes to meet the woman, and you must go to meet the sinner, and every step you take you put in the footprints of Jesus. He goes to meet her, and, then—

Secondly, He removes all obstacles out of the way. What obstacles? First of all, the disciples. Why, you say, surely they would not be obstacles. But here was a Samaritan woman. And do you think that that woman would have talked with Christ with a dozen Jews around her? She would have cursed the whole lot. And so Christ said to the disciples, "You go away; I have other work to do." My friends, is there no lesson there? There is. You go to visit a sick person. You are asked into the bedroom. Ask everybody to leave the room. Send the disciples away. There is a man there with an aching heart. And how can he open it with a whole roomful of people all ear and mouth? His heart is big with some great family trouble that is nearly crushing him, and he wants to be alone. When you go to visit the sick, do as doctors do, ask everyone to leave the room. I have known ministers talk to a father about his sins in the presence of his wife and children. And that has roused all his anger. I have known ministers talk to a son about his sins before his father and mother, and the devil laughed at them. Get them alone; send the disciples away.

And next He brings the woman to the well, where He was. Yes, she must meet with Christ or she cannot be saved. And no man was ever saved who did not meet with Christ. Remember you will never be a Christian until you have had a personal interview with Christ, and received the word of pardon from his own lips. Christ brings the woman to the well. Thank God for this wonderful narrative. But how does He bring her? He has a thousand ways to foolish man unknown. Will you remember in days to come that the God of grace is the God of providence, that the hand that was nailed to the Cross grasps the sceptre of the universe? Providence is at work to bring the woman to the well. How? If Christ had sent one of his disciples to fetch her she would not have come. The empty water-pot could do what all the disciples could not do. And so the poor woman starts for the well. Bunyan says she could not see what was before her or she would have sung all the way. She did not see the hand that was leading her. For that empty water-pot she was to have a full heart, for her bitter tears songs of joy.

And so God is leading people to-day. Providence is always working with Christ. There was the empty water-pot then. And so has it been ever since the curse has become a blessing. One day one of my old friends in Lancashire said, "God nearly drove me mad to save my soul. I was a drunkard and swearer; I neither feared God nor regarded man. I had one child, a little girl, and God only knows how I loved her; then the scarlet fever broke out in our neighbourhood, and I did not like the look of her eyes. I sent for the doctor, and he said the fever was upon her. I went to my work, but I did not know what I was doing. After work I went home. The fever was raging, and the doctor said it was a dangerous case. I never knew anything about prayer. I could swear and curse, but I could not pray. I went back to work, but I saw the child's face always before me. When work was over I ran home, and when I entered the house all was over. My wife was there with her face buried in her hands. I said, 'What's the matter?' 'Oh!' she said, 'the child is gone.' I ran up to the bedside, and looked at the little face, and called to her 'Annie,' but there was no answer. I stooped down and kissed the lips, and they did not move. I felt as if my brain were on fire, and I thought I heard her little voice saying, 'Father, come and join me in heaven,' and I said, 'I will; Lord help me,' and by her side I vowed I would never taste another drop of drink and never swear another oath. The death of my child was the life of my soul. In the shop where I work there is a good deal of noise; but still amid all the noise I sometimes fancy I can hear her voice saying still, 'Father, come and join me in heaven,' and I can say with joy, 'I am coming, I am coming.'"

So it is still—the empty water-pot and the full heart. He has brought her to the well, and now she is alone with Christ. Have you ever been alone with Christ? How He enlightens the mind, soothes the heart, and hushes the fears. Alone with Christ! He wants to win that woman. But how does He do it? The Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans, and so first he removes her prejudices. Prejudice is a marble wall which no arrow of the Gospel can ever penetrate. You will never do any good to a man while he is prejudiced against you. One reason why we have not made more progress in Ireland is because we have gone as disputants instead of preaching the Gospel. We must first remove prejudice. A great many of us overlook this, and we fire before we come within range; the result is we lose all our powder and shot. Christ knew what you and I know, that woman was made to be a ministering angel to man. I hear some of our sisters pleading for the equality of the sexes. I would not if I were a woman. To be equal to us is to descend. You are nearer God and heaven than we are. Woman is sent to be a ministering angel to man. Our Lord was removing her prejudices, and He does it by talking with her, and by asking her to give Him water to drink.

And then his next step was to arrest her attention. "If thou knewest the gift of God thou wouldst have asked of Him." They say our sisters are always rather curious. "If thou knewest"—all the woman's curiosity was aroused—"thou wouldst have asked of Him."

And now, having removed her prejudice and arrested her attention, Christ goes another step and rouses her conscience: "Go, and call thy husband, and come hither." These words were like a flash from the judgment-seat. Christ has touched the sore place. Afterwards the woman said: "He told me all that ever I did." Like a panorama He unrolled to her view all her past life. And so you, my young friend, may have come from your native town or village to this place, and nobody knows it, but God has marked it, and you will have to talk with Him about your sins somewhere, either in this world or the next. The conscience may sometimes be drugged, but when it is awake it is like a hell upon earth, is it not? It was said of a great Italian, "There is a man who has been in hell;" and that is true of every man whose conscience is awake. Do not heal the wound till you have probed it. Do not be always probing it, but probe it and then have it healed. And now Christ enlightens the woman's mind. "I perceive that Thou art a prophet. Our fathers worshipped in this mountain; and ye say that in Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship." And then Jesus tells her that every place is holy ground, that there is no special piece of consecrated ground, but wherever the tear of penitence is shed God is there to comfort, and wherever man bends the knee there God is present to hear. And the woman says, "I know that Messias cometh, which is called Christ; when He is come, He will tell us all things." And then, hear, O heaven, and be astonished, O earth. Christ tells that woman what He had never said before: "I that speak unto thee am He." She hears the glad sound, believes the word, and is saved. And now she goes back to the town a new woman, to tell her neighbours—the first female missionary the world ever had. She tells them that at Jacob's well is Shiloh, and she comes back with such a troop behind.

Let me close with two questions:—

(1) Have you come to Christ? Do not turn away. Look the question straight in the face. Have you had a personal, private interview with Christ? No. Why not? Have you a better friend anywhere, or one more ready to pardon or to supply the wants of the soul?

(2) Are you telling to all around what a dear Saviour you have found? Oh! set to work to win souls. This little life will soon be over. Who can tell what changes will take place in this congregation before the next fourteen years are over? Ah! many a voice will then be hushed. Why not set to work to-day in the position in which Christ has put you, and never rest till you have won souls for Christ? May God help you!

ECHOES OF KESWICK.

DEAR SIR,—Many Christians in our town received so large a measure of light and blessing at the above memorable meetings, that a general wish was expressed to have on our return a united gathering for the promotion of spiritual life. Such a meeting was held on Friday evening, August 31, in the Y.M.C.A., comprising members of eight denominations.

A Church of England man gave a capital Bible exposition; a Wesleyan told us of the preserving and strengthening power of the Lord Jesus; a Baptist testified that in the daily trials of life the comfort of walking with God is a daily deliverance. Two Congregationalists bore emphatic witness that the Lord guides safely those who trust Him; a Presbyterian expressed heart gratitude for the redemption wrought out by the Divine Mediator; three members of the Society of Friends spoke in praise of Him who had blotted out their sins, and given practical power for service; an Evangelical Unionist said the more clearly we understood the ground of the Gospel invitation, viz., the finished work of Christ, the more likely would we be useful in leading burdened souls to the great Burden Bearer.

The precious truths so clearly taught at Keswick are having a definite influence on the lives of many of my friends, who could not attend the Convention. Joseph J. Spraggon.

UNFASHIONABLE GARDEN PARTIES.—You will be interested in hearing that I had one such party on Thursday, August 31, when the members of my women's Bible class came out here for an afternoon tea and stroll. The day was perfect, and between the beauty of the scenery, the brightness of the flowers, and the exquisite loveliness of sea and sky, we were all as happy as possible. The evening was happily closed by singing and prayer, and we spoke of the time when we should have similar intercourse in the Paradise of God.

AMONGST THE KABYLES.

WE hear of the romance of missions, and truly we find it here. These dear Kabyles are surprised to hear of a free grace salvation; the richest blessings of heaven are close to them, pressing on them for acceptance, sweetest consolation in their poverty and misery! We have reason to think that not a few have received our testimony of Jesus and his love; and now we part from them in this spot to make our way to distant tribes, looking to the Lord to direct our way. Not a few tears were shed at parting; one poor old man covered his face with his burnous and sobbed his regrets. They understand our love and deep sympathy for them; "our marabouts," they say, "will teach us nothing without money, but we know your motives." Some came from the ancient vice-royalty of Koukou, "because," they said, "we hear that you walk with Rebbi (God) and Sidna Aïsa (the Lord Jesus): tell us about our souls."

Not a people like these are to be found. One of the purest republics the world has ever seen, they have retained the institutions, manners, and customs they practised before the Romans had possession of North Africa, and are very conservative in their ideas. They are Mahommedans, it is true, but their profession is very faint, and is mainly seen in the practice of circumcision and one or two feasts. It seems to us an extraordinary state of things, to be in close contact with them and yet to elicit so little controversy. We have truths to teach them which their Koran, if they know it, admits: the miraculous birth of Jesus, the glory and dignity of his person as the Word of God, the importance of the Indjil, the Book of Light, and the speedy coming of Jesus to be the Judge of quick and dead; but they do not know Jesus the Saviour of the lost. We cannot express the joy of and being able to say with the Apostle Paul, "To whom He was not spoken of they shall see; and they that have not heard shall understand" (Rom. xv. 21). What a privilege, to bring truths so precious before the Kabyles for the first time.

For months, little groups who come in partly for the weekly market held here, have at the same time paid us a visit; some need remedies for wounds and various maladies. From all quarters they come, and many expressly to hear what we can tell them about salvation. In their flowing garments, with their intelligent faces, beautiful teeth, and bright beaming eyes radiant at hearing such good things, we can truly say, they are nature's gentlemen. Their ideas are sometimes rather naïve, and their expectations too high, as we cannot cure the deaf, blind, or paralysed. The women come in their varied-coloured garments, mostly with a red sash round the waist, and, if they have a son, with a brooch on the forehead. Some have come in from great distances, one or two together, or with children, some on a mule. The women in their picturesque costumes are a little astonished that such things should be taught to women, but we make it a point never to let a soul go away—man, woman or child—without hearing of Jesus. They listen devoutly when we pray for them—Mohammedans hearing us address God on their behalf in the name of Jesus. We read in Kabyle; our discourses in French are repeated by an interpreter in their own tongue, and the prayer also. We can sing "Come to Jesus" in Kabyle, and it greatly pleases them.

I repeat to young men seeking a sphere of labour: Come where the need is greatest; men are asking to be shown the way of salvation. A charming country, a fine climate, an interesting people invite you. Too long have they been left in darkness and ignorance; you may have the satisfaction of coming where no evangelist has preceded you, and putting to their parched lips the cup of salvation. Come and participate in our joy; we go forth to pioneer the way for you in untrodden fields. Come and sow in hope, that we may reap together a harvest in eternal life. Myself and my wife will gladly correspond with any desirous of further information. Geo. Pearse.

REMINISCENCES OF RAILWAY TRAVEL.—4.

HOW often the opportunity of doing good to our fellow-travellers is lost through our feeling of repulsion from something disagreeable in their appearance! Necessarily, through our close contact in railway travelling, we are led into physiognomical observations; but we should guard against trusting to the

we may receive from these, and giving up the effort to "do good to all." I had a striking rebuke in a case I will now narrate.

On arriving in London, one autumn evening, I found that a near relative I much wished to see had gone to reside for a short time in a village about twelve miles out of London, to which a railway was being constructed that would bring me within a few miles of the place. In my anxiety to see my relative I lost sight of the probability of darkness finding me in a strange place, and, from the many stoppages, this was the case. I found myself at last the sole occupant of an open third-class carriage, with the exception of a man of very forbidding appearance, who sat in a far corner watching me, as I thought, with sinister looks. My faithless prayer was that I might not find myself alone with this man at my journey's end. But so it was; the line terminated at a lonely spot.

The station-master hastily closed his office, telling me that the place I inquired for was three miles off, and that there was no inn near. I then found the man I dreaded waiting for me at the entrance of a deep, dark valley. He said, "I heard you inquiring for C——, and, as I am going that way, I waited for you." There was no alternative, and I cast myself on the Lord's protection, as we so often forget to do in unbelief. As we descended the valley it was quite dark, and the peculiar rolling walk of the man was not calculated to allay apprehension. It soon occurred to me that to preach the Gospel to this man was not only a duty but a safeguard against any evil design he might entertain. So I said, "As you are kindly guiding me, I should like to tell you what I have learned from the Bible is the true way to heaven." As I went on to tell him of what Jesus had done to make Himself the Way, the Truth, and the Life, he suddenly startled me by saying, "Oh! that my poor mother could hear this." He then informed me that he had been a sailor, employed on a whaling vessel since he was a boy, and had gone through hardships and dangers for many years, which accounted for his scarred visage and rolling gait. He had just heard that night that the ship was to sail the next morning at six o'clock, and as he knew that his mother was ill he thought it might be the last time he should see her. So he had got leave of absence for the night, and should have to walk back to London.

Now here was this burglar, or perhaps murderer, as I had judged him to be, transformed into an example of filial, self-denying love. He was undertaking a walk of twenty-four miles during the night to spend about two hours with his sick mother. On hearing these particulars, I had the double and delightful task before me of leading him to the Saviour, and filling his mind with Gospel truth for his dying mother. Never had I a more attentive listener, and never did a journey pass more quickly than the three miles I walked with him (he had three miles farther to go). We parted in outward darkness, but with our minds enlightened (both I trust) with the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ.

Let me relate another incident bearing on the same duty of

SOWING BESIDE ALL WATERS.

It so interested our dear friend Harry Moorhouse that he made me repeat it. It occurred to me on the North Staffordshire line. I was travelling in a comfortable, well-lighted second-class carriage, when, at one of the small stations in the mining district, the door was suddenly thrown open, and two men, evidently miners, presented themselves. One of them reminded the other that it was a second-class carriage, but he, a large, powerful, determined-looking man, declared with an oath that he would ride in any carriage he liked. As it was a dark, wet night, and it was near the end of the train, there was no one to prevent him carrying out his purpose.

He took his seat opposite to me, folding his arms and looking defiance, as if he supposed I should make objection; and certainly his mud-bespattered dress and heavy navvy's boots did not look appropriate to the carriage he was in. At once I laid down my book, and said, "As we are journeying together, let us have a chat." This evidently upset all his calculations, and he listened with startled attention while I told of the love of God and the story of the Cross. When I was showing that Christ was "the end of the law for righteousness to everyone that believeth," and that God could "be just and the justifier of the ungodly that believeth in Him," he brought down his hand with great force on his companion's knee, and said, "I tell thee, Jem, that's not sand, it's rock;" he repeated again and again, "It's rock!"

Our journey soon came to an end, and as he rose he said, "Sir, I suppose we ought not to have come into this carriage, but I can't help feeling very glad that I did, for I am sure I've got something to do me good all my life." His companion seemed too much surprised at the change in one whom he had evidently regarded as a leader to make any remarks, especially as he heard him making the confession of wrong-doing, for which I felt truly thankful as the only fruit he had time to show of the grace which bringeth salvation.

I trust that these "Reminiscences," which I now close, may convey some encouragement and direction to those who seek to serve the Lord and their fellow-men in railway travelling. J. Rowbotham.

NORTH LONDON CHOIR.—A choir to work with Messrs. Moody and Sankey for their services in the north of London is now in course of formation. Christian workers with good voices, who are able to volunteer for this service, are invited to send in their names at once to Mr. J. W. Godfrey, Clooneaven, Chingford, Essex. Meetings for practice will soon be commenced.

"THE SPECTATOR" AND THE JEWS.

IN a recent article The Spectator discusses the question, "Why are the Jews persecuted?" The reply given is twofold: on account of their separation, and their usurious practices among the peoples where they dwell. In support of the latter charge against them, statements by Mr. Wagstaff, a British Consul in Southern Russia, are cited, which go to show that a system of boycotting exists among them which practically places the material resources of districts where they are numerous, entirely in their hands, to the ruin and misery of the surrounding inhabitants. It is said that in parts of Russia, Roumania, and Austrian-Hungary, this system pervades all the transactions of life, so that they sap and drain away from the national weal all its vitality and elasticity.

Another illustration of this is given by Captain Conder, of the Palestine Exploration Fund, who states that the Jews who have gone there from Russia and Austria have established a cordon round Jerusalem, by means of which they buy up all the vegetable produce brought from the adjacent country, and resell it at an exorbitant price. The very labour of the peasantry in many parts is in their hands, and can only be obtained by payments made to them in the first place. Nothing can possibly excuse or justify the cruel and bitter attacks made upon the Hebrew race in various parts of Europe, but it is only just to admit that if these things are so, they have themselves to blame for the dislike created against them—that is to say, so far as unjust and extortionate practices can be fairly charged upon them.

It should, however, be borne in mind that there is another side to all this. Statements of this kind have often been made, and afterwards proved to be highly coloured; and facts have been presented in the most unfavourable light possible for the purpose of creating prejudice and excusing cruelty. The articles which we hope to insert at intervals by Mrs. Finn, who has so nobly espoused the cause of the Jews, will, we believe, go far to disprove much that has been alleged against them. Instances abound in which Jewish philanthropy rivals that of Gentiles, and surpasses anything shown by their traducers.

The Spectator argues that the religion of the Jew as taught him both in the Old Testament and the Talmud justifies him in taking advantage of the Gentile, and says that much mischief is done by those Christians who encourage the Jews to believe that they are still the chosen race, and have a triumphant future before them. If the Jew is right in his belief that he belongs to a higher and holier polity than that of any existing State, then, according to our contemporary, he must be an Ishmaelite, in that his hand is against every other man, and so every other man's hand is likely to be against him. A survey of the Mosaic ritual will surely disprove this argument. The Decalogue itself is sufficient to set it aside, for all extortion and oppression of others are there forbidden.

Moreover, in Lev. xix. 33, 34, as in many other places, the stranger within their gates is commanded to be an object of their compassionate regard. They were also to judge righteously in all cases for the stranger. The prophecies relative to their political ascendency, in days, we believe, most surely to come, are couched in terms which in no way justify the inferences drawn by The Spectator; they expressly declare that the Jews restored and sanctified shall be a blessing to the world, a channel, not of discord or strife, enriching themselves at Gentile expense, but a channel of grace and peace, truth and righteousnes to all the earth. They are preserved still as a people dwelling alone, not reckoned among the nations, in order that ultimately they may be to the praise of God among all peoples. Their present unbelief and hardness of heart account for their usury, and is the cause of all their sorrow and distress.

ISCHIA AND ITS LESSONS.

DEAR BROTHER,—The day after the fearful earthquake I came to this immense burial-ground to help in saving the bodies and souls of these fearfully-visited people. The picture that presented itself to my eyes cannot be explained nor comprehended; it was bewildering and appalling, rendering one awe-stricken and almost paralysed, so complete was the ruin, so immense was the number of the dead, mangled, and wounded, so intense the prevailing confusion, so imminent the danger from the ruins. Half frantic survivors were seeking those who would volunteer to go into ruined houses to excavate the supposed living members of their families. So heart-rending were the cries for help from those who were still alive, in agonies with a shattered limb, and tons and tons of massive pieces of wall over them, twenty feet and more high, that it took much nerve to be calm and composed in the face of all these things.

What made most impression on me was the agonising earnestness of the requests of those who had one or many of their friends under the ruins, and wanted us to roll away the stones. So numerous were the cases, and so few were the willing ones to help, that it divided the strength, and a few at each house could do but little. We lacked the implements for excavating; half a regiment of soldiers would not have been too many at each house. Many, we all know, ceased to cry from under the ruins on the Monday and were buried alive. The thought of people still in life, and I so near and still so helpless, was terrible. Mothers and fathers and sons, all looking, half-paralysed with sorrow and broken hearts, taught me so much. The voice of God to my soul was speaking mightily. I could lose no time at least, but the discouraging cry of "What can we do?" went deep down to my heart, and I, remembering that without Jesus I could do nothing, pleaded and did what I could. Fancy standing still at that time because I could do so little!

The Lord was with me, and had been preparing me for this work; wonderful grace and strength were given for this event. Sixteen years of Christian work had never taught me such deep lessons as Jesus taught me here; years at college would never do it; everywhere I would go there were dead or wounded; to the dead little attention was given before Wednesday. I gave myself more especially to attending to the wounded and in getting them to the boat and off to steamers. I had a chance of consoling them with the living Word, and of praying with them in the boat. I found every heart received the Word with gladness. I never was asked if I was Protestant, Mahommedan, or Catholic; I found no opposition from any person in this work, to which I stuck with determination. Never did the Word of God come so fluently to my lips. I did not take out my Testament, as I had to preach a great deal with my hands.

The excitement now being over, permit me to tell all Christian brethren who read your journal that they will find it more joyful to be first on the scene where God is ploughing; there is more hope that seed will take root, and I ask you all, dear readers, to remember how many souls like those at Ischia are buried alive all around us. Jesus asks you to-day, Will you help to roll away the stones of iniquity and sin that crush them? Many a mother is crying to-day for help to excavate her lost son or husband. Children of God, will you stand still in such times as these? Do the little you can.

We worked night and day at Ischia, and those who had little strength held the torches at night, and were so useful in the search in carrying wounded, as the roads were heaped up with ruins and impassable. It is ever night in a heart that is not won for Jesus. Hold up the light, you young believers, by a consistent life, repeating a text, giving a tract, and so many other ways. "I am the light of the world;" "If I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto Me." This is how many, who are not Spurgeons or Moodys, can roll away the stones.

Whilst many came to Ischia as volunteers, or because they had relatives, no one rendered so much service as the soldiers and sailors; they never ceased, and are at the excavations and rebuilding huts of wood to-day. Christian soldiers, onward; the world will never be conquered for Jesus if we as soldiers are not faithful in rolling away the stones and loosening the grave-clothes. The power and strength of a nation is her army; she looks up to it. England is proud of her army and navy; but we British Christian soldiers are looked up to, and even the might of Britain depends on the Christian's prayers who are mighty at the throne of grace.

Wednesday, after the earthquake, how the army of Italy at Ischia was inspired! Though I am not a soldier, I also was moved to tears by the presence of King Humbert, who came to Laco; I walked alongside of him, went over many ruins among the shouts of the peasants and of his men. He put new life into all, said a kind word to all, and was moved to tears by many of the sad sights he saw. Jesus our King promises all of us better encouragement to excavate his lost ones; He gives no passing visit, and then goes away; He simply asks "Who will work for Me?" If we desire to work, He says, "I am with you alway." Ought not we to be inspired?

The stench of these many dead was so offensive that I had to use a good deal of disinfectant. Seeing the body of a beautiful young lady, who was the belle of all the bathers at Casamicciola, with the flesh all peeled off her cranium, her face so fine, but body crushed, I had to draw back from it, the stench was so terrible. I then thought of what awful odour the sinner, whose mouth is an open sepulchre, must be to God. Yes, if you, dear reader, are not converted, you cannot be a sweet odour unto God. May his spirit call you to the precious Fountain that cleanseth. Are you wounded in life's battle, dear reader, by the earthquakes of sin, doubt, the flesh, the world, or the devil? Well, if in Ischia some perished for lack of medical aid, you, dear reader, can be treated by Jesus, the true Physician, always at hand.

A young Englishman living here, who worked with undaunted zeal and courage, and was indefatigable in digging out others, had been himself excavated, and gave his time to save others. Christians, we who have been saved, let us bear in mind that with us rests the rolling away the stones. Asking the prayers of all believers while I am attending to these poor sufferers,

Believe me, yours in the Lord,

Villa Arbusta, E. C. NEWBERY.

LOST ALLIE.

IT was a warm, sunny afternoon, just a month ago. My sister and I were strolling about the beach at Southsea, enjoying the lively scene before us, when I suddenly heard a very funny noise, like a kitten mewing, very loud. It came from a group of children a little way off, so we went up to see what was the matter, and what do you think we saw? Only a little girl of about three years old, surrounded by two or three big boys, who were trying in vain to find out why she cried so bitterly. She was a very funny little girl, very smart, and very dirty; the tears were running down her little red cheeks, and trickling off her little short nose on to her crimson velvet jacket, as she gulped out through her sobs that she was "l-lost."

I took the little thing by the hand, and began to question her very gently. She was such a little creature, she knew nothing about herself, except that she was called "Allie," and that she was "lost." "Cheer up, little girl," I said; "stop crying, and we will look for mamma." But do you know, she had cried so long and so hard that she could not stop, and I had to bribe her with a penny before she would come with me. The penny seemed to comfort her a great deal; she put her little cold hand into mine, and prepared to follow me. My sister and I took her all over the beach, asking people if they knew her. I think we asked almost everybody we could, but it was no use. Nobody would claim little Allie, and as the afternoon wore on the poor little thing grew tired of trotting about after us. At last we stood still in despair. "What shall we do?" I said to my sister. "Take her to the police-station," advised someone sitting near. At this Allie began to whimper, and I was afraid she was going to cry again, so I rushed up to one of the stalls and bought her a bun, which comforted her once more. Just as she was taking a big bite out of the bun, to our great joy up ran a lot of children, crying, "Allie, where have you been all this time? Who gavé you that, Allie?" And so Allie found her friends, and we very gladly gave the little girl into their charge. As we went off I turned, and saw Allie, happy once more, marching across the beach munching her bun, and followed by a train of admiring children.

Children, do you know what Jesus came to do? Do you know that He came into the world to seek and to save the lost? He came to save little lost children like Allie; little children whose souls are lost, and yet they don't know it, or if they do, they think very little about it. When I was a little girl I was so afraid lest I should die, because I did not know whether I should be "lost" or not. But one day somebody told me that Jesus, who died instead of me, had been looking for me ever since I was a little baby, and would save me if I asked Him. I did ask Him, and I have been so happy ever since I found Jesus. Are you a little lost child? Do you not want Jesus to find you? Oh, don't hide away from Him, because He can make you so happy!

But perhaps Jesus has found you and you are trying to follow Him. Does the little boy or girl next door know Jesus? Does your best friend know Jesus? Won't you tell them about your Saviour? It will be so nice to be quite sure that they would be among the happy company of boys and girls in heaven. F. E. T.

WORK ON THE SCOTTISH BORDERS.

THOSE of your readers who have perused Dr. A. Bonar's life of M'Cheyne, will have read there of the beginning of a revival of religion on the border counties of Scotland. It rolled on with marvellous strength; the lamp which was then lighted has never darkened. A Christian minister, by whose instrumentality the mother of the writer was brought to a knowledge of the Saviour, was once preaching at the little village of Denholm, near Hawick. After going home and retiring to rest along with another Christian brother, he woke in the middle of the night, and rising half up out of his bed, exclaimed in the earnestness of his soul, "Sinner, I am in real earnest. I am in real earnest." This little incident only shows what kind of men were at the head of the movement. The work has now been formed into a union for the Border Towns. In each centre is a band of workers who band themselves together in the work of house-to-house tract distribution. Thus many who will not attend meetings are reached. On Sabbath evenings Evangelistic meetings are held, and the good work which is accomplished by these is observable in almost every centre.

Many years ago, when Dr. Bonar was in Jedburgh, a young woman was brought under his ministry. After he left she gave up going to church, and for forty years never darkened a church door. Three years ago, through the instrumentality of the workers, at an old age she was brought to the knowledge of the Gospel; Dr. Bonar, who was at the place a few weeks ago, cheered her heart very much by a visit. In another of the manufacturing towns a young gentleman, son of a manufacturer, was arrested when only seventeen years of age, and threw himself heartily into the work. China's needs, however, affected him much; he became a missionary to that great nation, and now labours where the foot of white man never trod before.

During the summer, open-air meetings are held at the various places. Lord Polwarth has kindly lent a helping hand, and freely opened his grounds at Mertoun, for the holding of Conferences, never failing, if at home, to take part in them. Up to this time the work has been carried on in populous places, but the workers are now desirous of proclaiming the Gospel in its fulness in some of the rural places. A tent is much needed for this purpose. In agricultural districts, as many are aware, there is a difficulty of getting the people to attend except at their own churches, while they will readily go to a tent meeting which has no sectarian element about it. W. A.

IRELAND.—A correspondent writes:—"I regret to say there is a good deal of appearance of blight amongst the potatoes at present. Should this continue or increase there must again be great distress in the winter."

PLATTING.—Mr. John P. Taylor, of Claytonbridge, delivered his lecture on "Moral Heroism in its Relation to the Drink Struggle," in aid of the Mission at Platting, on Sunday evening the 2nd inst. He has been engaged in a round of Mission work during the last fortnight in South-East Lancashire, meeting with good success. W. B.

A WELCOME REVOLUTION.—The Hardware Journal states that there are some local industries on which the exertions of the "The Blue Ribbon Army," and the consequent change in the drinking habits of the people are producing something like a revolution. For example, there is a great falling off in the sale of pewter drinking cups and public-house measures, which at one time formed a conspicuous item in Birmingham's minor products. There is hardly a tithe of the trade being done in them compared with a few years back.

NATIONAL REFUGE HARBOURS.—The Council of this Society has decided that it is advisable to petition Parliament that immediate steps may be taken to increase harbour accommodation on our coasts, for saving life and property, for the protection and development of our fisheries and other shipping. If all districts will get such a petition signed it will help forward the work. I shall be pleased to send a copy of the wording of the petition to anyone willing to do a little work to save the lives of our fishermen and sailors.

A HARVEST SONG.

O LORD, with goodness Thou dost crown the year, [tide,
The fields are clothed with wealth of summer-
The little hills rejoice on every side,
And golden corn is waving far and near.
All nature lifts her voice in songs of praise,
The hallelujah chorus loud to swell,
And the glad sunshine of these harvest days
Speaks in its brightness, "God doth all things well."

The earth responsive is to sun and shower,
And yields her increase now most plenteously—
May our hearts answer to Thy love and power,
And yield their pleasant fruits, O Lord, to Thee;
Oh grant to us, when sowing-time is past,
In the glad "harvest-home," a harvest crown at last. J. H. S.

SAMARITAN WORK IN GERMANY.

THE RAUHE HAUS, HAMBURG.

THE Rauhe Haus is a centre of widespread philanthropic and Christian work, whose father and founder was the late Dr. J. H. Wickern. In 1833, when about twenty-five years of age, he and some like-minded young men formed themselves into a Union, at Hamburg, whose object was to seek out the poor, the sick, and the suffering, and to help them with bread for body and soul. Like many of our own Christian workers, the neglected condition of children weighed heavily on their hearts, and it was seen that no solid help could be afforded unless they were trained and educated as well as fed. The thought was a seed which took root, wherefrom many a vigorous sapling sprang up, whose names even would be too numerous for us to mention. But the united multiform work has taken its name from a peasant's thatched house, called Das Rauhe Haus, which was given to young Wichern by Dr. Sieveking. Some money having about the same time been left to him, the young director with his mother entered the house, and soon received twelve boys, as many as the house would hold.

From this time almost every year saw a new house built for the accommodation of the increasing family, some of these being entirely built by the boys and the helpers, or brothers as they are called. In these various handicrafts are taught, printing, book-binding, carpentering, building, &c. Wherever these houses were placed, and they are to be found in every part of Germany, as well as in Russia, Hungary, Roumania, Italy, &c., a place of worship also arose, where the Gospel of God's grace is proclaimed.

A notable feature of the work, too, is the establishment of homelike lodging-houses, Herberge zur Heimat, in which wanderers may find clean, comfortable, cheap accommodation. These are bright, handsome houses, judging from the engravings, which greatly add to the value of the report. Discharged prisoners are looked after and helped. The insane and idiot poor also receive the wise and loving care that seems to characterise all the doings of the widely scattered brothers. Nothing seems to be overlooked. Home Mission work in every department is well carried out, and all in the truest Christ-like spirit. More than 300 brothers are engaged in carrying out the benevolent works included in the Rauhe Haus. In April, 1881, Dr. Wichern, in his seventy-third year, was called to rest from his labours. The present director, Mr. J. Wichern, is, we believe, a son of the above.

The German Empress has given £50 to the Rauhe Haus, which this year celebrates its Jubilee, towards the construction of a house for the use of young girls. The Emperor has himself added to this a gift of £150. The establishment at Berlin, corresponding to the Rauhe Haus, which goes by the name of the Evangelical Johannestift, celebrated in April the twenty-fifth anniversary of its foundation.

CORRECTION.—Mr. Diprose, evangelist, wishes us to state that he has been labouring in Pembrokeshire, not in Herefordshire, as stated last week. His address will be Michael-Church, Ross, after the 26th inst.

BLACKDOWN HILLS MISSION.

TENT SERVICES IN DEVON, SOMERSET, AND DORSET.

FOR the past three months we have had a grand sowing time among our village populations. To many the news has come with joy to their hearts as something they had long been wanting. To others the news appeared to be strange, and to be received with caution if not with downright opposition; there were still others who did not want the Gospel themselves, nor did they wish others to have it. Yet thousands have heard the good news by this means of pitching a tent in their midst who, we believe, never enter the ordinary places of worship.

"This Gospel just suits me," said a man with a large head covered with shaggy hair, with two sharp, restless eyes peering out under a pair of overhanging brows that reminded me of a picture of Daniel Quorm. "It suits me to a shaving; I've not missed a night since this blessed tent was put up, though when the first meetings were held I felt queer like. I thought somebody must have been telling upon me. And if they had, 'twas all true; them words searched me out, and I got no sleep at night. I seemed to have the eyes of the Lord looking right into me, hauling out all my wicked sins, and saying, 'that's you,' 'that's you.' I was tempted to say more than once, 'I won't go to that tent again;' but as sure as the time came round, I had to get up and go. Bless the Lord I've got what I wanted; I've got eternal life. I've got a peace in my heart which is beyond all I could ever have thought possible."

Another said: "I have been wanting to know this blessed salvation for many years. I have gone to all the places within ten miles, and never had it put before me like it has been in this tent. I had been standing near the door of salvation for a long time. The preacher was describing a man standing outside the door looking at the blood which was sprinkled on the lintel, and wondering what that was there for. An old man comes along, and says, 'Joseph, get inside the door or you will be destroyed by the angel of death.' And he pushed him through the door and shut it. The speaker looked at me and said, 'that's you, get inside the blood-sprinkled door and you will be safe.' God says, 'The blood shall be to you for a token; when I see the blood I will pass over you, and the plague shall not be upon you.' Well, somehow, that word seemed to push me through the door, and I was safe."

Some weeks since I sent a request for prayer for Broad Windsor, the home of the late Major Malan, that God would give much blessing on the Gospel to be preached there in the tent. For many weeks past the Gospel has been preached there nightly, with much blessing from the Lord. At first there was decided opposition, and this has continued more or less throughout. Yet the meetings have been well attended, many souls have been awakened to see their need of salvation, and a goodly number have confessed Christ. Several Christians who had been crying to the Lord to send the Gospel to the place have been greatly revived, and have determined in the strength of the Lord to continue the work after the tent is removed.

Our brother Mr. Venn has laboured hard and continuously, visiting all day long among the anxious and others, and has been greatly cheered by the blessing bestowed. I spent a week in this place with a brother from Mr. Guinness' Bow-road Institute; though the weather was very stormy and blew down the tent, yet there was blessing every night.

The work will not end in these places when the tents are removed. The converts will be cared for, while the anxious ones will be visited, and helped by our brethren and fellow-labourers.

—Yours faithfully in the Lord,

GEO. BEALEY.

AMERICAN WOMEN AND TEMPERANCE.

THE following stirring letter by Miss Frances E. Willard of Boston, on a "subject of transcendent interest and importance," appears in the September issue of The Century Magazine. We trust it may stimulate and encourage all classes of British Christian Women to a wider and more effective testimony against the frivolities and evil customs of the day:—

"The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is the lineal descendant of the woman's crusade of 1874, whose first 'praying band' was led from the Presbyterian church of Hillsboro' by Mrs. Thompson, daughter of Governor Trimble. It is, in fact, 'the sober second thought' of that marvellous uprising by means of which woman uttered her protest against the forgetfulness and the neglect as the result of which home has lacked protection from the dram shop. The 'praying bands,' earnest, impetuous, inspired, have become the Woman's Christian Temperance Unions,—firm, patient, and persevering. Thirty States are already organised, and three thousand local auxiliaries, dotting the continent, fulfil the Bible injunction, "Make a chain, for the cities are full of blood and the land of violence." Our methods of work are quiet, practical, and systematic. We have learned by the argument of defeat and the logic of events what not to do, as well as some things to attempt. The evolution of our activities has been from the individual to the home, thence to society, and finally to the Government itself.

"The W. C. T. U. stands as the exponent, not alone of that return to physical sanity which will follow the downfall of the drink habit, but also of the reign of a religion of the body, which shall correlate with Christ's wholesome, practical, yet blessedly spiritual religion of the soul. 'The kingdom of Heaven is within you' shall have a new significance to the clear-eyed, steady-limbed Christians of the future, from whose brain, blood, and brawn the taint of alcohol and nicotine has been eliminated by ages of pure habits and noble heredity. 'The body is the temple of the Holy Ghost' will not then seem so mystical a statement, nor one indicative of a temple so insalubrious as now. 'He that destroyeth this temple, him shall God destroy' will be seen to involve no element of vengeance, but to be, instead, the declaration of such boundless love and pity for our race as would not suffer its deterioration to reach the point of absolute failure and irremediable loss.

"The women of the land have never had such training as our 'Topical Studies' furnish, in the laws by which childhood shall set out upon its endless journey with a priceless heritage of powers laid up in store by the tender, sacred foresight of those by whom the young immortal's being was evoked. The laws of health were never studied by so many mothers, or with such immediate results for good on their own lives and those of their children. The deformed waist and foot of the average fashionable woman never seemed so hideous and wicked, nor the cumbrous dress of the period so unendurable as now, when, from studying one 'poison habit,' our minds, by the inevitable laws of thought, reach out to wider researches and more varied deductions than we had dreamed of at first. The economies of a simpler style of living never looked so feasible as to home-makers who have learned something about the priceless value of time and money for the purposes of a Christlike benevolence. The value of a trained intellect never had such significance as since we have learned what an incalculable advantage results from a direct style; what value resides in the power to classify facts; what boundless resources for illustrating and enforcing truth come as the sequel of a well-stored memory and a cultivated imagination. The puerility of mere talk for talk's sake; the unworthiness of 'idle words' and vacuous, purposeless gossip; the waste of long and aimless letter-writing, never looked so egregious as to our workers, who find each day too short for the glorious and gracious deeds waiting for them on every hand."

SPITALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.

MY DEAR BROTHER,—With many mingled feelings I ask you kindly to allow me space to say that my esteemed Christian physician, after due examination, pronounces me to be quite unfitted for any more labour in London. He counsels removal to the Isle of Wight, and then, after a season of rest, some lighter labour for the Lord. Not to occupy your valuable space with the details, suffice it now for me to say that in dependence on the Lord we shall remove to Ryde the last week in this month.

The work in Spitalfields is, I am glad to say, to go on under the superintendence of Mr. James Sharpless, who has been my chief helper for seventeen years, aided by Mr. E. G. Harvey, who will act as secretary. I hope to retain some little supervision of the work. I greatly desire to leave sufficient funds for them to start with, so that in taking up the burden of the work they may be free for the present from this care. I entreat generous aid for them. Will dear friends hearken to this request from a nearly-used-up labourer, who for just twenty-five years has gladly given health and strength to be of service to the poor and wretched of East London?

WILLIAM JOSEPH LEWIS.

14, Sidney-square, E., Sept. 8.

P.S.—The address will remain the same.

MR. JOHN M. SCROGGIE IN BELFAST.

THE last week of this brother's meetings in Belfast was deeply interesting. The circus was crowded nightly, and the after-meetings gave good evidence that God was blessing his word. The workers were kept very busy, and the many conversational groups scattered all over the building was a solemn and hopeful sight. Among those professing to have received blessing are several aged persons, one of whom said to the writer that he was ashamed to give God the fag-end of his life.

Sunday, September 2, was the closing day of the Mission, and it witnessed a remarkable gathering of the people. Even though the afternoon brought with it a downpour of rain, yet the building was crowded by an eager congregation, and at the evening service the doors had to be closed long before the time for beginning the meeting. The building was simply packed with people from end to end, and large crowds were unable to obtain admission. It may be very interesting to state that the workers conversed with nearly 500 inquirers during Mr. Scroggie's stay, a goodly number of whom we hope have been brought to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus.

Belfast, Sept. 6. HENRY MONTGOMERY.

COMING CONFERENCES.—The Liverpool Christian Convention is fixed for October 4—5, at Hope Hall. The subjects are: "Communion with God, how restored, maintained, manifested, and perfected." Some well-known speakers are expected to be present. Salisbury Conference will be held Sept. 25—27. The subjects are—Mornings: Faith, Hope, Love. Afternoons: Mission work and prophecy. Evenings: Past, Present, and Future Resurrections.

MR. MOODY AT HOME.—A few days since we met Mr. Moody at his home, on the Connecticut River, and saw him in vacation hours. His tireless soul is as zealous and busy as ever, and in some respects more alert. On the Sabbath he preaches in the morning to some little country congregation, with as much fervour and tenderness as to those vast throngs which greet him in our large cities. In the afternoon he talks to the children in his home church with such loving simplicity as to make this, to the little ones, the "day of all the week the best." At the weekly prayer-meeting he is a regular attendant. Last Sabbath he spoke of the "little foxes which spoil the vines," and illustrated the power of evil habits by a simple thread and the cart rope used by every farmer's boy; these held up before his audience made an object-lesson which it was impossible to forget.—New York Observer.

Notes and Comments.

WE have pleasure in announcing that in response to numerous requests the Tinworth Exhibition of Scenes from Bible History at the Conduit-street Galleries will remain open until the 22nd inst.

The programmes of the Autumn Sessions of the Baptist and Congregational Unions are issued; both bodies meet in October, the former at Leicester and the latter at Sheffield. Our Baptist friends, as usual, devote the first two days to the interests of their Foreign Missionary Society, the sermon on its behalf being preached by Rev. Dr. Allon, of Islington. It is pleasing to see these interchanges of fraternal service on such occasions. They form welcome and useful testimonies to the real oneness of Christ's Church, in spite of its outward diversities.

At the public Missionary Meeting to be held on October 2, we note that all the speaking is entrusted to three missionaries, representing the Indian, Chinese, and African fields. This is a wise and politic arrangement; facts rather than arguments, workers actually acquainted with the work rather than idealists, are best fitted to make missionary meetings really effective and interesting to such audiences as our societies want to attract. The subjects chosen for treatment by speakers at the meetings of the Congregational Union include some of stirring and practical importance. Both at Leicester and Sheffield full arrangements are made for Evangelistic work to be done in connection with the Union meetings. May Divine wisdom and power be given to all who shall take part.

The Pope has taken a new departure altogether in inviting the College of Cardinals to open the archives of the Vatican to general inspection, for the purpose of proving to the world that the Papacy has been a real source of blessing to mankind. He considers that history has been unjust to the Church over which he presides, and desires a series of manuals to be prepared, compiled from the records preserved in the Papal library, in order to counteract the false impression he considers historians have produced. In these days of sifting investigation, and free handling of authorities, this step is one which cannot fail to be closely watched, and it surely establishes a principle quite alien to that of Papal infallibility, inasmuch as it recognises the right of private judgment upon the deeds of the Popes, and upon the action of the Church.

To make this appeal to public investigation of any real worth, the documents upon which the manuals of Church history are to be based must, of course, be examined by impartial critics and writers, or at least by men outside the Romish pale as well as inside. It remains to be seen whether free inquiry is to be permitted to that extent. Merely as a bid for popular favour, apart from full and honest readiness to come into the light, this apparent concession to the liberal spirit of the age will count for nothing. If the Inquisition and its horrors, and the long, sad roll of martyrs sacrificed to Romish bigotry and intolerance, together with all the fearful evils wrought by a Jesuitical priestcraft, can be disproved, by all means let it be so. But history must indeed be re-written and admitted facts strangely distorted for this to be the case.

The Nonconformist and Independent states there are no fewer than thirty-four distinct missionary societies represented in the African Mission field. Clearly it is not more societies that are needed, but greater unity and co-operation among those already existing, and larger relays of helpers raised up to join them.

All the energy, courage, and skill possessed by Protestant workers in Africa is, and will be, requisite to cope with the Jesuit influence brought to bear against them. The Algerian Roman Jesuit Mission has already made determined efforts against the work of the Church Missionary Society in Uganda, and it is said that their intention is to establish themselves one hundred miles or more beyond Stanley Pool, so as to be in advance of Protestant agencies, if possible, and intrigue against them.

In a letter to The Guardian, Rev. Prebendary Row, on the Foote and Ramsay case, has the following sensible and pertinent remarks. They present a view of the subject which it is very necessary to keep to the front while there are still to be found some who are led to think the imprisonment of these men persecution for conscience sake :—

"I am one of the last to wish to maintain the belief either in Christianity or Theism by the aid of the civil power. In dealing with such questions, the appeal to reason and the moral sense are the only legitimate weapons. Let us have the utmost freedom of discussion. But this is a very different thing from allowing the author of Christianity, to whom the most eminent unbelievers have assigned the highest place in their Pantheon of great men, to be made the subject of a most indecent and utterly misleading caricature, which is publicly exhibited in shop-windows, and that too in one of the chief thoroughfares in London. The object of the prosecution was, not 'to exorcise the spirit of atheism and blasphemy,' but to prevent a wanton insult from being offered to the great mass of the people of this country. I submit that this is no attempt to uphold Christianity by the aid of the civil power, but to prevent an outrage which, if it had been allowed to continue, would have endangered a breach of the peace."

The late Queen of Madagascar has been succeeded by her niece, who has taken the title of Ranavalona III., the same Prime Minister remaining in power. It is the law of the island that the Prime Minister shall be the husband of the Queen, so the two have been married in accordance therewith. It is too early for any very accurate opinion to be formed as to the character of the rule which will be exercised by the new Queen, but the fact of power remaining in the hands of the same statesman who guided the former one, augurs well for a continuance of her enlightened policy.

We have already referred to the rejection by the House of Lords of the Bill for abolishing the cruel and unmanly practice of pigeon shooting matches, but it is a point to which, during the recess, attention should be given. Mr. Anderson's own published reference to the fact that neither Archbishops or Bishops took part in the division is a theme calling for comment. Surely the ministers of the religion of Christ owe a duty to the world in matters concerning humanity and kindness to the animal race, and if they have a place at all in the political arena, and hold seats in one great department of the State, the friends of social reform and philanthropic endeavour have a right to count upon their support and countenance. We trust some speaker at the coming Church Congress will find an opportunity of referring to the subject.

Mr. John Bright's speech on the licensing question is likely to prove a fruitful theme of discussion in Temperance circles for many a day to come. We think this is not to be regretted by any means; the more the question is earnestly but calmly considered, the better chance is there of securing adequate reform. Mr. W. Hoyle, of Bury, has entered the lists against Mr. Bright. In a long and able letter to The Times, of Saturday, he endeavours to show the probable futility of the mild remedy suggested by the member for Birmingham. It seems to us that all the teachings of past experience, on both sides of the Atlantic, favour the views of the eminent statistician rather than those of the still more eminent politician.

The following paragraph from Mr. Hoyle's letter is in itself sufficient to show the utter hopelessness of meeting the case by the "milk and water" proposals of Mr. Bright. The facts embodied in this paragraph at once recurred to our mind when we read the now famous Birmingham speech :—

"It may be that Mr. Bright's attention has not been called to the fact that the plan which he suggests for England is now virtually in operation in Scottish boroughs, where I believe the hands of the licensing authority are not tied by any restrictions about reducing only one-half; so that the licensing scheme they now have is superior to the one which Mr. Bright proposes. But, does the measure satisfy the Scotch? Certainly not; for though they have such a measure, and Sunday closing besides, they are more pressing in their demand for local option than any other portion of the kingdom. When the Permissive Bill was before Parliament, Scotland gave a good majority in its favour, and on the local option division in April of this year Scotland gave forty-six votes for it and but two against."

Another valuable contribution to the literature of the subject has been made by Rev. R. H. Lundie, of Liverpool, who writes to the local Mercury last week on the vexed topic of "Compensation," which we regret to find Mr. Bright seriously advocates. Mr. Lundie very pertinently asks why, if there is to be compensation for the man who for years has been fattening on the misery and pauperism of others, there should not be compensation for owners whose property has been depreciated in value by the adjacent drink shop, and for tenants who have suffered the loss of family peace and prosperity notwithstanding their most earnest protestations. If this matter of compensation is fairly looked at "round and round," as Mr. Lundie suggests, and settled on any equitable basis, assuredly very little of it will ever reach the pocket of the disestablished publican.

The testimony borne at the Central Noon Prayer-meeting last Friday by Rev. J. W. Horsley, Chaplain of the Clerkenwell Prison, to the evils of intemperance, was very powerful and striking. At Clerkenwell, during the past twelve months, 20,000 prisoners have been placed in durance vile; of these 400 were cases of attempted suicide. Mr. Horsley, who speaks with authority, believes that one half of the crime of the country is directly attributable to the evil of drink, while another quarter can be indirectly traced to the same prolific source. In all his lengthened and varied experience, he only remembers the case of one drunken woman who has been thoroughly reclaimed. Could any weightier plea be adduced for compassing, by any and every means, the abolition of a traffic which, in the words of the Premier, that cannot be too often quoted, is productive of evils greater than those of war, pestilence, and famine combined?

It is to be hoped that the late occurrence in Exmouth-street, Clerkenwell, in connection with the funeral of five paupers, will secure greater attention to the arrangements for the burial of those whose misfortune it is to die as workhouse inmates. The idea of five coffins containing bodies being huddled together in one rude vehicle, secured only by a clothes-line tied to a hook, and covered with a hammock-cloth barely large enough for one, and so hurried to the grave, is by no means a humanising or edifying one.

Poverty is often the result of wrong-doing, but it is not in itself a crime, and ought not to be treated as though it were. There are multitudes of cases where the treatment of the poor under our Poor-law regulations is sadly harsh and degrading to humanity. There is no reason why it should be considered a disgrace to be compelled to receive parochial relief; yet we have met with many in the course of district visitation who would rather starve than seek it, because of the harshness and demeaning air of contempt with which such applications are frequently received. However difficult it may be during life to draw the line officially between honest poverty and that which is the fruit of laziness and dishonour, surely in death all distinctions should cease, and the feelings of relatives and of society be consulted, so far as to ensure prompt and decent burial.

Mr. Francis Murphy, with his two daughters and grandson, sailed for the United States in the City of Rome, of the Anchor Line, on Wednesday last week. This magnificent steamship had on board during the present trip about one thousand souls; many of the passengers were Americans returning from their summer holiday. The eloquent Apostle of Gospel Temperance will no doubt receive a warm welcome from the friends of the cause in New York. We trust a large field of usefulness will open up to him in his adopted land, while his son Thomas Edward is carrying the war into the enemy's camp throughout the Emerald Isle.

All honour to the noble Cornish women of Cuddon Cove who were the first to rush out into the water and seek to rescue the survivors of the shipwrecked crew of the G. J. Jones, which had just gone to pieces on the rocks that stud their coast. Foremost among those who clambered down the steep descent, and dashed into the blinding spray at the peril of their own lives, and actually the first to effect a rescue, these brave women deserve the praise and thanks of their country for such an example of heroism. The women of England may well be proud of their sex while such instances of feminine nobleness occur in our midst.

The probabilities of war between France and China are much discussed, and the prospect that such an event opens up, for other Powers than those immediately concerned, is by no means agreeable or assuring. British interests are so mixed up with Chinese trade and commerce, that we should inevitably be serious losers by such a conflict. Moreover, there would be great risk of a massacre of all Europeans in the Empire, including of course English traders and missionaries. The issues are in the hands of God, who knows the end from the beginning, and accomplishes his own purposes. We earnestly pray that He may so dispose the hearts of statesmen and diplomatists in both countries that the dreaded calamity may be averted.

The Freeman quotes from a letter written by a Brahmin to a missionary the following words:—

"We are finding you out. You are not as good as your Book. If your people were only as good as your Book, you would conquer India for Christ in five years."

Their bluntness and straightforward plainness make them forcible and striking in an unusual degree. As a testimony to the Divine Word they are rejoicing to the heart, but as a criticism on the inconsistencies of many who profess to believe in it and to be guided by it, they are humbling and saddening. All the more may we be led to seek closer harmony between our own lives and the precepts of Truth.

In connection with the renewal of licences just now, the publicans are having rather a hard time of it, though not harder than the interests of society at large demand. Not only are some old licences being refused, but where they are renewed the trade is being changed as to its spirit and character. The licensing justices at Stockton, for example, have warned the holders of licences that they are bound to supply tea and solid refreshments when they are asked for. "The word victual," said the Chairman of the Bench, "means food, and not merely beer and spirits, which to some persons are nothing less than poisons."

Temperance has become a power which must be recognised, and it is evidently growing in its hold on the nation as an important factor in elevating our social condition and remedying many of our existing evils. The conversion of magistrates to Temperance principles is an important point, seeing that so much power is in their hands as to the licensing houses for trade in intoxicants. It is a good sign that off-licences are coming to be viewed with growing disfavour. Those granted to grocers are specially reprehensible and dangerous to the interests of Temperance; happily they are decreasing.

The reform of funeral customs is an object well worthy of attention, and the Archbishop of York has by no means gone out of his way in advocating its cause, as he did at a recent meeting in connection with the Church of England Funeral Association. Great advance has been made in this direction, although many still cling tenaciously to old-fashioned and useless forms, which, however profitable they may be to the undertaker, are burdensome and distressing to many who have to take part in them. Simplicity is far more seemly on such occasions than show, and real grief shrinks from ostentation, finding relief in quietness and unobtrusiveness. The Society of Friends set an example in this, which has often struck us as alike conducive to the benefit of the living and betokening respect to the dead.

While referring to this subject, it occurs to us to ask, why it is that the chapels provided by burial boards for use in cemeteries and graveyards are, as a rule, made so cold and cheerless in their appearance? Anything more calculated to fill the mind and heart with gloom and despair than many of these places are could scarcely be constructed. Their aspect is as sepulchral as the grave, and their atmosphere as cold and repellent as death. Certainly this is not in accordance with the spirit of the Christianity which teaches us to regard death as vanquished by our Lord, and to anticipate resurrection and life beyond the grave. Surely when the heart is already full of sorrow, it would be well to have the external accompaniments of death such as to soothe and lessen rather than aggravate grief.

"THE LORD THINKETH UPON ME."

FATHER! I thank Thee for the words of healing,
Balm to my trouble, solace in my pain;
Softly they come through deepest sorrow stealing,
Hushing mine inmost heart to rest again.

Helpless and lonely, almost hope-forsaken,
Stranded aside like to a bark outworn,
Still this assurance doth new light awaken,
And darkest shadows bear a gold of dawn.

Far, far on high, amid unvision'd glory,
All in the tearless paradise of God,
Yet unforgotten is my spirit's story,
For He remembers, who the winepress trod.

Jesus remembers: Jesus thinks about me,
Lying abased and trembling at his feet:
E'en though his busy world could do without me,
Adown He bends in yearning vast and sweet.

Oh, what am I, that Jesus should be caring?
What have I done to stir such wondrous love,
That God should stoop to think how I am faring,
And his compassion unto me should move?

The King of kings, the Sovereign of creation,
Beholdeth all the tossing of life's sea;
Oh, thou my heart! fear nought of desolation,
For Christ, thy Lord, is taking thought for thee.

MR. MULLER'S WORK.—We are glad to see The Echo has devoted about a column to a very appreciative review of Mr. George Müller's orphanage and other works in Bristol. It quotes some of the best testimonies from the report of how the Lord provides for the needs of his servant's work.

CHRISTMAS TREES FOR NAVVIES.—Mrs. E. Garnett, secretary of the Navvy Mission, would be glad of the help of our readers in providing useful articles of clothing, &c., for Christmas trees for the children at the various navvy stations. They should be sent to Miss Carter, Ashfield Ripon, not later than November 30. Last year's gifts were much appreciated.

SLAVERY IN QUEENSLAND.—A writer in the Glasgow British Friend of August 1 says: "Whatever apology our Queensland neighbours may offer they cannot reason away the fact that they are quietly engaged inaugurating a system of slavery which some day may become as dire an evil to the New World as ever it was to the Old. It is true—seriously true—that, at the time I write this, no less than twelve vessels are employed among the islands engaged in what is strangely termed 'recruiting labour;' but in plain words—enticing the islanders away from their homes by false pretences to work the sugar plantations." He goes on to describe how the blacks are misled by not knowing English, and by ignorance of the real import of the agreements which reduce them to a position of "simplified slavery."

OBAN CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.—An interesting two days' Conference has been held at this beautiful West Highland resort, the subjects being those of the recent Mildmay Conference. Rev. A. Bonar, D.D., in opening the Conference, and speaking on "Union with Christ the Ground of Security," referred to 1 Cor. xii. 12, as the most comprehensive and clear description of union between Christ and his people. After addresses by Rev. B. Bell, Mr. John Colville, Rev. J. MacKinnon, and Dr. W. P. Mackay, the proceedings of the morning concluded. Dr. W. P. Mackay gave, in the evening, an address on "The Secret of Power," directing attention to the words of Phil. iii. 10. The incarnation and the resurrection are, he said, the two central truths of Christianity; crucified with Christ and risen with Him we have now nothing to fear: hence there is power. On Wednesday the subject under discussion was "Helps and Hindrances to Christian Work." Addresses were delivered by Rev. James MacLean, Mr. Rodway, Mr. Cameron, Mr. Mody, Mr. Mac Dougall, Mr. Williams, and Rev. J. MacKinnon, who gave an interesting account of the Presbyterian Church of Canada. In the afternoon the Conference was engaged in considering "Gospel Temperance."—Outlook.

A YOUNG MEN'S PARLIAMENT.

BRITISH CONFERENCE AT LIVERPOOL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL REPORTER).

WE should think that, on the whole, the conclave of Y.M.C.A. delegates in Liverpool last week was equal to most previous gatherings of its kind. In some respects we do not well see how it could be surpassed. As "the second city in the kingdom," Liverpool has earned a high reputation for commercial enterprise and for open-handed liberality on the part of its merchant princes. A third laurel must be added to the garland of its graces—a generous interpretation, by its citizens generally, of the apostolic injunction to entertain the strangers within their gates. The hospitality extended by the Liverpool friends to their visitors on this occasion, both in public and private, was so marked and so munificent, that those of the recipients who spoke in the name of their fellows declared themselves to be perfectly "staggered" by it. The feelings of satisfaction seemed to be mutual on the part of hosts and guests, and there can be no doubt that many pleasant and profitable memories of kindnesses shown, and of Christian fellowship enjoyed, will be one of the outstanding results of the Conference.

The preliminary meetings were mainly of a social and complimentary character, and though they served an excellent purpose, they do not call for lengthened notice in our columns. A conversazione and reception meeting was held in St. George's Hall, on Saturday, September 1, under the presidency of Mr. Alex. Balfour. The delegates and the many townspeople who were present in the capacity of hosts or friends of the work, had the opportunity of exchanging friendly greetings and experiences in an agreeable and informal way. What with the tea, the music, the speeches, and the conversation, the large company passed a long and pleasant evening. The feature of special importance at this introductory meeting and another on Monday morning, was the presence of representatives from most of the Christian communities in the town—Baptist, Congregational, Episcopal, Methodist, and Presbyterian. These gentlemen, speaking on behalf of the different folds of the one flock to which they severally belong, expressed their most unqualified approbation of the Y.M.C.A. movement and their heartiest wishes for its success. One cannot but wonder how there can be or could ever have been any thought of a possible antagonism between the organised churches and the special work of the Association. There seems no reason in the nature of the case why these Associations should not be as helpful to the churches as the Sunday-schools of the land have been. It is comforting to think that unworthy ecclesiastical jealousies and suspicions are fast vanishing before the growing light of experience. This has never, we believe, been so manifest at any previous Y.M.C.A. Conference in Great Britain, and we most thankfully record the fact. On Sunday, Sept. 2, in a large number of the Liverpool pulpits, either by the pastors themselves or by delegates who took their places, the claims of the Y.M.C.A. were advocated and set forth. The result of this admirable arrangement must surely be to awaken a wider and more abiding interest in the religious welfare of young men in this great and influential centre of industry and commerce.

The real business of the Conference may be said to have commenced at 10.30 on the forenoon of Monday, September 3, when Mr. MACFARLANE, of Glasgow, presided, and called for from delegates representing the various districts into which the Kingdom is divided. English reports only were given on Monday, Scotch and Irish friends having their innings the following day. For convenience sake, however, we append here a brief summary of the whole. There was perforce a good deal in these reports that was of a purely routine and statistical character; we confine ourselves to a record of the more striking and specific statements.

Coming from what is now recognised as the "head centre" of the work—Exeter Hall—Mr. CAMERON CHURCHILL said the most encouraging department of their operations was the nightly evangelistic service for young men, which had borne much fruit. The free and persevering distribution of invitation slips to the multitudes of passers-by in the great Strand thoroughfare had been much owned of God in keeping up the attendance at these meetings. There is much expectation of increased blessing on the work among young men during the approaching campaign in London under Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey.

Mr. R. BURN said that a deeply earnest missionary spirit had of late been developed among the members of the Aldersgate-street branch; many of them are being stirred up to offer themselves for work in heathen lands and on the Continent of Europe. As our readers are aware, the first-fruits of this fresh and promising departure have already appeared. Mr. Burn remarked that it would be very helpful and stimulating to them in their work at Aldersgate-street if provincial secretaries who had given letters of commendation to young men proceeding to the metropolis would occasionally write and inquire specifically how these brethren were prospering.

North-west London had its representative in Mr. W. H. MILLS, of Stafford Rooms, who said that the Branch Association there had for many years past been singularly used in raising up and training workers for both the home and foreign fields, as ministers, missionaries, secretaries of associations, and evangelists. A work of much interest and success is carried on by a band of twenty young men at the doors of the music-halls and theatres of the neighbourhood. Their invitations to the Gospel meeting or Bible Class are frequently fruitful in genuine conversion.

From the north of London Mr. ATKINSON, of The Priory, Islington, specially emphasised the value of setting apart an evening each week for meeting and conversing with young men in soul-anxiety. His private, individual conversations with young men on Wednesday evenings were seasons of great encouragement, and he was not seldom kept busy at this blessed occupation of pointing his troubled brothers to the Saviour till the midnight hour. He seriously advised every secretary to give one evening weekly to a kindly sympathetic talk with young men alone. We would strenuously second his plea if we felt assured that all Y.M.C.A. secretaries had the same special qualifications as Mr. Atkinson for this supremely important, but most delicate, service.

Few Y.M.C.A. secretaries have seen a longer period of service in one place than Mr. PEARCE, of the West London branch, which has a special mission in reaching young men engaged, chiefly for short periods, in the large and fashionable business houses that are thickly planted in the neighbourhood. A series of evangelistic services for these, held six months ago, were attended with much blessing, and another series will be held early in October.

As conductor of the Bible class at Bristol for the last twenty-seven years, Mr. OSTLER was able to report that from it had gone forth during that period 700 Sunday school teachers and 30 ministers or missionaries. During the past year they could count up scores of conversions through the Association work generally. Within the last two years, said Mr. W. H. NEWETT, of Manchester, seven had gone from their Association to the Foreign Mission field. Their educational classes were a very helpful and important department of the work. Of the Liverpool branch Mr. LEETWICH was also able to report that several had gone to labour in the high places of the field. Mr. T. W. GLADSTONE, who devotes special attention to the formation of new branches, said that four of these had been started in the West Midland district during the year—Blackpool, Blackburn, St. Helen's, and Bolton.

Mr. MCNAUGHT, of Preston, told the pleasing circumstance that three of the ministers of the town were teachers in the educational classes last winter. They were hoping to establish cocoa rooms as an auxiliary to the association work. Mr. WRIGHT, of Lancaster, said they were all alive, owing to a recent visit from Mr. Henry Thorne, of Derby; now they were going out to work among others. Mr. J. C. MOOR, of Sunderland, also reported great activity among the twenty associations in the North-east district, of which he had the oversight as Travelling Secretary. Mr. W. M. HUDSON, of South Shields, said that the pressing question of social purity had been brought to the front by Bishop Lightfoot. Mr. Thomas Moffat, of Newcastle, he said, had been very successful in dealing with young men in relation to this subject. The CHAIRMAN interpolated a remark that he feared the question of social purity had been too much neglected, and would have to be grappled with by the associations up and down the land.

Coming from the southern seaport of Margate, Mr. STOKES thankfully recorded the impetus given to the work in connection with the opening of Shaftesbury Hall. Mr. MEREDITH, of Plymouth, said there had been very blessed results in that town through the recent mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Young men who had been converted at that time had joined the Association, and were now in active Christian work. They had established a monthly missionary meeting. He would suggest that all the Associations should get a minister to preach a monthly sermon to young men. In the course of subsequent English reports, Mr. CARR, of Birmingham, said they had started a mission to policemen, which had grown out of the riots at Holy Trinity Church at Bordesley. He hoped that soon they would have a service on Sunday mornings, from nine to ten, at every police-station in the town. Mr. SOUTHWELL, of Cardiff, bore testimony to the revived interest in their work which had resulted from the meetings held there by Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

The first of the Scottish delegates to report was Mr. W. M. OATTS, of Glasgow. He said they had a large committee of friends who made it their special business to interest themselves in young men coming into the city from the country. These young fellows were visited and introduced to some Christian Church. They were also introduced if possible to Christian families, so that they might be surrounded wtth the best social influences from the first. Letters of introduction were given to young men leaving for foreign cities. This year he had given 200 such letters of introduction. In every case the young men had been kindly treated and helped in getting work. There were no fewer than 198 Bible-classes or fellowship meetings held in different parts of Glasgow, all connected with the Association.

Mr. W. BROWN, hon. secretary of the Scottish Executive, said they had 168 Associations in the northern part of the kingdom, and 118 of these had a total membership of over 20,000. "Many of our English friends," Mr. Brown naïvely remarked, "will be glad to know these facts, because we find that our young men continually go south, and thus contribute a good deal to your strength." Whereupon the Conference broke into an audible smile; but Mr. George Williams restored the equilibrium by warmly exclaiming, "Quite true!" Mr. Brown paid an unstinted tribute to the worth and qualifications of Mr. Henderson Smith, the lately appointed Travelling Secretary for Scotland. Greenock was represented by Mr. MCPHAIL, who said that they had an accession of 100 during the past year, the result mainly of the Gospel services held by Mr. Moody and others.

Mr. JAMES SMITH, of Dundee, said that the Bible-class was one of the special features of their work; it was 600 strong. The statement of the numbers aroused the enthusiasm of the audience, and Mr. George Williams asked Mr.

mith to "explain the secret of it." Said Mr. aith: I tell the young fellows that it is their uty to bring their companions in; then it is my uty to keep them. This class began with five oung men five years ago. I did not intend to ake any allusion to the point, but I may say iat you must have power with God before you ave power with men. I dare not face these oung men without a long season of prayer—a hole afternoon of waiting upon God. Instead f one getting unduly exalted, it is the most umbling thing in the world to stand before ese 600 young men and seek to bring them to hrist. This is a point that we must have ettled: that it is not our organisations, nor our hemes, however perfectly developed they may e, that are the secret of success; if we are illing to be filled with the Holy Ghost, young en will flock to Christ.

Mr. R. Cotter, of Dublin, spoke of the Evanelistic work among the Roman Catholics, who ould not be reached by the ordinary denomiational agencies, and said that they hoped to xtend Y.M.C.A. work in the south of Ireland uring the coming visit of Messrs. Moody and ankey.

In one year, said Mr. McCann, of Belfast, the umber of members of the Y.M.C.A. in the own had been doubled; there were now between 200 and 1300, and this outward success had een the outcome of spiritual work. A very teresting fact, related by Mr. McCann, must e told. A young man had been out on the anks of the Congo for some time, engaged in usiness pursuits. He came to this country, nd was brought to Christ at Belfast. He had not reviously purposed returning to the Congo, but ow he has resolved to go. When he was out before, e said, he and others had done all in their power throw contempt on Christian missionaries ere, and to hinder their work. Now he was etermined, by God's help, to go back to the ongo, and endeavour to undo some of the bad ork he had done in former days. He has ntered into an engagement with a Manchester ading firm, one condition he has made being at he is not to sell any intoxicating liquors ere.

Brief statements having been made by Mr. oal (Belfast), Mr. Henderson Smith, Mr. arbett (Wexford), Mr. Lapsley (Inverness), and r. Egerton (Dublin), an invitation was given r Mr. W. Brown, on behalf of the Montrose ssociation, to the Scottish Conference to be held ere on the 18th and 19th inst.

Although we have headed this report "A oung Men's Parliament," it is generally underood that the proceedings at these assemblies e purely deliberative, and in no sense legisative. Questions intimately affecting the ecial work of the Y.M.C.A. are expounded and scussed from varied standpoints, and doubtss the preponderating feeling of the delegates ill to some extent influence and shape the ture action of the whole. At the same time e function of the Conference ceases with disssion; no divisions are taken, and no particular ne of action is imposed upon any of its memers. No other course would be feasible, and e think that this arrangement might be taken dvaptage of to introduce at such conenient seasons questions of a less general nd routine nature than those usually rought forward. The topics set down for conderation at Liverpool were all of the utmost nportance; but, with one exception, they were ry general and hackneyed, and had no special earing on the circumstances at the time. They ave, probably, been discussed again and again, nd it is next to impossible to frame any fresh ea with respect to them; moreover, there is, early, a substantial agreement as to their sential and relative importance. Why, then, ould not such burning subjects be chosen as ose only incidentally alluded to—Social Purity nd Temperance? Surely nobody with any equate knowledge of the social conditions of the ssing hour will attempt to deny that intemrance and impurity, with the equally prevaat evil of betting, are the giant evils that e too successfully waging a combined warfare for the destruction of the youth in all our great cities. Is it politic or sensible that these matters should be almost if not altogether ignored on such an auspicious and favouring occasion? Complimentary speeches and toasts, recherché dinners and pleasant excursions, are most excellent things in their way; but, viewed from the serious and tragic side of modern life, it is no hyperbole to say that they almost seem like Nero fiddling with Rome on fire.

Having offered these few critical observations in a brotherly and well-intentioned spirit, we resume our more agreeable task of chronicling the proceedings of the Conference. At the hour of noon on Monday, the delegates, presided over by Mr. Herbert Phillips, of Manchester, were asked to consider

WHAT IS SUCCESS IN Y.M.C.A. WORK?

A paper was read by Mr W. H. Mills, of Stafford Rooms, the pith of which he had cleverly condensed into his closing sentence: "When the individual members of the Association are men filled with the Holy Ghost, and when their testimony has a pungency that affects the consciences and ease of their companions in business, leading them to feel their need of and to seek the Saviour; when the prayer-meetings of the Association are lively and interesting, and attended by the members, and especially by the members of the Committee; when there is brotherly union and co-operation in prosecuting the great aim in view between the members of the Committee; when God's holy Word is read in our meetings with becoming reverence and awe; when the truths of God enunciated are carried home with convincing and converting power to the hearts of the unsaved present; when the Association awakens powerful interest in the churches in the welfare of the young men at large, leading to special efforts on their behalf; when upon the young men of a town or neighbourhood through its instrumentality there is brought to bear a testimony of Divine grace and sufficiency to save them; when the Association is holding its legitimate place in relation to the churches of Christ, encouraging the members in the proper observance and acknowledgment of Divinely-appointed institutions and ordinances; when God gives the work favour in the eyes of those who have means to help it; when men of public spirit and enterprise come forward with a noble generosity, as they have done in Glasgow, Manchester, London, Liverpool, and elsewhere, to enlarge its opportunities by placing suitable and commanding premises at its disposal with a view to the increase and extension of its usefulness—then we need not hesitate to say that the work is successful."

Mr. H. Whitwell, Birmingham, desired to raise a note of warning against the constant tendency to secularise the work of the Associations. We must not be led away by side issues from the central point. Secular agencies are useful adjuncts, and help to swell the numbers, but large numbers do not necessarily mean success. An Association numbering 1000 may not do such a great work for God as one with 100 members. An Association may have large educational classes, social meetings, recreation clubs, &c., and yet it may be utterly dead. An American friend, speaking to him on one occasion of an Association in that country, which was apparently in a most flourishing state, confessed that he could not put his hand on a single young man who had been converted during the preceding twelve months. If real success is being attained, the secular agencies will no doubt be useful in drawing young men within the reach of the moral and spiritual influences that ought to emanate from the members. While the workers do not depend on manifest results, yet, if they are faithful, God will give results. If associates are constantly being drafted into the ranks of "members," that will be a test of real success.

Mr. R. Burn said he believed that success would be in proportion to the personal consecration of the workers, and the amount of aggressive service undertaken. The general brightness and heartiness of the meetings is an element that should not be overlooked. That Association will be the most successful whose members so show forth Christ in their words and deeds, that they are able to influence those whom they meet in the business of daily life. Care must be taken in the selection of workers, so that each gets the work he is best suited for. The work of the Reception Committee is most valuable in making new members feel at home. There should also be wise and energetic administration in the finance department.

Mr. Spraggon, of Sunderland, and Mr. Henderson Smith, having briefly spoken, the sitting was closed by Mr. Williams, who said: You may polish a young man on the outside to any degree, but unless the Holy Ghost changes his heart, there is no true success. With respect to intellectual culture, if it is found to interfere with the spiritual work, then it is a fair thing to consider what the Lord would have you to do.

WHAT CAN BE DONE FOR THE BOYS?

This was the topic of a very interesting and useful discussion on Monday evening, Mr. A. Balfour in the chair. It was, as we think, the most vital and practical of all the subjects submitted to the Conference. Mr. Hind Smith read a forcibly-expressed paper, in which he strongly argued for the founding of a "Junior section" of the Y.M.C.A. From twelve to sixteen years of age, he said, is the most perilous period of any. Prevention is proverbially better than cure. It is not at all necessary that boys should "sow their wild oats" and then reform. Why not secure their becoming decided Christians before the age of sixteen? Young men will not mingle in Association rooms with boys, and therefore we need to establish junior branches. The experiment has been tried in America with great satisfaction and success. Mr. Smith submitted the following hints, chiefly taken from observations lately made in the United States:—

After much prayer let a few of the most juvenile members of the present committee be separated for this special work. Let them be those who have youthful sympathies, and who have been boys themselves: some men in the present day never have. Secure the co-operation and interest of the parents, of Christian professors, teachers in public schools, Sunday-school superintendents, and teachers of senior classes. There should be a much closer connection between our Association and the Sunday-schools. An alliance might be formed between these junior branches, and the "Children's Scripture Union." Let the committee of the junior sections be composed half of old boys and half of real boys. I would not draw the line too tight in this case as to terms of admission. Lads of good moral character might be eligible. Set apart two rooms in or near your Association buildings—one for reading and quiet games, and the other for devotional meetings, lectures, &c. As Mr. Bishop, of the Children's Special Service Mission, has remarked, boys need something every evening. Bible-classes and prayer-meetings should be held, and the boys should be encouraged to take part. Some of the most capable of our members should devote themselves to this work.

Mr. Oatts said he was himself an illustration of the importance of work among the boys. He joined the Glasgow Association at fourteen, and if he had not been encouraged to do so at that early age, probably he would not now be occupying an official position in the Association. How impressible are boys' hearts! If we enter into their youthful sports and occupations we shall soon gain a hold upon their hearts. Then, as young men are the best agents for reaching other young men, so it is with boys. We must not, however, interfere with Sunday school work. During his last visit to Glasgow, Mr. Moody stirred up a great deal of interest on behalf of the boys, and special work on their behalf has been carried on ever since. A weekly meeting is held, composed of the better class of children, for the study of God's Word. Every month the parents are invited to be be present, and some well-known minister or other Christian man gives an address. The parents are thus led to take an interest in the work. Mr. Oatts gave some details of the Glasgow Foundry Boys' Religious Society, in connection with which there are now 20,000 young people who meet at various times for Bible classes, prayer meetings, social gatherings, &c. There is a provident department with a savings bank, and an educational department, in connection with which school fees are paid and prizes given. Altogether, Mr. Oatt's statement was replete with deeply-interesting facts, and showed that while others have been theorising or resolving, the Glasgow folks, with their customary enterprise, have set about the work and done it.

Mr. McPhail, of Greenock (one of the oldest of the delegates in appearance, but, with the exception of Mr. George Williams, perhaps the most youthful in an abundant flow of spirits), said he was another specimen of the advantages that would be derived from this suggested "junior section." He told a somewhat similar story to that recited by Mr. Oatts. Then Mr. Franklin, of the newly-formed branch at Hammersmith, gave his experiences. He had been converted at an early age at Stafford Rooms, but he was deemed too young to join the Y.M.C.A. Under these discouraging circumstances, several youths, of whom he was one, were formed by Messrs. Unitt and Sons into a Youths' Christian Society. They had a very happy time. A Home was opened where, for a few shillings a week, they could reside. Of those who were in that Youths' Society three are now in the ministry; one has been a missionary in Madagascar for ten years, another is in the South Sea Islands, while yet another is at Stafford Rooms, and he is at Hammersmith.

Following Mr. Franklin came Mr. John Short, of Notting-hill, whose story was heard with unfeigned attention and interest. At the age of fourteen he went to reside in Kensington, and was in great danger of being at once led astray by evil companions. It so happened that a Christian gentleman of the neighbourhood who called to see his employer took notice of him, invited him to his house, and was the means of leading him to the Saviour. He also was too young for the Y.M.C.A., but he was preserved in the good path through other agencies. Now he is engaged in Christian work for the boys.

Mr. Rees, of Neath, gave an amusing account of the troubles they had in their Association to find accommodation for some boys' meetings; the lads, driven from one room to another, are now clamouring to have the use of an attic, for which they will pay 1s. a week. Mr. Hodder referred to the good service that is being done by the "Working Lads' Institutes" and "Homes for Working Boys" in London, but these reach a different class from the lads in mercantile houses, for whom something he said must be done at once. Mr. Smith, Dundee, said they had been for several years seeking to save the boys. In the work of tract distribution throughout the town a boy is sent out with an older and more experienced worker.

Several other friends having contributed their quota to the important conversation, Mr. Williams closed with some of his customary words of cheery counsel and encouragement. It is a pretty well-established fact, he said, that if a young fellow has not decided for Christ before he is twenty, the odds are very much against him. Bring this subject before your Committees when you return home, and consider what you can do.

SPIRITUAL WORK

was the first theme set down for consideration on Tuesday morning. Mr. Thomas Matheson, who presided, paved the way by urging that in order to successful work there must be a personal possession of life by the worker, and also a whole-hearted consecration, with no conscious reservations.

In formally opening up the subject, Mr. Southwell, of Cardiff, dwelt upon the ephemeral nature of that which is simply intellectual or physical, as compared with the spiritual. He urged that the spiritual work undertaken should be of a thorough and unmistakable kind. Things that are incongruous must not be mixed. As a practical method of promoting efficiency he suggested that at future Conferences some one should be deputed to conduct a model Bible-class in the presence of the delegates.

In an earnest address on the same topic, Mr. Palmer, of Nottingham, related an illustrative parable, which was yet not a parable, but a leaf out of his own experience. This day week, he said, I was very much enjoying a tricycle trip through Lincolnshire and Yorkshire. On Tuesday morning I started from Scarborough for Whitby. The gentleman who directed me on the road said, "You will find it a rough road, but if you keep the telegraph wires in view you will be all right." It was a beautiful morning; the birds were singing and the wind was playing on the wires; for fourteen miles I went along very happily. All at once I missed the sound of the music above me; when I looked there were no wires to be seen. The main road I should have taken was marked in red on the map. I had got on to a bye-road marked black. Now began my troubles. I was about three miles off the main road; I had not noticed it; I had not been looking up very much. As I went on I came to an inn, which strangely enough was called "The Shepherd's Arms," and there I got some eggs and milk. But I did not inquire the way; I simply refreshed my own resolutions. I was determined to investigate this new road for myself, and find out its beauties or otherwise. Another mile and I saw a very steep decline in front of me. Then, instead of the machine carrying me, I had to carry the machine for about two miles! This road led to the sands, and by the time I got there I was nearly done up. Then I thought of distributing some little books; but there was no joy in my heart—I was tired. I found that I should have to retrace my steps again, and it was uphill. Then I was at the other end of the machine pushing it up. I asked several friends: "Will you give me a lift?" They said they had their own work to do. After two or three miles of uphill work I got to the red-mark road again, and heard the music of the wires. My heart went out in thankfulness for that. It was getting towards evening, and it was five miles more to Whitby. Then, to my horror, I saw an immensely steep place. I went down a little way, when a voice sounded, "Aye, aye, sir, my son knows the way, he will help you." So he put himself where I had been, and bore the weight of the machine, right on till we came to a bridge. I said to a policeman, "Will you tell me the best hotel about here?" He said: "The best in all Yorkshire that I know of is 'The Angel Hotel.'" That was not very far away. Never was bed so sweet to me, I think. As I put my head on the pillow I thought to myself, "You have had a rough day of it." Then I recounted my experiences, and I saw that if once we lose our communion with God we get into byepaths and we have no joy in his service. As Mr. Palmer unfolded his personal narrative with more detail than we have reproduced, his brother delegates were not slow to catch the "points;" some of the words spoken at the Conference will doubtless be forgotten, but this good brother's parable, we think, will stick in the memory; maybe it will point many a moral and adorn many a tale.

It was, perhaps, not in strict accordance with the programme, and in truth it caused some confusion of thought in the conversation that followed, but Mr. G. Clarke, of the Railway Mission, could scarcely be blamed for seizing the opportunity of explaining the scope and progress of the work in which he is so deeply interested. He urged that it was a work for which the Y.M.C.A. ought to feel special concern; in the United States it is a regularly organised branch of Association work. The spiritual necessities of railway employés throughout the land, he urged, were more pressing than either those of the children or the young men. The previous day, in Liverpool, a man had told him he had not been to church or chapel for thirteen years; he had not had a free Sunday for eleven of these years. As Simon beckoned to his partners to help him with his draught of fishes, so, said Mr. Clarke, we ask your aid in this great work. He made the practical and pleasing announcement that he was shortly to conduct a two weeks' Mission to railway men in Liverpool, and that some of the local friends had promised him their material assistance in the effort. Several delegates afterwards rose and expressed much sympathy with this movement, and spoke of similar efforts made by the Y.M.C.A. with which they were connected.

In resumption of the subject proper, Mr. Mills said that secretaries ought not to be burdened with so much secular and routine work, which practically unfits them for the proper discharge of their spiritual functions. The Associations, he felt sure, were killing many of their best men by burdening them with that which was not of a spiritual character. Mr. J. F. Fawckner, of Newport, said they were able to carry on the whole of their spiritual work for less than £100 per annum. Moreover, they did not solicit subscriptions from any outsiders; they found all that they required in their own pockets. Mr. R. Burn said that he had gained a great access of spiritual power since he was led to see Christ not only as the Atonement for the sins of the world, but as a living present Advocate and Helper. The conversation was continued by Mr. Thorne, Mr. McNaughton, Mr. Butcher, Mr. Moor, Mr. Leftwich, Mr. Gladstone, and Mr. Mullinger; the last-named gentleman described the vicissitudes through which the Birkenhead branch had passed—three attempts to carry on its work without paying due regard to the spiritual aspects of it, and as many consequent failures. It was once more resuscitated on "the Paris basis," and it has prospered ever since.

Mr. Williams once again put the finishing touch to the talk by saying that whatever each Association found it could do best under the circumstances let them do it, with all their might, only "let not him that eateth condemn him that eateth not."

EDUCATIONAL WORK.

At an adjourned sitting, this subject came up for handling, under the presidency of Mr. M. H. Hodder. The first speaker was Mr. Newett, of Manchester, who contended that the educational classes are a necessity, because through them the Association gets hold of many young men in large cities, who would otherwise be quite outside the pale of its influence. Numbers of youths, on coming from the country, discover that they are deficient in many branches of knowledge; in some cases they are even unable to read and write. The classes of the Manchester Y.M.C.A. for eaching such elementary subjects are attended by an average of 200 youths. Much is said o the need of emigration, but a great proportion of those who go abroad need never d so if they were thoroughly qualified for work a home. Remarks of a very similar purport wer added by Mr. Jameson (Bristol), and Mr. Josep Hales (Liverpool). The latter gentleman sai that these classes were most valuable as counter-attraction to the public-house, the billiar room, and to the private clubs, that are ruinin hundreds of young men. The great point i to get Christian teachers for the classes, so tha the influence exerted shall be all in the righ direction.

A paper on the "Social and Physical Work of the Association was read by Hon. A. H Kinnaird. He regretted the absence of Mr. W T. Paton, who would have spoken of the wor that Mr. Quintin Hogg and himself had bee enabled to do at the London Polytechnic, Regen street. The Bible-class on Sunday afternoon has had a membership of 550 during the las twelve months. There are 2000 members in th stitution, and a class membership of 5000, hich is expected to reach 8000 during the oming winter. Mr. Kinnaird proceeded to dvocate the use of the gymnasium and athletic orts in connection with Y.M.C.A. work, for easons akin to those adduced by the previous peakers with reference to the educational classes. He instanced the case of a professional rower ho joined their athletic club; earnest prayer as made on his behalf for some time, and efore long he was found at the inquiry-meeting n anxiety about salvation.

Several gentlemen took part in the conversaon that followed, the points on which most tress was laid being the necessity of having hristian teachers, and of not allowing the hysical element to displace or hinder the piritual.

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL.

Though not on the published programme, this atest development of the Y.M.C.A. was made h text for an informal talk at the close of the fternoon session. It would have been more atisfactory if the time had permitted questions o be asked and suggestions offered by the dele-ates generally, but probably they were satisfied y the official statements made that this Council, hich is still in its infancy, ought to have urther space for the maturing of its operations efore they are called in question. We under-tand that at a meeting with a deputation of he Scottish Executive it was agreed to consoli-late the two, and that it should henceforth be alled "The United Kingdom Council."

One of the hon. secretaries, Mr. W. H. Mills, ehearsed the steps that had been taken in form-ng the Council, and said that though it was nly eight months old it was developing in power nd usefulness. It had up to the present time cost bout £300, of which £250 had been spent in the irect work of employing travelling secretaries. Towards the cost various Associations had con-ributed about £70, while Mr. G. Williams and Mr. Samuel Morley had each subscribed £100, nd Mr. Wallace and Mr. Tritton £50 each. A valuable table of statistical information has een prepared from returns made by the Asso-iations.

Mr. G. Williams said these returns, which id not, however, include the Scottish branches, howed that twenty-two new Associations had een brought into existence during the year. As gainst twenty-nine that had died the previous ear, only twelve had died last year. (Mr. Hind Smith: "Some of them are not buried yet.") We are only at the fringe of the work, continued Mr. Williams; there are hundreds of towns in England that have no Association. It is our ope and desire that an Association should be lanted in every place at least whose population exceeds 5000.

An interesting account was rendered by Mr. Henry Thorne of his stewardship in the work of forming new branches and reviving others that were languishing. The Evangelistic services he had been privileged to conduct in numerous places had materially tended to the extension and consolidation of the work.

The most interesting and important gathering of the Conference, as far as the general public were concerned, was the

on Tuesday evening. The spacious building was well filled with an audience of th right sort, over which Mr. A. Balfour presided. We regret that we have not space even for a résumé of the telling speeches of the evening. The Chairman was happy in his commendation of the Y.M.C.A. to his fellow-citizens of Liverpool. If our commercial relations with the world at large are to redound to our national credit and advan-tage, how necessary it is that we should be re-presented in foreign lands by those who go abroad not simply to buy and sell but to be examples to the heathen of all that is righteous and Christian. In the course of his speech Mr. Balfour put in an earnest plea on behalf of Mrs. Menzies' work among the young women, and the ragged-schools in the city; the latter he said were greatly in need of teachers. Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., gave one of those thoughtful and practical addresses which are winning for him an honourable place among the educational forces of the day. His noble and manly appeal to the young men of Liverpool to choose the better path, and live so that future generations might have cause to love and admire them, could scarcely have been made in vain. Mr. Smith is evidently a great favourite with his constituents, and justly so; he is a man of whom any constituency may well be proud. The Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, Mr. G. Macfarlane, and Mr. Geo. Williams, all acquitted selves to the satisfaction of the audience, and Mr. Clarke Aspinall, as he is wont to do, roused the enthusiasm to a white heat. Though his oratory is cast in a somewhat lighter mould than one looks for on such an occasion, there was in it a substratum of serious, earnest purpose that brought it into accordance with the purpose of the gathering.

Although the deliberations of the Conference proper may be said to have closed on Tuesday afternoon, there yet remained the farewell breakfast on Wednesday morning, and the excursion to Mr. Balfour's country seat at Mount Alyn, North Wales, in the afternoon. At the breakfast many warm and sincere words of congratulation were exchanged by hosts and guests, and Mr. Wells Thatcher found an opportunity of briefly advocating the claims of the kindred Commercial Travellers' Christian Association, of which he is the active secretary. The trip to Mount Alyn, made in the most favourable atmospheric conditions, was highly enjoyed by all, and was a fitting climax to the unbounded kindness and hospitality displayed by the Liverpudlians to their visitors. It was agreed that no British Conference should be convened next year, in order that undivided interest should be centred on the International Conference, which falls then to be held in the city of Berlin.

The morning prayer-meetings, we may add, were well attended, and were marked by a fervent and devotional spirit, and were a fitting preparation for the engagements of the day. The printed programme of the Conference, got up in the most elegant and artistic style, in book form, was so unique as to merit a word of praise; many of the delegates will doubtless prize it as a pretty reminder of a pleasant and profitable season of Christian fellowship. The Liverpool Committee, and especially Mr. Joseph Hales, their genial and popular secretary, deserve hearty thanks for the complete and careful arrangements.

REV. HENRY DENING, well known to our readers as an earnest and successful evangelist, has been appointed to the incumbency of Bagotrath Church, Dublin.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for week ending September 22:—Sept. 16, Luke xxiii. 27-43; Sept. 17, Luke xxiii. 44-56; Sept. 18, Luke xxiv. 1-12; Sept. 19, Luke xxiv. 13-24; Sept. 20, Luke xxiv. 25-35; Sept. 21, Luke xxiv. 36-53; Sept. 22, James i. 1-11.

CHICAGO.—Mr. Moody will be in Chicago from Sept. 16 to 20. As a preparation for the Christian Convention, the managers of the Young Men's Christian Association engaged Major Whittle to take charge of the Sunday evening meetings at Farwell Hall, and to aid in the noon meetings. The outlook for Christian work in the coming fall and winter is hopeful. The summer meetings have been large for the season, and few Sunday-schools have been given up. Reports at a Monday noon meeting at Farwell Hall, of religious interests in and about the city, were extremely interesting. Colonel Clarke, of the Pacific Garden Missions, said that in six evenings they had had forty-eight inquirers, with half the number converted, and that the attendance had not been seriously diminished by the warm weather. Earnest Christian men, having returned from a vacation in the lumber district of Michigan, give encouraging accounts of meetings held in camps where the Gospel is rarely preached.—New York Christian Union.

DIFFICULTIES IN SPAIN.

PASTOR FLIEDNER, of Madrid, has forwarded to the Christianisme au XIXe. Siècle an interesting account of Christian work by himself and his Christian colleagues, from which we translate a portion for the benefit of our readers:—

It is impossible for us to give those who are unacquainted with the spirit of the administration in Spain any adequate idea of the difficulties which try our patience and impede our work, causing us to lose much precious time. I will cite one example. Four years ago, Mr. Rude, an Englishman, sent to us several cases of Spanish books, printed in London. Owing to the books having been issued from English presses, they could not be circulated in Spain until their titles had been published in the Journal Officiel. We proceeded to take the necessary steps to this end, but the Minister of Public Instruction was not willing to publish a list of Protestant works, and so made divers evasions. At last, to rid himself of the difficulty, he authorised their entry upon a Royal Warrant, which dispensed with the publication of their titles. But the Minister of Finance insisted upon the requirements of the law being fulfilled. The result of this official contest naturally was that the books remained at the Custom House.

Upon a change of Ministry we renewed our efforts, and the result was the publication of the list in the Journal Officiel. But we had not even then reached the end of our troubles. When we went to the Custom House to claim our books, we were told that they were not there, and though perfectly sure that we were misinformed, we were obliged to commence a new effort to discover what had become of them.

Yet another example. One of our colporteurs in the north of the Peninsula had all his books seized by a governor. All our appeals, whether to the magistrates or the governor of the province of the Asturias were of no avail; we were obliged to state our case to the Minister, and we went three or four times a week during official hours in order to see him, and after waiting over an hour in the ante-chamber, we were told that we could not have an audience of him.

Mr. Joseph Viliesid writes to say that the Jesuits are in full power in the town. The misery which has reigned in Andalusa, and especially in one part of it, has given them unusual advantage, the rich and benevolent of the district having chosen them to be their almoners. I am persuaded that this great preponderance of Jesuitical influence has had much to do in leading to the formation of the dreadful Society known as the "Black Hand," and a local journal supports me in this belief. Our schools have suffered; the parents, threatened by the Jesuits with refusal of all help if they continue to send their children to our school, have withdrawn them. Nevertheless, the progress of our work has not been altogether stayed. I am able, by the help of God, to hold new meetings in several houses, besides those we hold in the church. One of these houses thus lent in brotherly and generous sympathy is situated at one of the extreme points of the town, in the midst of the gipsy quarter, and many of these poor people come to hear, showing great interest in the truths of religion that we proclaim. One of these is a poor blind gipsy, who is the happy possessor of an old piano, which was given to him by some benefactress; this instrument has been brought to our meeting place, and another of these Bohemians, who has learnt to play it, leads our singing with it.

Since the death of Miss Ross all the burden of the responsibility of the work at Puerto Santa-Maria has devolved upon my friend Don Rafael Blanco and myself, and we find ourselves ofttimes in great straits for want of the necessary funds. The meetings have been well attended, and the schools have in them nearly 150 children, who are instructed by three young women that Miss Ross had prepared for Mission work. We need a master for the boys, but the funds will not admit of such an expense. We can, however, raise our Ebenezer, and say, "Hitherto the Lord has helped us."

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

MR. RICHARD WEAVER.

THIS servant of the Lord, after his labours at Dundee, referred to in our last issue, went to Bradley Green to labour for a few days. He is engaged for Jarrow-on-Tyne for the 22nd inst., where he hopes to work for a fortnight, and afterwards at Grangemouth. We regret to say that he is far from well; he asks prayer both for his efforts in the Gospel and for restoration to health.

AYR, N.B.

A ten days' Mission, conducted by Rev. Edward T. Mateer and Mr. W. Breach, has been concluded. There has been no such interest manifested here since the revival of 1859. The building became more crowded as the nights passed. One encouraging feature was the presence of many who seldom come under the sound of the Gospel. Mr. Mateer is admirably adapted for Evangelistic work. Mr. Breach sings the Gospel with great power and expression.

J. M.

BETHANY HALL, GLASGOW.

The meetings which are being carried on in this place in the East-end of Glasgow are proving a great blessing. The attendance has been good, and on one night recently upwards of sixty people rose and asked prayer on their behalf. A number of these were men, who accepted Christ as their Saviour. Such a blessing has not been afforded to the work in this district for a good while, and is a great encouragement to the workers.

ON THE BEACH AT HASTINGS.

An esteemed correspondent writes: "We had such a splendid time last month on the beach. Mr. Sturdy, the vicar of St. Paul's, Dorking, was down here taking Mr. Whitfield's duty at St. Mary's. He and Mr. George Soltau set to work at once vigorously with the children's services, which were conducted every morning on the beach opposite Warrior-square, excepting when it was wet, when we all adjourned into the Presbyterian school-room, which the minister (the Rev. Jeffrey Johnstone) kindly placed at our disposal throughout the Mission. Mr. Soltau also had drawing-room meetings for boys and girls, one of which was a grand reaping-time. The invalids also seemed to appreciate the beach services as much as the children, some coming regularly throughout the whole month; and all, old and young, seemed alike sorrowful when they were brought to a close.

"OUR ROOM" AT DAWLISH.

I have recently had the pleasure of spending a few days at this lovely sea-side resort, and at the time of my visit, Mr. Clewerth, of the Evangelisation Society, was bringing to a close a series of special services. They had extended over a month, and were the means of attracting crowded congregations to the conveniently situated and substantially-built hall known as "Our Room," which is a great acquisition to the town, erected in 1882, at the sole expense of a public-spirited resident, Mr. W. Tebbitt, of Brooklands. "Our Room" answers the double purpose of a café and place of evening resort for the working classes and seafaring men, as well as a most convenient and elegantly-fitted hall for evangelistic work, lectures, Temperance addresses, and meetings of a similar character. Lavatories and side rooms are conveniently attached to the main hall, the roof, walls, and floor of which are all finished in a highly artistic style; no expense seems to have been spared in making "Our Room" complete.

The erection and maintenance of such a place of assembly is calculated to accomplish grand results, and in such a work of Christian philanthropy it is much to be desired that the noble example set by our dear friends, Mr. and Mrs. Tebbitt, may lose its singularity by finding many imitators. Robert Adcock.

Bracondale, Norwich, Sept. 7.

SUMMERSTOWN, OXFORD.

John Harris, from the Evangelisation Society, commenced a fifteen days' Mission here on August 12, and had a good and appreciative audience every week-night, with blessing to many souls.

GIBRALTAR.

Rev. Mr. Andrews, who has just returned from Gibraltar, reports on the good work being done there among the soldiers by Miss Macdonald and Miss Archibald. Miss Macdonald speaks while her co-worker assists by singing and playing the harmonium. The meetings have been well attended, and those who remained to the second meeting have been talked to; in many cases they have confessed and accepted Christ as their Saviour.

GLASGOW TENT.

This place of meeting continues to be the birth-place of souls, and the attendance of men is wonderful. One evening, recently, a poor wandering hawker was present, when he was spoken to by some of the workers; he professed to have found the Saviour. A night or two after he met one of the workers and placed in his hand a sixpence, saying it was for the purpose of assisting in keeping an open door for such as he who wandered about.

WORTHING.

Mr. F. Hodgson Jones recently concluded a Children's Mission here. Many children and also some adults can say that it was good for them to have been here. The many Christian workers who attended the morning prayer meeting, prior to assembling with the little ones on the beach, expressed their thanks for blessing received from the able exposition of the "Levitical Offerings." Miss Rice, Mr. and Mrs. Box, and Mr. and Mrs. Nash, who were visiting Worthing at the time, gave their warm active support. The Mission lasted from Aug. 15 to 31; children and friends alike expressed regret that it was so short.

T. Rabone Dewe.

VALE OF LEVEN, N.B.

At the Glasgow Noon Prayer Meeting recently Mr. A. Orr Ewing presided, and gave an account of the wonderful work which had been carried on here. An Evangelistic meeting was held every Sabbath night in the Public Hall, which had been greatly owned by God. Not a Sabbath evening had passed since the New Year but souls had been brought to the feet of the Saviour. The attendance at these meetings was fully 1200; the fellowship gathering often numbered 250 to 300, over twenty rising to give texts. The children's meetings had proved a blessing to old and young. The Gospel Temperance meeting, both outdoors and in the hall, on Saturdays, was encouraging to the workers, and many had accepted Christ and now wear the little bit of blue. In the outlying places Young Men's Christian Associations are being formed.

PORTOBELLO, N.B.

From August 16 up to the end of the month meetings for children and young people were held daily on the sands at Portobello, by Mr. F. W. White and Mr. W. Milne, in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission. Attracted by the unusual sight of a number of children, ranged in order on semi-circular rows of sand-seats, many adults, passing along the promenade, remained to the services, and, with the young people, often made up a large congregation. Both for singing and speaking, valuable assistance was rendered alike by visitors and residents. During the greater part of the time, several of the workers met for prayer in a room in the town, shortly before commencing the service on the sands. The Mission was not closed without a token of God's blessing resting upon it, but it is confidently believed that greater results will follow than any likely to be known in this world.

CONTINENTAL NOTES.

BOHEMIA.

AT Friedland, in Bohemia, the first Protestant worship for 200 years was celebrated on August 5. This service was well attended, as also the Communion which followed.

PARIS.

The Committee of the Paris Religious Tract Society is offering a prize of £10 for the best Tract on "Le Dimanche de nos enfants," to be addressed to parents.

GERMANY.

The Luther Festival of this year is to be celebrated at Dortmund by the building of a Christian house which is to bear the name of Luther. It is to be used as a place of re-union and centre for all the religious works of this city. At Hörde, in the same district, a large church is to be built the foundation-stone of which is to be laid on November 10.

THE BALTIC PROVINCES.

A considerable propagandist movement is said to be taking place on the part of the Greek Church, in the midst of the Lutheran population of the Baltic provinces. In the single circle of Real 500 peasants are said to have passed over to the Russian Church on the Czar's coronation-day. A secret appeal is circulated among the peasants, urging them in a pressing manner to embrace the religion of their Emperor. Upon complying with this invitation, the maintenance of certain private liberties is guaranteed to them.—L'Evangéliste.

STOCKHOLM.

Next year the Evangelical Alliance proposes to hold its annual gathering in the beautiful capital of Sweden. For many years women's work has been a prominent feature in the Christian life of Stockholm. Ladies distribute Bibles and Christian writings, and engage in home and foreign Mission work of the most varied kind. Bible-women, under the guidance of Frl. Elsa Borg, an experienced Christian, are doing a much-blessed work in visiting the sick and poor. A Mission to sailors is spread over the land. In the outermost circle of the city "Mission huts" are erected; a simple, pious couple live in each house, and receive into it such as need help and hospitality. A large room is used by Bible-women and town missionaries for Bible-readings &c.

The Bible-women's home in the southern part of the city is the centre for meetings, and is used as a place where women may be trained for work among the lost and suffering. This work has been greatly blessed. The soldiers of the army and navy won to Christ, through the preaching of Lord Radstock and others, have formed a Christian Soldiers' Union, and have hired a room where they meet together for prayer and reading.—Der Wahrheitszeuge.

METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE.—This place of worship is again open, after having been closed for renovation. Mr. Spurgeon stated last week that the cost was £1200, two-thirds of which had been contributed.

BARBICAN MISSION TO THE JEWS.—At the last quarterly committee meeting it was resolved that, in view of the rapid growth of the Mission, every effort should be made to commend its operations to the Christian public. These embrace weekly addresses at Albion Hall, London-wall, instruction in the night-school, Harvey-street, Hoxton, Bible-readings at Barbican House, house to house visitation, Scripture and tract distribution, besides the Brighton Branch work during the summer. Mr. Warschawski, unhappily, has for the last two months been suffering from inflammation in the eyes, by which he is still hindered from taking his usual active part in the work. The last annual report is replete with interesting information, and will be forwarded to any address. Help will be thankfully received by Rev. J. Edmond, 97, Highbury-hill, N.; or by the Superintendent, Mr. Paul Warschawski, 6, Farleigh-road, Stoke Newington, N.

Letters to the Editor.

SCHOLASTIC EMIGRATION.

Sir,—I read with interest the letter of Expectans in The Christian of August 2.

Let me say to him, and to others like him, that some of our schools are closed at present for want of teachers; that school inspectors are always glad to make the acquaintance of young men and women who are able to teach, who have good testimonials as to character, and a fair amount of mental furniture. The pay of teachers is sure, and something may be saved from the smallest salary, after paying for board and clothing. Our Ontario system of education is deemed superior to Scotland and even Prussia, and rapid advances may be made by enterprising and devoted teachers. Ministers of religion, lawyers, and members of Parliament are found in our land who commenced their public career as school teachers.

I know school teachers who are now on the retired list who have farms of their own—money out at interest, and a pension for life; and with our expanding power we may safely say, "And yet there is room!"

THE RELIGIOUS CONDITION OF SHOREDITCH.

Sir,—My attention has been drawn to a statement made at a Drawing-room Meeting in aid of the Special Religious Services at Theatres and Mission-halls, by the Rev. H. Webb-Peploe, M.A., and reported in a recent issue of your paper, to the effect that "in five parishes in Shoreditch there were 38,000 people of the abject poor, and in these five parishes there was not a single place of worship belonging to any Dissenting body, and only nine churches with sittings for 5,500 people, and in these sittings there were only found 2100 persons at one service in April, 1883. . . . They found from that state of things that wherever there was abject poverty Free Churches could not live, it was only by such efforts as that (theatre services, &c.) that the abject poor could be reached." The natural inference is, that nothing is being done by the Free Churches for the populations of these districts. Immediately on receiving this report I communicated with Mr. Webb-Peploe and also with the Secretary of the Special Committee, to whom the preparation of the statistics had been entrusted, and found that the parishes referred to were St. Augustine, St. Chad, and St. Columba, Haggerstone; St. Peter, Hoxton; and St. Luke, Old-street.

Will you allow me a word of explanation? The statement is not in itself quite accurate, for in the parish of St. Luke there are two places, a Friends' Meeting House in Coleman-street and a Wesleyan Mission-room in Old-street, with accommodation together for over 1000 people; and a very interesting work is being carried on by the Society of Friends there. Where the statement is not absolutely inaccurate it is utterly misleading; for example, it is said that there are nine churches belonging to the Church of England, whereas four of these are only Mission-halls accommodating in all 630 people. Then, although there is no Dissenting chapel in four of the parishes, yet provision is made in the immediate neighbourhood, which is accessible to the people of these districts. In one case a Wesleyan Chapel is simply on the other side of the street which bounds the parish, and there are four ministers of Free Churches, who testify that they draw largely from these very parishes. Without going into details, but after a careful examination of the whole district, the conclusion at which we arrive is, that any person residing in any one of the five parishes can, in seven minutes' walk, find any of the following Free Churches, Baptist, Methodist, or Congregational. There are at least 57 Free Churches and Mission-halls at a distance of from twelve yards to a mile from these parishes.

Detailed information, in confirmation of these statements, has been sent both to Mr. Webb-Peploe and to the secretary of the Committee referred to, so that they may be able to verify the statements for themselves.

It is only right to add that Mr. Webb-Peploe had given the figures as they were furnished to him by the secretary of the Committee, and that he had no intention to cast a slur on his Nonconformist brethren, but simply used the figures as a plea for charitable works of Evangelisation in halls, theatres, &c. The statement, however, is so apt to be misunderstood, that I think it necessary to give this explanation.

DROITWICH.

Dear Sir,—I have paid three visits to this place during the past twelve months, and as any Christian must do, have felt interested in the spiritual condition of the people. I am not able, owing to ill health, to walk about, but I have made friends with several of the Lord's people here, and have gained so much information from them that I wish to supplement the remarks recently copied by you from the Droitwich Guardian. I say nothing of the clergymen, for I only know one personally, a curate of one of the churches, and a truly enlightened and zealous man.

I wish to state that a gentleman of the place has had a hall open for Gospel work in the poorest part of the town for the last thirty-five years, where the Word is faithfully taught every Sunday morning, the Gospel preached in the evening, and a Sunday-school of about 250 children held in the afternoon, under the zealous superintendence of this gentleman's daughter. An evangelist has been conducting special services and visiting from house to house for some weeks past. I have had the privilege of taking part in Bible meetings of about fifty people of the upper class in this gentleman's drawing-room for the past two weeks

I only ask you to mention these things that it may be known there is a light shining for the Lord here, and that He has much people in this place.

SOUTHAMPTON CONFERENCE.

PRAISE the Lord for abundant and glorious blessing at Southampton Conference, prolonged to twelve days. The Conference was at the first gathered in the Lord's name. It was begun with praise; it was kept in the Lord's presence right through. The graciously guided, blessed teaching was given by several of God's servants. But the Lord's own presence was revealed to many by the Holy Ghost; 1800 attended the last meeting. It is believed several scores were brought to Christ, and hundreds have been refreshed and strengthened.

While those known by men as High Church, Evangelical, and Dissenters took part, all these earthly distinctions were lost as the children of God worshipped and prayed in the presence of the Lord. To Him be the glory for ever!

MR. J. P. COHEN.—The address of this worker is now 30, Claremont-road, Forest Gate, London, E. He still continues to labour with good effect among the Jews of East London.

GLASGOW CONVENTION.—The Glasgow Christian Convention, which was fixed to take place at the end of September, has been postponed, in order that it may be fixed on a date when Mr. Moody and those who accompany him may be present.

UNITED KINGDOM ALLIANCE.—Mr. T. W. Glover, Southampton, has been granted twelve months' leave of absence, in order that he may accompany Mr. R. T. Booth on a Mission tour in Australia, Tasmania, New Zealand, &c., leaving about the 1st of December next.

ORPHANS AT DOVER.—This season over 400 London orphan children have already been received at the Dover Orphans' Rest, the children having derived great benefit from their sojourn at the sea-side. The Home was only established last year, and has been so much in request that it has been found necessary to hire additional premises to provide sufficient accommodation.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.—A farewell meeting was held on the 5th inst., at Albert-street Church, Belfast, to commend Misses Harriet and Jane Black to the Lord on their departure as missionaries for China in connection with the China Inland Mission. They are daughters of the late Rev. Moses Black, of Kilmore. A deep interest was manifested in the departure of these ladies, over 600 persons attending the meeting.

GROVE HALL MISSION, LISSON GROVE.—On Wednesday, September 5, the rescue work branch of this Mission was opened at the Upper Room, Omega Hall, N.W. Large numbers of friendless and fallen women partook of the tea provided, and listened with attention to the Gospel addresses. Meetings will be held for this class every week. The workers will be glad of the prayers and practical sympathy of Christians interested in this great work. Address, Miss E. Millington, 17, Craven-terrace, W.

BRINGING INTO CAPTIVITY.

"Bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ."—2 Cor. x. 5.

Is this thy promise, my Lord, to me,
Thy answer to my spirit's anguished cry?
The hush that comes upon the troubled sea
Of thought, as weeping at thy feet I lie?

I was not ever thus, nor craved that Thou [will;
Shouldst rule and reign o'er heart and mind and
I was a wayward child, and uncontrolled, but now
My cry from depths Thou knowest. Lord, fulfil

In me Thy own design. The fire must try,
The storm must prove my Rock's almightiness.
And, oh! to know, as at thy feet I lie,
The fire, the storm, have only power to bless.

The sea of human thought still dashes on,
I hear the billows in their rush and roar,
Thou givest me thy thoughts to rest upon,
And I am hushed, nor dread the tempest's power.

There is a rest no hurricane can reach,
The sun-lit heavens, so calm and clear above
The cloud and darkness. Oh, my Master, teach
This heart to show, to learn, to see thy love—

In parable like this, to learn that rest
Is in thyself, above the tempest's might;
Thy timid ones, safe sheltering on thy breast,
See cloud and darkness pass, but dwell in light.

Requests for Prayer.

FOR one in great straits, who has a family and sick wife.——For a husband who has gone sadly astray, and for his broken-hearted wife.——For a mother dangerously ill, and for her only son.——For prosperity of Aberdeen Tract Repository, lately commenced.——For a series of meetings about to be held in the East-end of Belfast.——For services being held in Glasgow, by Messrs. C. Edwards and G. Hefford.——For four days' special services by Mr. Opie Rodway at Purton, near Berkeley, Gloucestershire, to commence Saturday, 15th September.

UXBRIDGE.—A series of most successful open-air Gospel Temperance meetings at Uxbridge concluded on Friday evening week. The speakers for the five evenings were Messrs. Steinner, Bell, Hilton, Thorneloe, and Dr. Kirton; Rev. J. Fletcher presiding each evening. A series of indoor meetings commenced the following Monday by an address from Mr. John Hilton in the Montague Hall, Rev. F. Wagstaff presiding.

HEBREW SHEET ALMANAC FOR 1884.—The director of the Evangelical Mission to Israel, Mr. D. C. Joseph, 394, Hackney-road, E., purposes again publishing a Hebrew Almanac for gratuitous distribution among Jews in all parts of the world. Ten thousand were distributed last year at a cost of over £50. He would be thankful for the help of friends this year also. Free parcels are sent to any who will distribute them among the sons of Abraham.

THE NORTH SEA MISSION SMACKS.—The new Mission vessel Cholmondeley, that was recently launched at Bideford, will in the course of a few days be at her post among the hardy toilers of the North Sea. As the vessel came round the coast from Bideford, most interesting services were held at Clovelly, St. Ives, and Torquay. Mr. Mather, Secretary of the Mission, writes to us:—"The log of the Ensign, just received, tells of nearly 700 at the services during the past fortnight—deep interest—and several fishermen brought to Christ. The same story from the Salem."

THE GOSPEL IN INDIA.—The Indian Witness states that "evidences multiply every year that the Holy Spirit is moving upon the great deep of Hindu and Mahommedan thought in India. Many thoughtful men are found who are deeply impressed with what they know about Christ, and the spectacle of devout Hindu worshippers in Christian churches may be witnessed in Calcutta every Sunday. We have recently heard of a 'panchayet' being called to excommunicate a number of Christians, not one of whom have been baptized. In another place a Christian friend found a company of Hindus assembled together for the purpose of seeking the way of salvation. They seemed to be earnest and sincere, and were more than half Christian in their faith."

Notices of Books, &c.

THE BIBLE EMBLEM ANNIVERSARY BOOK. Price 2s. 6d. George Routledge & Sons. A pretty and welcome addition to the already numerous family of birthday books. A pictorial emblem, a verse of Scripture, and illustrative stanzas of poetry are given for each day of the year. Printed in colours and tastily got up, this little book will be a favourite with the young folks.

RICHARD SLADE: A Story for Young and Old. By CHARLES ERNEST. S. W. Partridge & Co. This book tells the history of an orphan lad, who, bravely enduring suspicion and persecution, rose by dint of honesty and perseverance to a good position in life. The interest of the reader is well sustained, and the book cannot fail to have a good influence, although the incidents are not dissimilar to those of many an oft-told tale.

We have received from Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling, N.B., two quite new and original packets of pictorial leaflets, well adapted for circulation in letters, or by the wayside. The first series consists of a well-chosen selection of "Faithful Promises;" the second of an equally well-arranged choice of passages, entitled "Household Words." There are ten varieties in each set of 100 leaflets, all of which are prettily illustrated, and published at eightpence per packet.

THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE READER. Second Series. National Temperance Publication Depôt, 337, Strand. Conductors of Bands of Hope and other juvenile Temperance societies who are on the look out for "something new" with which to cater for the amusement and instruction of the young folks in the coming season, should obtain this book. It contains 200 pages of recitations, readings, and dialogues, original and selected. Many of the poems are exceedingly good.

THE FIRST GIFT; OR, RUTH NOBLE'S FRIENDS. Religious Tract Society. "First gave their own selves to the Lord," is the text on which the title of this well-told tale is founded. In these days, when superficial teaching and busy philanthropic schemes abound, it is well that now and then a voice should be raised calling attention to foundation truths. This story of everyday life carries home some important lessons which bear the impress of having been gleaned from real experience. Its circulation among the sons and daughters of well-to-do Christians should accomplish much good.

BOOTH OF THE BLUE RIBBON MOVEMENT; or, The Factory Boy who Became a Gospel Temperance Evangelist. By ERNEST BLACKWELL. With Preface by Canon Wilberforce. 3s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster. This account of Mr. R. T. Booth's life and work is written in a popular and picturesque style; it will serve the double purpose of an excellent gift-book for boys and youths, and of giving a detailed history of that branch of the Gospel Temperance movement with which Mr. Booth's name has been associated. Some of the descriptive passages would have appeared to advantage if they had undergone a judicious pruning. The lessons drawn are good, and although the book is amplified much beyond the actual events of Mr. Booth's life, the narrative is so skilfully interwoven that the volume will be read with avidity by young and old. Canon Wilberforce's preface is an able and ardent defence of the Gospel Temperance Movement.

THOMAS SPURGEON.—Our son Thomas, of Auckland, says the pastor of the Tabernacle at Newington, is anxious to build a large Tabernacle in Auckland, New Zealand, and he has a considerable sum towards it, but he is pledged not to get into debt. It is not easy to see how the needed funds are to be forthcoming. It strikes us that one of the assets ought to be a good round sum from England. We confess we hoped to receive large help, but it has not come to hand. A few friends sent their gifts to us very promptly, but they were so few that we have retained the amount until it grows larger. The Church in Auckland needs a few hundreds from the Lord's stewards, and we hope they will not withhold them, for it is of the utmost importance that these young, growing colonies should be provided with the Gospel. If numbers of friends who cannot deal in large figures would forward small sums they would be most gratefully received, and we are sure our son would personally acknowledge the aid thus afforded. We long to hear that he is preaching in his own Tabernacle to thousands of saved souls.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Smith, Captain Sherrard, R.E., Captain Baring (late 17th Lancers), and Messrs. E. Trotter and A. Burson. Daily Prayer-meeting at 1.15 p.m., Saturdays excepted.

COMING CHRISTIAN CONFERENCES.

WINCHESTER.—September 12 to 14.

SALISBURY.—September 25, 26, and 27.

CHRISTIAN WOMEN'S UNION.—Annual Conference, at Clifton, Bristol, in the Victoria Rooms, September 25, 26, and 27.

CLIFTON.—Victoria Rooms, Clifton, October 2 and 3.

LIVERPOOL—Thursday and Friday, October 4 and 5.

ON UNFULFILLED PROPHECY.—Avenue-road Church, Goldhawk-road, Shepherd's Bush, W., October 9 to 11.

NORWICH EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—October 16, 17, and 18.

SHEPHERD'S BUSH.—The Gospel services continue to be held at the Athenæum at three and seven p.m. every Lord's day.

MR. SPURGEON'S SERMONS.—In his "Personal Notes" in this month's Sword and Trowel Mr. Spurgeon says: "While in Scotland, and since our return, many pleasing testimonies of the value of the printed sermons have come under our notice. In many a shepherd's cottage and lonely hut in Highland glens they form, with the Word of God, the spiritual food of the Lord's hidden ones, while cases of conversion through reading them are constantly being brought to light. In one far-away village in the North the little country shop is opened on Saturdays expressly for the sale of the sermons; and what the customers want is so clearly understood that often not a word is spoken by either buyer or seller, but the people walk in, put down the penny, and march off with the sermon that is to be their Sabbath feast. In a Convalescent Home every Sabbath evening during the winter the matron reads one of the sermons to the inmates, who appear to be very grateful for them. The sermon No. 1712, entitled, 'Filling the Empty Vessels,' was specially blessed to two young men, for it led them to decide for Christ."

Mission Appeals.

HOPE MISSION HALL.—Mr. G. D. SMITH, of this Mission at Wapping Wall, appeals for pecuniary help in the work carried on by working-men. There is a committee, and the efforts are for the good of the poor.

BATTERSEA PARK TABERNACLE.—The foundation stone of this building will be laid on Tuesday, the 18th September. A sale of work will take place the third week in October, contributions towards which will be thankfully received by Mrs. LARDNER, 6, Avenue-road, Clapham.

CAWNPORE MISSION.—Mr. ARTHUR FOY appeals to British Christians for help in the expenses of a Mission to soldiers and others, among whom there has been a gracious work for some time past. They are anxious to buy a building, towards which they have £100, and require £300 more. Mr. Foy belongs to the firm of Foy Brothers, at Cawnpore, and gives a number of reliable references.

INFANTS' NURSERY, BRIXTON.—Mrs. CUNNINGHAM appeals for help in carrying on her nursery, which has proved a boon to many mothers who have to earn their own and their children's daily bread. Mrs. Cunningham spends her own limited means in thus trying to help those who are thankful to leave their children under her care. Three hundred little ones have been received, and visitors are invited to inspect the Home, which is at Hope Cottage, Industry Terrace, Brixton, S.W.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday Morning, September 8, 1883.

* Donations should be sent by Cheque or P. O. Order, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan and Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O.O.'s payable to Morgan and Scott, at G.P.O.

* Will Donors oblige us by giving explicitly and full the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday Morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

YOUNG MEN IN THE CITY.—A meeting to inaugurate the winter's work in the Aldersgate-street Young Men's Christian Association will be held on Monday next, the 17th inst., at eight o'clock; Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., in the chair. Addresses will be delivered by Revs. T. J. Goater, of Camberwell; R. H. Horton, of Hampstead; and T. Ossian Davies, of Tollington-park.

"And she being dead yet speaketh."

MORLEY HOME

FOR WORN-OUT, AGED, AND DESTITUTE GgovernesSES, NEEDLEWOMEN, AND SERVANTS,

25 (Late I), Chatham Place, Paragon Road, Hackney, E.

BELOVED FRIENDS,

You have so kindly helped me in my work from the commencement, that I can only again repeat I feel sure you still are interested in it, and now, with other dear friends of a later period, will sympathise when I tell you that death has entered our household for the first time, and taken from our midst a truly grateful and thankful aged one. I must pay this tribute to the memory of "Lettice Buckmaster," because she gave me so much joy in my work. But apart from all else besides, she left behind the assurance that she was going home to God. Some years ago, Mrs. Buckmaster fell from a chair and injured her left breast, which, sad to say, caused a cancer to form—that most terrible disease to which the human frame is subject. She suffered intensely, but I never heard a murmur escape her lips. In this record I am compelled to be brief, but when reading it, dear friends, I know you will realise to the full the preciousness of Matt. xxv. 40.

During this time of grave and solemn responsibility "the barrel of meal has wasted not," and I feel sure NOW I have only to remind the Lord's Stewards for the supply of present needed help.

SCRIPTURE TEXTS.

Published by MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings; and may be had of any Bookseller.

From the late AGNES ELIZABETH JONES, Lady Superintendent of Nurses at the Liverpool Workhouse.

"The Lady Superintendent of Nurses begs to acknowledge the receipt of the parcels of Texts as ordered. She more and more feels their value. The patients lying in their beds can read the words—the print is so distinct.

"As she is going to undertake the charge of several hundred more patients, she wishes to give other Wards the advantage of these Texts on the wall."

In very large type, printed in blue ink, size 31 in. by 20 in., 70 different Texts, 3d. each.
Mounted on canvas, varnished, and with eyelet holes, 9d. each.
Mounted on rollers and varnished, 1s. 6d. each.

LIST OF THE TEXTS

1. "Choose you this day whom ye will serve."
2. "The wages of sin is death."
3. "The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."
4. "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out."
5. "Repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance."
6. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die."
7. "In whom we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins."
8. "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God."
9. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."
10. "The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon Him; to all that call upon Him in truth."
11. "Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world."
12. "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost."
13. "The Lord is good to all; and His tender mercies are over all His works."
14. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge; but fools despise wisdom and instruction."
15. "Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered."
16. "When we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly."
17. "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus."
18. "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."
19. "Now in Christ Jesus ye, who sometime were far off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ."
20. "Seek ye the Lord while He may be found; call ye upon Him while He is near."
21. "Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the Just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God."
22. "Herein is love: not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins."
23. "God commendeth His love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us."
24. "As by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so, by the obedience of One, shall many be made righteous."
25. "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing."
26. "The just shall live by faith."
27. "As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God."
28. "The blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin."
29. "Through this Man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins."
30. "Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by Thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation."
31. "God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through Him might be saved."
32. "He that believeth on Son hath everlasting life."
33. "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."
34. "Jesus only."
35. "Now."
36. "God is love."
37. "Behold, He cometh."
38. "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."
39. "God so loved the world, that He gave His only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."
40. "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by Me."
42. "Let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus."
43. "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."
44. "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."
45. "Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not."
46. "He shall gather the lambs with His arm, and carry them in His bosom."
47. "Children, obey your parents in all things: for this is well-pleasing unto the Lord."
48. "I love them that love Me; and those that seek Me early shall find Me."
51. "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth."
52. "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him."
53. "Casting all your care upon Him; for He careth for you."
54. "The Eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms."
55. "He hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."
56. "I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content."
57. "As thy days so shall thy strength be."
58. "In all their afflictions He was afflicted."
59. "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth."
60. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."
61. "Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God."
62. "He is despised and rejected of men; a Man of Sorrows and acquainted with grief."
63. "He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities."
64. "The chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with His stripes we are healed."
65. "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way."
66. "The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquities of us all."
67. "Look unto Me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth."
68. "He, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters."
69. "If any man thirst, let him come unto Me, and drink."
70. "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved."
71. "It is the blood that maketh atonement for the soul."

The eight following are in Extra Large Type.

25. "Jesus only."
27. "Now."
28. "God is love."
29. "Behold, He cometh."
30. "Have faith in God."
41. "Prepare to meet thy God."
49. "Thou God seest me."
50. "Be ye kind one to another."

Nos. 45 to 51 inclusive are specially suited for Children.

SEVENTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN"

WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK

CASE OF SEVERE CHRONIC BRONCHITIS WITH DISEASED LUNGS at KISLINGBURY, WEEDON.

In December last I received the first letter relative to this patient's case, from his wife, who applied as a last hope, on the earnest recommendation of friends.

Name, W. A. HEDGE:—Never very strong, and subject to Winter Cough. A sister had died of Chronic Asthma. In the July previous he took cold, the breathing became very bad, inflammation of the lungs set in, and when the acute symptoms were subdued by active means, they left him weak as an infant.

At this time the cough was very aggravating; there was profuse greenish expectoration, slightly streaked with blood; night sweats had come on, the breathing was very bad, and there was, more or less, continual pain. "I saw your announcement last week in the Christian World (Mrs. H. writes); he had a very bad night last night. I felt I could put it off no longer, and hope it is not too late."

Advice and medicine were forwarded. It was a month before much improvement was seen. After that he began rapidly to amend. By the end of January the cough and distressing breathing were greatly relieved. The patient was able to get out a little.

A week or two ago (August 23) I received a letter from Mrs. Hedge, in which she says:—"My husband, who was under your treatment in December, January, and February last, resumed his work in March, and since that time has not been laid aside at all. Your medicine, with God's blessing, having done this good for him, I am inducing a friend to try it also."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

Tinted Covers, price 6d. (sent post free).

BOOKS SUITABLE FOR BIBLE STUDENTS AND TEACHERS.

Published by MORGAN & SCOTT.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE

To the Old and New Testaments. Handsomely bound in cloth, price 7s.6d.

POPULAR EDITION, CLOTH, FIVE SHILLINGS.

THE SPECIAL FEATURE in this Edition is the NEW TRANSLATION, Revision, and Extension of the PROPER NAMES of the OLD and NEW TESTAMENTS, with their Meanings in the Original Languages. By Rev. ALFRED JONES, M.A., Author of "The Proper Names of the Old Testament Scriptures, Expounded and Illustrated."

CHRIST LIFTED UP.

Meditations on the Death, Resurrection, and Ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ. By Rev. ROBERT GILCHRIST. Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"An earnest, practical exhibition of the Gospel under a variety of aspects. Christ lifted up on the cross, and at the Father's right hand, is the grand theme, and affords scope for setting forth a wide range of Gospel teaching. The writer does this in an interesting, while simple style."—British Messenger.

"Old-fashioned divinity presented in a pleasing form. May its readers be many."—Sword and Trowel.

THE GOSPEL IN LEVITICUS.

Chapters on the Old Testament Foreshadowings of the Great Redemption. By the late Rev. Dr. FLEMING, of Kentish Town. Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"The subject is set forth with a clearness, a directness, and a persuasiveness which leave little to be desired. Every lover of sound Scriptural theology, especially in regard to the momentous doctrine of the Atonement, will find in the book a rich treat."—Baptist Magazine.

JOHN, WHOM JESUS LOVED.

The Character, Writings, Theology, and Influence of the Beloved Disciple. New and Enlarged Edition. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. With Chromo-Lithographic Views of the "Sea of Galilee" and the "Island of Patmos." Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d.

"It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."—Sword and Trowel.

"THY FIRST LOVE."

Christ's Message to Ephesus. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. With Chromo-Lithographic Frontispiece. Cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"It is a heart-searching and stimulating little book."

British Quarterly Review.

"Its language is chaste and clear; its thoughts are fresh and invigorating; its tone is evangelical without being sentimental. While there is a genial warmth of devout feeling, there runs through its pages a healthy breeze of robustness."—Literary World.

BEHOLD, I STAND AT THE DOOR & KNOCK.

Christ's Message to Laodicea. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. Tinted Covers, 1s; cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"The exposition is fresh and original, displaying great critical skill and discrimination, together with happy quotations of Scripture. The style is all that could be desired—chaste and polished, yet full of force; here and there, as in the author's other works, we meet with passages of great poetic beauty."

Aberdeen Daily Press.

THE NUMBER "SEVEN" IN SCRIPTURE.

Compiled by S. A. BLACKWOOD, Esq., C.B. Paper Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d. Presentation Edition, Cloth Boards, Bevelled, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

"Many other attempts have been made in tabulating the circumstances connected with the word "seven" in the Bible, but we cannot think of any one which is so complete, so concise, and so systematic as in the small volume compiled by Mr. Blackwood. From Genesis i. to Rev. xxii. all the many times the word occurs are duly noted, and each book is dealt with seriatim, so that reference is easy. One object of the book is "to stimulate search and to arouse inquiry," and with this book by the side of the Bible one course of study can be made very profitable indeed."—The Rock.

SEARCHING THE SCRIPTURES

In order to abiding Communion with God. Also, Suggestions for Bible Reading and Study, and a Plan for Consecutive Daily Reading. By Dr. ANDERSON. Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d. Second Edition.

"Whether viewed as an analysis of the whole Bible, or as a plan for its daily perusal, or as a directory to the spirit and intention with which it should be studied, it is equally judicious and complete. The one design of the whole Scriptures is kept in view throughout."—Sword and Trowel.

CHRIST AND THE SCRIPTURES.

By Rev. Dr. ADOLPH SAPHIR. Cheap Edition.—Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth, Limp, 1s. 6d. Superior Edition.—Cloth, Elegant, 3s.; with Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"This book is original. Dr. Saphir has the power of originating and combining, which is the mark of genius. It is the old truths to which we listen; but the old truths clothed in a living language, set in new lights, and drawn out in fresh applications."—Weekly Review.

BIBLE READINGS BY HENRY MOORHOUSE.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.

"We do not wonder that those who heard Moorhouse's Bible Readings found them full of power and suggestion. To him the Word of God was a sword—the only one worth using in spiritual warfare."—Liverpool Courier.

"This volume will be heartily welcomed by not only workers in the field, but by all who love to study the Divine Word. A careful reading must stimulate moral seriousness and earnest service for Christ."—Christian Commonwealth.

THE SURE MERCIES OF DAVID;

or, God's Dealings in the Sanctuary. By ANNA SHIPTON. Best Edition, toned paper, Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 4s. 6d. Cheap Edition, Cloth neat, 2s. 6d.

"This is a well-written volume of spiritual instruction, interspersed with interesting narratives, from the able pen of Mrs. SHIPTON. It is well worthy of a wide circulation, especially amongst members of Christian congregations, Sunday-school teachers and scholars."—Free Press.

NOTES FOR BIBLE READINGS.

A Collection of over Six Hundred Subjects, carefully compiled and arranged. Suitable for Bible Readings, Cottage Lectures, Sermons, Addresses, Sabbath-school Lessons, &c. Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d. A cheap edition may also be had in tinted covers, 2s. 6d.

"A book which every Bible student should possess. It will be of special value to the class teacher, and an assistance also to the preacher. It supplies valuable matter for private meditation, and those who conduct Bible Readings will find it most suggestive."—Christian Progress.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings; and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

MENTAL AND PHYSICAL MALADIES: THEIR CAUSE AND CURE.

In equally severe but curable cases, the unutterable horrors, the morbid dread, the sensitiveness to trifling pains, the melancholy and despair, have been made to give place to faith, hope, and peace. Relief is often found in the ministry of mind to mind. This mental magnetism is a potent medicine. If we can by any means arouse the mind to a vigorous tone, to become strong and of good courage, inspiring and inspiriting with new life, the general debility will decrease proportionately; but for all the Protean forms which nervousness assumes, the mind will find a brightening influence, and gain its balance of power by that same force which, we believe, holds the constant and continuous balance of worlds in their due course, and harmonises the formation of the dewdrop as well as of the world.

Who does not know the exciting and stimulating properties of pure oxygen? who has not felt the invigorating influence of fresh air? When the body is weak, the brain fatigued, and the whole system in a state of lassitude, take a few vigorous inspirations in the open air, and the effect will be instantly perceived. Invigorated and stimulated, the blood will course with freshness, the lungs will work with increased activity, and the whole frame will feel revivified by Nature's best stimulant, which invigorates without corresponding reaction.

Every scientist knows the sensation felt in the nervous system from certain forms of Electricity. Every living animal experiences sensations produced by the positive and negative state of the atmosphere. The braced-up condition of the nerves which occurs in a dry or frosty mountain air may be experienced as a permanent effect of Odo-Magnetic influence. When applied to the body, Magnetism is constantly in action or perpetual operation. An influence for good as natural as the air we breathe, is superadded for the invalid's advantage, surrounding him, as it were, by a vitalising Magnetic atmosphere. Like all the forces of Nature, Magnetism is subject to interruptions in the freedom of its flow and to inequality in its distribution, not only during thunderstorms, but also during the prevalence of epidemics. Now, the essential characteristics of Odo-Magnetic influence, as Nature and Art have enabled us to apply it, are its penetrating and permeating qualities, and the unabating regularity in its lines of force, which are so equally distributed and well balanced in their operation as to induce a uniform flow of healthful influence in the living organism.

From Mrs. M. SPEDDING, 59, Halifax-road, Dewsbury, Sept. 12, 1883:—

"Doubtless you will remember the number of complaints I was suffering from when I adopted your treatment, and I now gratefully acknowledge that I have been greatly relieved from all, but more especially from my nervous weakness. My nerves are now better than they have been for twelve years, and my heart and stomach are better than I ever thought it possible for them to be. I can now digest anything in reason, and for the last three months I have been able to discard the appliance. I have spoken to many friends in the highest terms, and have lent all my pamphlets. You are quite at liberty to make any use of this you think proper."

Mr. Garratt will always be happy to confer with any scientific or medical gentleman, either personally or by letter, upon any phase of the subject, or any case for treatment, and will send a private list of 850 names as referees to any address.—B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

HOMES OF HOPE,

4, 5, & 6, Regent Square, Gray's Inn Road, London, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of Mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to associate with a lower class.

The applications for admission are painfully urgent.

Funds are greatly Needed.

TROPHIES OF GRACE.

Narratives of some of the Fruits of Labour for the Lord. By W. J. Lewis.

"Capital! Worth a hundred pretentious volumes of Christian evidences; proving the Gospel to be a power for the reclamation of the vilest and most abandoned. Our heart has warmed and glowed again as we have read of Christ's conquests over sin and unbelief in the slums of London. Get it, and read it; and then go out with new faith in the 'old, old story' of the cross. A good shillings-worth."

SCRIPTURAL HOLINESS NOT SINLESS PERFECTION.

By CHARLES GRAHAM.

The Sword and Trowel says:—"So far as we can see, this is a sound book. If this is all that the Holiness people have meant, we cannot make out why there has been so much noise over the matter. To us these new revelations are nothing but the common-places of experimental divinity. With considerable skill and sagacity Mr. Graham has proved his title, and wheeled away much fanatical rubbish. Anything which will promote true holiness has all our heart."

OUR BOYS.

A SOCIAL problem of the greatest importance to the nation, and to multitudes of the families which compose it, is being discussed in the columns of the Daily Telegraph. The question propounded is: What shall we do with our boys? The complaint is heard on all sides that every opening in our professional and commercial circles is blocked with an eager crowd of aspirants, for the vast majority of whom nothing but disappointment is in store. We are told, and not without truth, that "there is scarcely a father of a family who is not distressed, whose life is not more or less embittered, by this problem."

Various remedies have been suggested in the course of the discussion; the Army it is said is dwindling down, and if regiments were formed specially for the sons of gentlemen it might be easily increased, and the efficiency of its ranks maintained. But many of us have no desire to see the spirit of war increasingly developed among our boys, even if such a system of class distinction could properly be introduced into the service. Emigration to colonial settlements is the solution to which with almost unanimous voice the many who have taken part in the correspondence direct attention. Two difficulties in its way have been referred to, lack of fitness physically and socially for such work as the Colonies require from all who go to them in quest of fortune or a livelihood, and a lack of practical knowledge and skill, such as would fit our boys to cope with the obstacles which would have to be overcome. So far as these objections are valid, is it not true that parents are largely to blame in that they have not trained their sons to greater hardihood, courage, and fitness for practical life?

Is there not among us a foolish and mischievous pride which leads to training boys (and girls also) in habits of indulgence, and contempt for industrial pursuits, and so fostering in them a spirit which militates against their future usefulness and independence in life? We have growing up in our midst a large number of young men who disdain work, despise the working classes, regarding all manual labour as beneath them, and who consequently want to be "gentlemen" in the technical sense of the word, without contributing to the welfare of the community, or earning for themselves a right to be regarded as useful members of society. If fathers will persist in talking of blue blood and social status, and in teaching their sons to look upon honest trade and useful handicraft as undignified and beneath their notice, then they cannot expect in these days of social progress that berths will be found for their sons at the expense of others who have learned to look upon life as a sphere of action and a field for usefulness. In this practical age the mere accidents of birth and name will not suffice to command influence and respect apart from faithful discharge of the duties of life. Industry, perseverance, and steady purpose are qualities which ennoble all classes; to teach our children these, and to introduce them early to opportunities of practically cultivating them, is a duty we owe to them and to the world in which thess have to take their place. In Germany it is thought no disgrace to let all boys be taught a trade whether they are likely to want it or not; among the Jews it has been counted a sin not to give boys the knowledge of some means of subsistence which would render them independent of others.

The great Creator never intended man to look upon toil as a disgrace; man, as created by Him in all the nobleness and dignity of his first estate, was set to dress and keep the garden in which he was placed. Luxuriousness of living, and proud isolation from practical and honourable pursuits in the various business departments of life, lie at the root of much of the perplexity surrounding the question, What shall we do with our boys? Our own is by no means a Spartan age, and there is ample room for an energetic crusade at this time against respectable idleness, and on behalf of the dignity of labour. Simpler tastes, self-denial and self-restraint, the value of money as having to be earned, and of reward as having to be merited, are lessons that all parents concerned for the future welfare of their children will do well to inculcate early.

The establishment of Colonial Training Schools in all our great centres of population is an excellent idea, and surely practicable. It would be well if technical education were more attended to in all our schools. Let our boys be taught agriculture, mechanics, and political economy at the same time that they are learning Latin and Greek. Let them be impressed with the fact that the hand as well as the head requires training and skill in order to success in life. Let false pride be sharply discouraged, and the principles of true ambition be instilled into their minds. Let them be taught to respect their fellow men of every rank; in the language of the good old Book, to "Honour all men," and to believe that "if any will not work, neither should they eat." There is a place in God's great world for every one who is prepared to find it, and to fill it with earnest purpose, patient effort, and honest aim. There is something for us all to do; the world requires all the brains and all the hands God has provided for its use, and it is a sin to withhold our share of diligent endeavour for the general good. Our boys must be led to see that "Life is real, life is earnest," and that they must each one

"Be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate,
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labour and to wait."

It needs to be borne in mind, too, that the problem cannot be fully solved apart from reference to moral and spiritual training. Our boys need a sounder education in reference to the great principles of truth and uprightness. Character makes the man; the fear of the Lord is the beginning of all wisdom, and the basis of all real and enduring success in life. The question what to do with our boys in relation to spiritual necessities and prospects is one which presses upon many of us, even more than their temporal interests. How to bring them under the influence of the Gospel, how to wean them from the fascinations and snares of the world, and how to attract them to the service of Christ, are problems we long to solve with greater clearness and success. To give attention to the physical and mental training of our boys, while we neglect the moral and spiritual, is a fatal mistake; they need to be taught to understand, and to reverently adopt as their own rule of life, our Lord's Divine injunction: "Seek ye first the kingdom God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be, added unto you." By precept and example in faith and with earnest prayer, under all circumstances, in season and out of season, let parents see to it that this is set before their boys as a fundamental principle in the true philosophy of life.

EDUCATION IN IRELAND.

A PAPER issued by the Protestant Alliance calls attention to the proposal of our Government to establish and endow Roman Catholic Training Colleges in Ireland, and so inaugurate a system of State-paid Ultramontane education in that country. This concession to the demands of the Romish hierarchy could not fail to be a source of evil in every way to the land, and yet it appears probable that a compulsory Act of Education for Ireland will soon be introduced, by which all the children in that country will be forced to attend the priests' schools in every case where there is not a sufficient number of Protestant children to qualify for a separate grant from the Board. Surely so gross an act of injustice to Protestants will be prevented if it is really in contemplation.

No wonder, as the Alliance states, "The Presbyterians of Ireland have presented to the Lord Lieutenant a Memorial, protesting in the strongest terms against the proposed change." The words quoted from their Memorial, as under, are extremely well put, and furnish an unanswerable argument against any such legislation as is proposed:—

"That the adoption of the proposals of the Government would tend to the destruction of united National education in Ireland; that the system of non-sectarian education in preference to a denominational system is best suited to the wants of the country, secures equal rights and privileges to all, irrespective of creed, maintains parental right and authority, affords every reasonable facility for imparting religious instruction, provides adequate safeguards against proselytism, and brings together in friendly intercourse the young of all denominations."

Surely the day is gone by for giving to any one sect advantage over another by Act of Parliament. The right of religious equality ought by this time to be established. Yet clearly there is ample room for this important principle to be still advocated, and its maintenance jealously guarded. God forbid that Roman Catholicism should ever again be brought under State patronage amongst us.

Glasgow Addresses.

By Pastor THEODORE MONOD, of Paris.

I.—"CONSIDER YOUR WAYS."

Having read the first chapter of the prophecy of Haggai, Pastor Monod said:—

WHAT the people of Judah did "in the four-and-twentieth day of the sixth month," is that which we wish to do in the eleventh day of the ninth month of the present year. Perhaps some of you may be asking yourselves, and it is a very natural question, why such meetings as these are convened. What is their object? Is it only to bring together the Christians of Glasgow to hear about Conversion, Sanctification, and the Work of God? To come from a distance in order to do that—all the way from London, Brighton, and further off still—does seem like carrying coals to Newcastle. Glasgow has "flourished by the preaching of the Word," is flourishing still, we trust, and will yet flourish. The more of the true preaching of the Word it gets the more it will flourish. Well, have we come here to tell you anything that you do not know? Surely not. We have come to tell you what you do know. We greatly need to know better what we already do know. We have need to see more clearly what we have begun to see. There are truths in the Word of God that we have read, that we have heard—I may say, speaking for myself, that we have preached—but somehow, one day, we perceive that we have never taken in half of their meaning, half of the light and of the power there are in them. Even now we are quite aware that we are very far from seeing all the depth and power of the Word of God. Still, if we have found that which has been helpful to us, we think it is only brotherly kindness, as well as duty, to help others to see it likewise.

I have no doubt there are many Christians in this town, as there are everywhere nowadays, who feel that their Christianity or their piety does not satisfy them. I do not say merely that it does not satisfy their heart, does not make them happy—truly, deeply, habitually happy; but that it does not satisfy their conscience. If it does not satisfy even themselves, how can it satisfy God? To put it quite simply and plainly, there must be something wrong! They place themselves before the Word of God—the Acts of the Apostles, for instance, or any of the Epistles: we were hearing a moment ago of the Epistle to the Phillipians; what does the Apostle say there? "Brethren, be followers together of me." He knew, then, that he was practically following Christ. But he goes further, and says: "Mark them which walk so as ye have us for an ensample!" There were, therefore, those in the Church, converted heathen, who were walking after the same pattern. We see this in the Word of God; and not only that, we certainly have had the privilege of knowing, at one time or another, here and there, perhaps at the present time, this man, that woman, this young man, that young girl, who truly seem to be walking in the light. We find them having a degree of peace that we ourselves have not got. They seem to be ever ready for duty, or trouble, and we do not feel ready. Well, how is that? If we ask them, they just say to us: "It is Christ. God has given Christ to me. Christ belongs to me, and all that He is belongs to me." We are not satisfied yet, for we say: "Christ belongs to me also, and why have I not the same blessing?" We sing—we were singing a few moments ago:—

> "Surely the work of redemption is done;
> Surely the saved and the Saviour are one."

Well, what does it mean? "Surely the saved and the Saviour are one"—one in what sense? There are some explanations, I think, that are very careful finally to make it clear, that "the saved and the Saviour" are not one. The fact is, they are one. "I am the vine; ye are the branches." It is one seed, one life. We must get a firm hold of this; it goes no further than the Scriptures do.

If you believe this, then you have a right to say—in fact it is your duty to say: "Everything that belongs to my Saviour belongs to me." Does not that begin to rejoice your heart? Can you help feeling that you are rich? Christ wants us to know that we are rich. First of all He wants us to know that we are "poor, miserable, blind, naked." Then He goes on to say: "I counsel thee buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich." We are rich because we have his gold. If we believe, that is, if we take it to be a fact, that Christ is our righteousness, that we are accepted, in the righteous One, that we are one with Christ in the eyes of God, then we find peace, do we not? We know that our sin is forgiven; it is covered and blotted out, and we are justified. In the matter of justification we fully believe that "the saved and the Saviour are one." Why should we cease to believe it as regards sanctification? If we accept Christ as our righteousness, why not accept Him as our strength, as our joy, and as our life? For He is life, and when we take Him we have life. He has come for that very purpose—that we may have life and may have it more abundantly.

Now, my brethren, does not this answer your desire? Is not this what you want—life, an increase of life, the deepening of life, and finally the overflowing and outflowing of life? As we are often told, it is not to be all getting, getting, getting. It is giving; but of course we cannot give except as we receive. Yet we cannot go on receiving except as we are willing to give, and except as we are constantly giving. God will not give us his Spirit for our own satisfaction merely, for our own glory, for our own purposes; but He will give us the Spirit for his service and glory.

Is it not true that the chapter I have read [Haggai i.] finds an echo in our hearts? Can we not say of many Christians and perhaps of Christendom taken as a whole: "Ye have sown much, and brought in little." How very largely the Word of God is sown nowadays; and yet, in proportion to the effort made, to the multiplicity of the meetings, to the spreading abroad of Bibles, tracts, hymn-books, and religious writings of every kind, the fruit seems to be very little. Is it not true, even of many of those who are called, and rightly called, Christians, who take upon themselves the name of Christ, and would not renounce it at any cost, that "they eat but never have enough." It does not mean that they do not desire more, but their eating does not seem to nourish them. They have drunken and they are not filled with drink; they clothe them but there is none warm. Those who are warm must warm others; they cannot help it: but these Christians are cold and create a chill around them. What is lacking? Fire—a baptism of fire; that is what they want. They hear sermon after sermon; they have family worship, perhaps morning and evening, but for all that are they not warm.

What is to be done, then? "Consider your ways," saith the Lord. That is the first point. God does not ask you to begin anew, and examine Christian doctrine, in order to find out some very precise and very correct formula about it. Consider your own ways—the way you are living. Consider your family life; consider your inward life, the government of your thoughts, your steps, your words, your feelings, your imaginations—is there nothing that needs to be altered there?

Then, having considered your ways, having found out that the trouble lies just in this, that if you have been occupied with yourself and not with God, what comes next? "Ye run every man into his own house." You forget the house of the Lord. That reminds us of the well-known words in Isa. liii.: "We have turned every one to his own way." That is the very essence of sin. Men think it is the substance of happiness to have one's own way. Not at all. To turn to one's own way is, I say, the very essence of sin. Now, then, you must turn; it must be God's way instead of your way; God's house first, and God's glory first. Your aim must not be so much to fulfil a certain ideal that you have set before you, as to what "a good Christian" ought to be, but simply this: to please your Master, to serve Him, to be in his hands, to build up his house. Just as soon as we begin to do that, then comes the next message: "I am with you, saith the Lord." The Lord will not be with us if we begin to build our own house, but He will be with us to build his house; then He will take care of our own. He will take pleasure in it; He will be satisfied and glorified, from the very day that we obey the voice of the Lord, that we ask Him in all simplicity and sincerity: "What wilt Thou have me to do?" ready and willing to do it in his strength.

Then we will have to meet ever so many difficulties, obstacles, temptations, trials, sorrows, persecutions it may be; but we have made a beginning; we are in the right path; we have but to go on in that path, ever learning, ever receiving, ever finding out that there was more to alter in our ways than we thought; ever going deeper into the knowledge of ourselves, and finding out how poor and how bad we are of ourselves; but at the same time knowing more and more of the infinite fulness of Christ, and all that there is in Him to mend all that has to be mended; and not only to mend us, but to be Himself our life, the one source, as He is the one channel, of every blessing, and the one object of our lives.

Now, it seems to me it is quite impossible that those who love the Saviour at all should not agree that it is a good thing to unite in prayer and in searching the Scriptures for such a purpose as this. We want to be better, to do better. We have not come here asking anyone to join themselves to a certain sect, or party, or movement, or anything of the kind. We have come to encourage one another to join ourselves to the Saviour, to be in very deed united to Him, so that He can work all his good purpose towards us, in us, and through us, for the salvation of others and the glory of his name.

EASTBOURNE.—The Rev. W. S. Standen has been holding meetings here for children and young people. He conducted a "Lantern" service on the beach, near the Wish Tower, on the 12th inst. It was a remarkably pretty sight. His address upon "Who art Thou?" in Acts ix. 5, was most solemn and impressive, and likely to be remembered when the sea is left behind. L. R. Howes.

THE MASTER'S WORK:

WHAT IT IS, AND HOW TO DO IT.

By the Author of "He is Risen," &c.

"Who then is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord?"—1 Chron. xxix. 5.

SOME of us have been sorely puzzled at times to know what really was the Master's work. We had given our hearts to Him in the past, and we wanted to show our love and our faith by doing some work for Him (James ii. 18). Perhaps we have not been in a position to devote our whole time to direct service in his vineyard; some of us are daughters or wives at home, and many domestic duties devolve upon us which must be performed, unless we mean to bring down upon ourselves well-deserved censure by their neglect. We learned long ago that our first duty is to God; we wanted to carry the lesson out, fully, and yet we could not see how all our time was to be given up to God when home calls had to be considered. So we got puzzled and confused. The two rightful, legitimate duties seemed to become conflicting centres, instead of merging into one life-long song of loyal devotion to Him, whose we are and whom we wanted to serve (Acts xxvii. 23).

Thus it was that all our service was marred and spoiled. We grew impatient, perhaps even fretful. Neither what we considered God's work or our own daily work was well done; instead of being bright, light-bearing Christians and witnesses for Christ, we became subject to fits of despondency and irritability, a puzzle to our friends and a misery to ourselves. Do not let us be afraid to look at this picture. Is it not a true one? Our Master never intended his servants to be thus divided in their service, and their lives consequently made miserable.

Is it, then, only the few who are called to work for Him? Oh, no! We are none of us our own (1 Cor. vi. 19); we are Christ's (1 Cor. iii. 23); and if we belong to Him, He expects us to work for Him. Jesus said that He must work the works of Him that sent Him while it was day (John ix. 4), and we are to follow our Master in all things wherein we can follow Him. From Ephesians ii. 10 we learn that God has ordained in his Eternal counsels that we should walk in good works. Our bodies are his, and how can we better employ our members than by using them in his service?

Is it not because we do not fully understand what the Master's work really is that we fall into the mistake, which, in its turn, brings *un*rest instead of rest to our souls? (Matt. xi. 28.) We perhaps want to rush into the very thick of the work, where even long-experienced workers feel their great need of constant spiritual guidance and strength, without the preparation time which God's greatest servants have always required. Take, as instances, Moses, Daniel, John the Baptist, and even our Lord Himself, for He became in all things like unto his brethren (Heb. ii. 17). We want to sow and reap the fields, without stooping to the lowly task of first picking out the large stones.* Under all this fervent zeal, which would carry us out too far, there may be a spirit of pride. We want to be amongst the foremost. We want to be in a conspicuous place. We do not like the humble position of sitting at the feet of Jesus, forgetting that He called it a good part (Luke x. 39).

* The writer has frequently seen this necessary process performed in agricultural districts by boys, who gather up the largest stones in baskets, and deposit them in one large heap, preparatory to the ploughing of the fields.

There is much said about work all through God's Word; indeed, it teems with allusions. Shall we look at some of the references? Perhaps we shall then be able to answer the question, "What is the Master's work?" and the next time we are distressed and perplexed by what we consider conflicting calls or duties, we shall be able to lay our finger upon the "word," and there see that the Master never gives commands antagonistic to each other.

I. WHAT THE MASTER'S WORK IS.

How shall we find out what the Master's work really is? The Master Himself will show us. I will show thee (Gen. xii. 1). He says it shall be told us what we must do (Acts ix. 6). Can anything be plainer than that? We must acknowledge Him in all our ways, and then He will direct our paths (Prov. iii. 6), and make darkness light before us, and crooked things straight (Isa. xlii. 16).

We have only to go to Him with the question, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" with a hearty, real desire to know what the work is, with an earnest purpose to do it when we have been told what it is, and He will show us.

One word, however, of caution here. We must not expect that his work will always be exactly what we should have chosen for ourselves, although sometimes He permits us to work in our own way. If we are stubborn and unyielding, He cannot use us at all; we must be as clay in the hands of the potter.

Now we will turn to Col. iii. 23 for further light. Here is a very definite word, "Whatsoever." Yes, whatsoever your hand findeth to do; no matter what it is, that is his work if we undertake to "do it heartily, as unto the Lord." St. Paul spoke to slaves, and if they could be labourers for Him, surely we can. No task is too humble to be a consecrated one, too lowly to be offered to Him.

"They also serve who only stand and wait."

This is a very retiring, modest employment, but still it is serving. Have we never gone against our will, our inclination, to sit half an hour with some old man or woman, perhaps even grudgingly spared the time, when we wanted so much to do something else, or to go on with the book we wished to finish reading? We have come back actually cheered by the visit; it has done us good. The poor old dame was so pleased to see us; we have left her brighter and happier, and we have almost forgotten the effort it cost us to make the sacrifice, in the very enjoyment of her pleasure. This was the Master's work, even though we did not know it, and we did it so hesitatingly and reluctantly! We thought it too matter-of-fact to be His work. But we may rest assured that whenever an opportunity offers for yielding our own will to the will or for the pleasure of others, that is the Master's work for us. He does allow us sometimes to do work for Him in the way we should choose above every other way; but more frequently He comes and asks us to give up something for Him, as He asked the young ruler; or He gives us something to do for Him in a sphere quite foreign to what we expected, as a test of our sincerity and love. This something to give up is generally our own will. Which do we love best?

We are too apt to look forward to possible great events in the future, when we imagine that, somehow or other, our lives will suddenly become entirely consecrated to his work. In dreaming thus, we forget to do the daily duties, which are really his work, in a spirit of consecration. What the Master asks us to do is to follow Him. When He called his disciples, it was not to achieve any great or stirring deeds in the eyes of the world, but simply to follow Him whose work is described as "going about doing good." Our times are in his hand (Ps. xxxi. 15). He has placed our feet (ibid) in the room they occupy; He has appointed the bounds of our habitation; when He did so, He knew what it would entail; our consequent surroundings and the claims upon us are all known to Him, nay, are they not actually ordered and arranged by Him?

"One by one thy duties wait thee—
Let thy whole strength go to each:
Let no future dreams elate thee:
Learn thou first what these can teach."

Paul worked with his own hands at tent-making. The great Apostle of the Gentiles, who beheld Jesus face to face, and at whose marvellous conversion "the glory of the Divine Presence" shone around him, was not ashamed to follow this humble employment when not engaged in actually preaching the Gospel. Surely we may here learn a lesson of faithfulness in the discharge of our daily duties. Yes, the dusting, the cooking, the teaching, the care of the children, the attendance upon the elder members of our family, the tender nursing of the sick or the delicate one in the home, the patience with which we may bear little annoyances, are all his work. He says to us, "Will you do it for Me?" If we willingly reply "Yes, Lord," then we may take this promise for our own, "He that in these things serveth Christ, is acceptable to God and approved of men" (Rom. xiv. 18). God will send us the other work, never fear; but we must first be faithful in small things ere we can be rulers over many things (Matt. xxv. 23). The duty which lies the nearest is generally the right one to take first; and if we make it a rule always to adopt this course, we shall not often be distracted and harassed by distressing indecision and counteracting claims. If all these things are taken up as his work, will not our whole lives be consecrated to him in the sphere in which He has placed us?

(To be concluded.)

MR. PHILIP PHILLIPS IN HOLLAND.

ON September 10 Mr. Philip Phillips left Holland after a stay of three months. All those who have had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Philips found it difficult to say good-bye! and many a heart whispered a "auf Wiedersehn" (may we meet again). We do all of us hope that within a few years Mr. Philips may come to us; if possible, we will offer him a larger sphere for his work.

The Gospel is liberally preached in Holland, but it is an orthodox preaching with too little power of the Holy Ghost. There is nothing attractive for unbelievers in the way services are held in Holland.

We thank Mr. Philip Phillips over and over again for having come to Holland. And we know that the sweet words he sang will be remembered by many a soul long after he has returned to his own home.

Mr. Phillips leaves Glasgow on the 20th inst., per Ethiopian, en route for America.

Baarn, Sept. 11. IDA OYENS.

LIVERPOOL EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.—The work done in the tents under the auspices of the Society at New Brighton, Holyoake, and Kirkdale since the issue of its annual report has been fraught with much blessing. Souls have been convinced of sin, and brought to a knowledge of the Saviour. The children's meetings have been of real interest. Local Christians have joined Messrs. Lydiatt and Eccles in furthering the services. Help for this work will be thankfully received by Mr. A. Brown, 7, Tithebarn-street, Liverpool.

FROM BUDDHA TO CHRIST.

YESTERDAY we witnessed another blow upon the great giant of Buddhism. A man from the priesthood was received into our Church. The deacon of the Thongzai Church is the great ex-priest, Bo Shaw Mot, who was a priest for twenty years, and it was a touching sight to see his extended hand, and quivering lip, as he tried to speak out his blessing for one who, like himself, had left the proud rank of Buddhism. Then, as he walked away from the river bank, I heard him say, "You will be hated by many now, but Jesus Christ was also hated. Up yonder we shall be the sons of the eternal God, the King over all kings."

Mong Koh has been with us two months, and this is a brief history of him: He was born at Sondoway, in the province of Arracan. After he had passed through the first term of the yellow-robed priests, he left, and became a cattle-trader in the service of his father. On one of his first trips he went into the Bassein district, where he and his companions received from a Kuren pastor some of our Burman tracts. Mong Koh was greatly interested in the tidings which he heard of a "Living God," and when he returned home, though the others had lost their little books, he had his, and read them to his parents. Poor Arracan had no light to shed on those pages; so he groped on a few years, reading and thinking, till he was discouraged, and then his restless spirit sought again for light in the ranks of the priesthood.

He determined that he would study the sacred books, and, if possible, find rest for his soul; so he left his home amid the tears of his fond mother, and as he was honest in his vows he did not take the Christian tracts. Five years passed, and yet his future offered no promise of joy and peace, so he determined to go to the golden city, and study at the feet of the great archbishop, or some other high in the priesthood. To carry out his plan he removed to a monastery which was on the highway to the temple of the great Boodh. While there a traveller came and told so much about what he had heard at Thongzai, that the young priest was unsettled in his plan. The words of the traveller brought back the story he had heard from the Karen pastor ten years before, and though the stranger was not a Christian, yet night after night he recalled and repeated so many of the words of the Thongzai teacheress and the preacher, Ko Bah, that the young priest got a few more gleams of light, and with an assurance from the traveller of a cordial reception at Thongzai, he decided to go and hear for himself. As he hinted some of his doubts to his superior, the old priest suspected what might be the result, and told him he had better cast off his robes and renounce his vows there and become a layman. But this was not his trouble; he was in search of light, but he was in a difficult position, and could not go to Thongzai.

At last the time arrived, and when his superior was absent he formed his plan. As one of the younger priests was tired of his life, he gave him some money for the purchase of a lay dress, and with him as his follower he started on his five days' trip. When he reached Rangoon he went to a monastery, which is the custom, as priests are not allowed to sleep or eat in a private house except in case of necessity. In this monastery, to his great surprise, he found himself in the presence of his superior the old priest. He was again urged to change his dress and seek happiness as a layman, but he was unwilling to do so till he had heard more about the Lord Jesus Christ. He begged enough for the railway fare to Thongzai for his friend and himself. They reached the village, which is 100 miles from Rangoon, one Sunday, and as they were a little afraid of a white face, they sought shelter with a Burman man, who was pleased to give it for the promise of merit in some future state of existence.

He sent for Ko Bah, who soon returned with the young priest, who was eager to hear the whole of the wonderful story. We talked and read with him two or three hours; and as it was not the custom of his order to sleep in a house where there are females, I asked Ko Bah to take him for a few days. After that he came in and out, reading our books, looking at the wall-illustrations, and I was soon convinced that he was a sincere searcher for the truth. But there was a new obstacle in the way. There had been many robberies in our place, and in other places about, so that all strange travellers were suspected, and some proved guilty; so some of our wise men hinted a strong suspicion that these two men might be in a deep plot to rob and murder us, and if linked to another gang, would probably burn the village. We had sounded his religious character, and we ourselves felt sure he was not a robed-up shaven-headed layman; but, in order to be cautious, we told the priest he might remain awhile if he would send away his followers, who had friends at Frome. It looked strange to see a man in the yellow robe at all our prayer-meetings, Chapel and Sabbath-school services; and as he was uncomfortable in that costume, he wished to make a change. But I wanted to be sure of his honesty, and deferred the time, telling him that God did not care about the colour of one's dress, and I did not, and begged that he would make himself as comfortable as possible. So he ate and drank with the others; and in order that he might hear the Buddhist arguments answered with a word from God's book, we took him out some mornings to our Bible-stall. This created some excitement in our place, and one day a deputation of Buddhist elders waited upon him to discuss the points of the law; but he was so strong on our side that they gave it up, for they said: "Why, he has begun to pray in the name of Jesus Christ!"

He read and studied all the time for ten days, and then we bought him new garments, and one Sunday morning, after our Sunday-school, we gathered in our Burman room for the change. I questioned him in the presence of our preachers and others, and then Bo Shaw Mot and Ko Bah offered prayer, and he went into my study and cast off his robes. Since that he has been our student, sometimes in the Bible, sometimes in the hymn-book, then at the Bible-stall, and now and then an assistant colporteur at the railway station. He had been a priest only nine years, but he had acquired all of their peculiar habits, and when he had a new religion to learn, he had also a new life to begin in every way. He longed to be baptized, and after a close examination he was presented at our Saturday evening preparatory service, and then to the Church in the chapel. He gave a clear testimony to his belief in Christ, and when the elders questioned him in regard to his trust in Gandama he satisfied them fully that he had not one lingering spark of trust in Gandama, or any of his doctrines. We rejoice over the salvation of another soul, and we are glad to have another tangible proof of God's power to save, and a pledge that his promise will be verified in regard to the heathen.

I asked Mong Koh what I should say to the Christian friends, and he replied, "Ask them to pray for me and my people." The future is now before him, an unknown one. All that I now know is that he has a great desire to preach to his parents and friends, and it may be that he is the one to flash up a little light in the great darkness of Arracan. I should like to tell my dear English friends many of those histories, but I have not the time to do so, and it is better to spend that time in doing something for our railway people, who seem specially to be their foreign Mission. We have had our first railway "sociable" in the library, and the people were delighted to see the album pictures and read the text and word which has been written underneath each photograph. I wish to ask for the photographs of all friends who are interested in my "Railway Library." They may never pay us a visit, and may never meet any of these people, but the written Word and the face may be the encouragement and salvation for some. As one of the men looked at the picture of Dr. Bonar he turned to me and said, "I have read his sermons, now I will see what text he has for us railway men; I will look it out in the Bible you gave me from that English lady. Have you her picture also?"

These may all seem small things for you who have such great things to do, but Christ is able to bring out great results. Accept, my dear friends, my sincere thanks for your aid in various ways; the books, the texts, the pictures, the magic-lantern, and other contents of Mrs. Lundie's box are now all out on their mission.—Yours, in the Master's service, Marilla B. Ingalls.

PARIS CITY MISSION.

WE have received the third annual report of this Society, and are glad to find it a simple record of manly Christian effort, with many proofs of the Divine blessing. In the back parts of Paris the Bible is an unknown book, and its narratives and teaching have all the charm of novelty. The most unlikely people, therefore, group around the missionaries to listen; as the gracious and sure result, the entrance of the Word gives light in the dark dwellings, and to some it has already proved the power of God unto salvation.

We select the following as specimens of cases of blessing. "Conversion of a Bas-Breton: This family has been some time under my visitation, and I taught the eldest girl to read. She has lately become a church member. The mother also received the truth, and died in the faith. The father had always resisted, but has at last received the Gospel, and last week joined the Church of Pastor Monod.

"Madame B—— testifies to Mr. G——: My daughter is completely changed since your visits: she has become a Protestant, and obeys me implicitly. When her work is finished she remains with me; and although often invited to go to balls and theatres, she says, 'No; my duty is to remain with my mother; I cannot follow you in such a path.'"

As regards funds, the Committee, upon which are the leading French, American, and English pastors, are at present in much difficulty. The Society is young, and its successful work is as yet not largely known. The Committee, therefore, earnestly ask the highly-favoured Christians of Great Britain to help them with a still increased liberality to strengthen the bonds of fellowship in Christ, by sympathy for the myriads who are perishing in the French metropolis of gaiety and irreligion for lack of the words of eternal life.

Mr. Weylland, 31, Carlton-hill, N.W., who acts as Hon. Secretary for England, will gladly send out reports, and receive and remit such aid to those Christian workers in Paris as may be sent to him.

EVANGELICALISM AND THE UNIVERSITIES.

OUR contemporary The Rock furnishes some very cheering facts indicative of the prevalence of Evangelical thought and action at the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. Those who think gloomily of the prospects of Evangelicalism as likely to die out, or to be wrecked between the Scylla of Ritualism and the Charybdis of Broad Churchism, between which it has to steer its way, need not yield to the influence of their fears, but have abundant cause to take heart. The good ship holds on its way, and is likely to do so while so many signs of vitality and spiritual power are found manifesting themselves among the young men from whom her ranks are to be recruited.

It is a cause for sincere rejoicing that at both Oxford and Cambridge a daily prayer-meeting is successfully carried on, while in some of the Colleges an evening meeting also is held. College Bible-readings on the Lord's Day are becoming general, and a monthly missionary meeting, at which missionaries are invited to speak, and missionary topics are discussed, is also held in some cases. Many of the undergraduates engage in Sunday-school teaching, and in district visiting under the superintendence of clergymen and others, who gladly accept their aid.

On Sunday evenings it has not been uncommon to see University men at work holding open-air services; and, in spite of reproach and scorn, boldly preaching the Gospel of Christ, and so proving the loving concern for souls by which they are possessed. Among the common lodging-houses of the parish of St. Thomas, Oxford, which are much resorted to by the indigent poor, earnest workers may be seen setting forth to attentive listeners the way of salvation. During the vacation the spirit of evangelistic zeal has not flagged, so that proofs of the existence of this hallowed earnestness on the part of collegians have been given on every hand. On some of our seashores where children's services have been held, valuable help has been afforded by students from these centres of learning, while in the North of England, Cambridge undergraduates have been busy holding a parochial Mission, and others in various districts usefully employed in Christian work.

These facts are full of encouragement and promise. They go far to animate the spirit of those who by reason of surrounding error and incessant conflict with forces opposed to spiritual progress are ready, like the prophet of Horeb, to sit down in despair. It is of the utmost importance that these efforts to promote Christian fellowship and earnest action among University men should be sympathised with and encouraged by all who have any influence or connection with them. The only hope of the Church of England as to its future power to attract and win for Christ the people of our land lies in the continued growth and development of that spirit of Evangelical fervour in the assertion and defence of sound Protestant truth for which so many of her best and choicest men have been and are distinguished. It is mainly to the Universities we must look for the supply of men suited to carry on this work; if really earnest and vigorous spiritual life can there be awakened and sustained, the results must be of the happiest kind.

CAUTION.—We are requested to state that a young woman named Wheeler is going about begging, using the name of Mrs. Kinnaird and other members of the Committee of Homes for Working Girls.

For the Young.

FOR JONATHAN'S SAKE.

By Mrs. BARBOUR.

WHAT else can I do to please Jesus? It is the new heart that asks this. For the boy or girl that once has tried to please Him, longs to do it more and more. The old heart will still say, "Will nothing less than this do to please God?" but the new heart says, "What new thing can I do for Jesus' sake!" FOR JESUS' SAKE. How often you say it! What does it mean? First, it means that to God Jesus is so dear, that He will do all a child can ask in his name; and here it means, that Jesus is so dear to his own little ones, that they would do anything for each other to show their love to Him.

One day there was a stir in King David's palace. The war was over, the throne was firm, the ark he loved was back to Mount Zion. His sons had rule in the chief places. King David had all that heart could wish or God could give. But this day he cannot rest. Something has brought back to mind the time when Jonathan and he were young; when, though his home was with the hunted bird upon the hills, or in a wild cave, for fear of Saul, he still could weep on the neck of his own Jonathan, and sing to him the new-made Psalm to his harp's sweet tones.

And now from that throne, which once might have been Jonathan's, he bids search be made: "Is there yet any that is left of the house of Saul, that I may shew him kindness for Jonathan's sake?" Mephibosheth was lame on both his feet, and when they brought him to the king's house, he said, "What am I, that thou shouldest look on such a dead dog as I am?" But it was all one to David, for he was Jonathan's son; and he and his little Micah must eat meat at the king's table, like the king's sons, all the days of his life.

Those who came to David's court, and knew how long it had been said in Israel that the lame and the blind were hated of David's soul, might think it strange, in the feast-room of the house of cedar, where shields of gold hung round and cups of fine brass shone, a seat among the men of war kept for a cripple! But when the "why" went round, a whisper would come back, "For Jonathan's sake."

Now, if Christ's sweet love has come to your young heart, it will often say there, "Jesus is gone to heaven; I would like to give him all, but my little hand cannot carry anything to the foot of that bright throne. Is there no one I can show love to for his sake?" And then you will think of some poor one in her small room at the top of a long stair, or some sick one in a wayside cottage, and you will run with a gift of love. Not to be seen of men, nor to get their thanks, but looking up all the way to Jesus, learn to say, "I do it unto Thee." Look past the sick one on the bed to Jesus on the throne, and his own smile will come down into your heart, and fill it with heaven's sunshine.

You have not much to give. You have love to give, at least. A wildflower costs nothing. The very daisy set in grass will be flowers to one who has not seen green fields for years. And then a kind word, a hymn sung—why not a prayer by the bedside?—will run like sweet music through the soul of Christ's poor one, and make it sing for joy. What you give ought to cost you something. A cup of cold water was of great price by the well of Sychar, and still is in those lands where wells are few and deep. The more love that runs out from your heart through your little gift, the more joy will it pour back into your heart again.

If you are on the watch to do the will of the Lord Jesus, he will give you work. Ask him. Keep your heart open, and your hand ready, and they shall take gifts from the King to some of his poor ones, whose cup is all but dry. And while your small gift fills the cup, joy will run over to fill the heart that owns it. And the visit of a little child may raise in that sad heart the song,—

"The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want."

"When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." Study, and copy out, Matthew xxv. 31—46.

Satan knows too well how much the Lord cares for the service of little ones not to try to keep them back from it; and so to you he will say, "Too young yet;" just as to others he says, "too busy," "too poor," "too old," Jesus never says too young. He sets little Samuel to open the doors of the house of the Lord, to trim the lamp, or light the fire, and wait on old Eli, till he is old enough for higher work.—Children's Record.

ON THE RHINE.

YOUR readers, some of whom kindly contributed three years ago to the cost of the tent for the Brussels Exhibition, will be glad to hear that it has again been set up by Pastor de Jonge, in the Flemish suburb of Laeken, Brussels, this year, after two years' disuse. My wife and I had the privilege lately of attending a meeting in the tent, and it was truly delightful to witness the eagerness and sympathy with which these Flemish working people listened to the loving, earnest proclamation of the simple Gospel amongst them. The tent was crowded, just as it used to be in 1881. It is open every night, and there is no sign of flagging interest. Pastor de Jonge is well supported by a number of earnest workers; including several gifted young Flemish evangelists. Flemish is the language of the people, and they naturally prefer listening to those who can speak in their native tongue; but Dutch is practically the same language, differing only in pronunciation (so that Christian travellers wishing to distribute tracts and Gospels in the Flemish-speaking parts of Belgium should take Dutch with them), and the great majority of the people in Brussels understand French sufficiently well to follow a short French address.

Although the tent has only recently been re-erected, the work begun at the time of the Brussels Exhibition has been followed up ever since in the suburbs of Etterbeek; and Pastor de Jonge has had the joy from time to time of receiving into his church as communicants, those who give good evidence of having been truly converted to Christ. Having only a night to spare in Brussels, we were not able to visit this work. Two Protestant day-schools, as well as Sunday-schools, are carried on in connection with Pastor de Jonge's church, one of them being at the "Bethel," as the Etterbeek Mission-room is called.

May I add that Pastor de Jonge carries on all this work in dependence upon the Lord to send the needful funds for the support of the evangelist, who is permanently employed, and the other expenses incurred, and that he is just now in want of further pecuniary help for these purposes. Contributions may be sent to Mr. Edward Trotter, 5, Montagu-square, London, W.

MISS MACPHERSON IN CANADA.

FROM the diary of Miss Macpherson we select the following passages :—

"Stratford, August 13.—Yesterday being the Lord's day, it was my privilege to break bread in an upper room with a little company of believers. On the previous Lord's day I worshipped with Baptists, and the Sunday before stayed with Episcopalians. All seemed stimulated for active work. In the afternoon after teaching an infant class in a Presbyterian Sunday school, I went to the Gospel Temperance meeting, and gave an address on my reasons for wearing the Blue Ribbon. 1st. Romans xiv. 21, our God says, "It is good," &c. If God says, therefore, "it is good" to abstain, under such circumstances, should I prefer my taste and appetite to guide me rather than his counsel? 2nd. All must admit that our brethren stumble by drinking wine; even God's children are tempted, and overcome sometimes by this soul-destroying drink. 3rd. Christians should abstain for the sake of example. My example will influence those who are ensnared by drink. (1 Cor. viii. 13; x. 31—33.)

"This morning I had a long conversation with a young minister who has missionary longings for China, but has yet to complete two years of a university course; he has been two years on the east coast of Scotland, and two in Newfoundland as a missionary. How pleased he was to receive from me Mr. Spurgeon's 'Treasury of David,' on Ps. cxix. This afternoon called upon M. A.B., one of our little girls, sent out in 1874; she is now sixteen years of age, and a great comfort to an aged saint, learning useful things as well as accomplishments. After all these years, her mother has been out this summer under a false name, saw M. A., wrote a letter which she put under the door, saying in time she would take her away. Since then she has returned to England.

"The next child visited was C——. She soon tripped into the drawing-room, neatly dressed, and with such rosy cheeks, followed by a little boy two years her junior, and her companion. Her foster-parents told us what a comfort she was, especially in time of illness. Her sister is the pet in a minister's family. What a change for these children of a lodging-house! One day my friend Mrs. M —— held a garden-party, friends came, and I saw bright eyes glancing at me from little faces which were engraved on my heart. H. L. shyly approached me, but the foster-mother seemed frightened at the interviews, lest old memories should be revived. On my way home to Galt, while in the train, we were accosted by M. J., once a Home of Industry orphan, now Mrs. S., with a lovely baby in her arms. She is a dear, Christian woman, with bright, beaming face. She and her husband are members of the Society of Friends.

Mr. Thom, who has gone on a seven weeks' tour, writes to me: "Met no bad boys as yet; all favourable." He reports Y. M., whom seven years ago we received, destitute and neglected, from a Bible-woman. For six years he has been cared for as a son, and is now the mainstay of the dear widow, suddenly bereft of her husband, and left with two small boys and a farm. This is God's way of using us as a link between lives. Mr. F. A. has just returned from Muskoka. He brings most favourable reports of over thirty boys and girls.

"Lights and shadows make up life, and such we find the experience in our work. We sorrow for others, such as C——, who robs his master of five dollars, runs away, is caught, and brought back to the Home to train. This is his ungrateful return for our labour in nursing him two months through fever. D—— writes that he must return his boy for misdemeanour. Three boys and a girl we may have to return to England as unfit for Canada.

"While out visiting the children we are a band of evangelists, and find grand opportunities of witnessing for the Master and leaving our precious books."

THE THEATRE IN FRANCE.

APOLOGISTS for the theatre are numerous even in the ranks of Christian Churches. Let such persons ponder seriously the following passage from an article that appeared in the Paris Figaro on August 17, which has been sent to us by a correspondent. The writer is M. A. Wolff, one of the editors, and his remarks are occasioned by some letters of Alex. Dumas, who, having introduced the plan of furnishing the stage with real and costly furniture, and of compelling actresses to appear in dresses of the most expensive description, now thinks it necessary to try and abolish the custom. An actress who receives 3000 francs salary, and has to pay 30,000 francs every year for her dresses, cannot live, except by resorting to illicit means. Thereupon, says M. A. Wolff, with hateful cynicism:—

"The character of an actress is really a matter that does not concern us; it has never interested the public. If now and then a woman passes virtuously through the ordeal of the stage, a thing of very rare occurrence, the public does not praise her in the least on account of the austerity of her private life; if, on the contrary, as is the case with the majority, the life of an actress is filled with intrigues, the same public does not condemn her for such trifles. It is understood that that separate world which is called the theatre cannot be judged by the strict morality which rules the rest of society.

"A young girl who chooses the dramatic career either is no more virtuous, or she will not remain so long. Whether she will or no, her profession will fatally force her, sooner or later, into sin. To this rule there is scarcely any exception. I will suppose a girl of eighteen, pure as a star, coming out on the stage. Thanks to the character of contemporary literature, she is from the very first evening involved in intrigues. An actor clasps her in his arms, and calls her the most charming of her sex; she hears nothing but words of love, and the more passionate they are the more the public applaud. Either the débutante understands and then already, she is no longer an innocent girl; or she does not understand, and then she is a bad actress. Two hundred men in the orchestra level their opera-glasses at her. Love-letters pour in at the porter's lodge. She lives in a world of passion and excitement. Everything around her conspires towards her ruin.

"It is because we know the snares of theatrical life that we have set up a separate code of morality for actresses; it is an understood thing that their responsibility does not equal that of other women, and that what is called a fatal fall in ordinary life, is nothing more than a trifling accident in the life behind the scenes. Her profession as an actress saves the woman from current morality; the public feels that a young woman cannot be mixed up every evening in intrigues, nor play a part in what is called the study of manners, without losing by degrees the strict notion of modesty.

"For all these reasons the virtue of an actress is of very little use to her in her profession. I will go further and say: To be a really clever performer, and very few are such, the various passions of a woman's nature cannot be represented by one who has not felt them. If I do not express an absolute fact, it is at least remarkable that the lives of all the great actresses have been full of intrigues; and it may even be said that the greater they were the freer the life they led. The history of the theatre, from its origin to our own times, tends to prove this.

"Everything connected with the theatre is beyond current morality. For example, it is certain that a tradesman would be less esteemed if, to improve his business, he exhibited half a dozen young girls in his window, luxuriously dressed, and adorned with all their diamonds, in order to attract the passers-by. The manager of a theatre loses none of his respectability through adding such an attraction to his undertaking.

"The author who furnishes the pretence for these exhibitions, and who knows perfectly well that the immoderate luxury of that half dozen women has nothing to do with the question of art, properly so called, remains no less an honourable man in all the force of the term. And why, pray? Because everything that concerns the stage escapes analysis. The public does not take the same view of the stage as of social life; it wants to laugh, or to cry, often both at once; and it does not trouble itself about the consequences."

WALDENSIAN CHURCH IN ROME.

THE following extracts from a letter of the Rev. D. Buffa, dated Rome, Aug. 24, may interest our readers :—

"The successors of the old Barbes are true to the missionary spirit of their ancestors, and are ready to go in at whatever door the Lord may open for them. The Waldensian Church is carrying on a great work of evangelisation all over Italy, thus taking a noble revenge on its ancient persecutors. In Rome the work has been hindered by the want of a suitable place of worship, and the necessity of removing repeatedly from one hired hall to another, through the bigotry and prejudice of landlords. Yet God has 'established the work of their hands,' and a good congregation has been formed of earnest converts from Catholicism. A church has been built which will be opened for worship in November. With what 'vehement desire' this event is looked forward to by the Waldenses will be readily understood by those who have read the thrilling story of their sufferings and persecutions. Here, in the very Rome whence the edicts went forth for their extermination, the Lord of Hosts has firmly planted them, and given them a place where they may proclaim undisturbed the Gospel of peace and love and free salvation, through Jesus Christ the Lord.

"I have been alone here for two months, and although it is summer, there is much to do, for the number of strangers that come to our services is large. More than half our church members and regular hearers are out of town, yet our hall is always full. To God be the glory! There is much to hope for when the church will be opened. I have twice lately had the opportunity of preaching the Gospel, in sorrowful circumstances, to persons who perhaps never before heard it. A German artist, well known in Rome, and a Councillor of the Academy of St. Luke (Belle Arti), died not long since. I was invited to conduct the funeral service, and thus was enabled to speak to about fifty persons, painters, sculptors, &c., mostly Roman Catholics. They listened with much attention, and several came afterwards to thank me.

"Then yesterday it fell to me to conduct the service at the funeral of a Swiss banker, who was much respected. The family, being in a good position, obtained permission to bury him in Campo Varano, the Roman Catholic cemetery, where, hitherto, no Protestant has been admitted. Numerous friends and representatives of the different banks and commercial houses followed him to the grave. I was in the municipal carriage, in the place usually occupied by the priest. On reaching the cemetery I had before me more than seventy persons who seldom enter our churches, and after saying a few words of remembrance of the precious gifts of the deceased, I proceeded to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ on the words, 'Our friend Lazarus sleepeth' (John xi. 11), with the object (1) of consoling the bereaved family and friends, and (2) of inducing all present to have faith in Jesus, the Conqueror of death and Prince of life. A third of my audience was composed of Jews, and all, or nearly all, who heard me were strangers to the Gospel. God grant that the good seed of the Word may take root in some hearts."

BRIXTON.—A Gospel Temperance Mission has been held in the grounds of Bethel House, Brixton-rise. The meetings were well attended and fairly successful.

THE PERSECUTED JEWS.—2.

IN my last paper I referred to the evidence which exists that the recent persecutions of Jews cannot fairly be laid to the charge of the Jews as being brought on them by misconduct. This evidence is of various kinds:—

(1) It can be proved beyond all doubt that the persecution in Russia was begun last year at the instance of highly-placed Government officials, out of anger and revenge because the money—a very large sum—demanded from the Jews was not forthcoming. A forged Ukase was circulated in the provinces where Jews live, telling the peasantry that their Father the Czar wished them to have the property of the Jews.

(2) The Government officials of every grade, and the soldiers with few exceptions, not only did not protect the Jews, as they might have done at first, but they incited the mob and shared in the plunder. General Drenteln and others can be identified as having earned an evil notoriety in this respect.

(3) In some cases the peasantry refused to rise against the Jews, and in others petitioned for their restoration after they had been expelled.

(4) It can be shown that the accusations made against the Jews for usurious practices, for encouraging drunkenness and for hard dealing, are either grossly exaggerated or entirely unfounded.

The British Consul-General at Odessa wrote last year to our Foreign Office that he did "not think that the peasants have any hatred against the Jew as a Jew, but that the riots had a political end, and that in every instance of anti-Jewish riot the peasantry were incited by those who used for their own purposes their (i.e. the peasants') love of drink and hope of plunder."

Eye-witnesses of the riots in Russia last year stated that they observed that at the beginning the mob received instructions from intelligent men, and also that the soldiers assisted in plundering the houses of Jews, and carried off the spoils. Sir N. M. de Rothschild and the Russo-Jewish Committee vouch for the truth of this statement.

At Balta the Jews at first succeeded in defending themselves, when the chief magistrate summoned 500 of the neighbouring peasantry, who arrived with waggons to carry off the plunder. The Jews were then overpowered, and those who tried to defend themselves cast into prison, where they were found when the Governor of the Province arrived with fresh troops to put an end to the horrors of butchery and incendiarism, which had been raging unchecked, or rather aided, by the local garrison, who, while they cast Jews into prison, had not arrested one single rioter.

The special correspondent of the Evening News, May 19, 1882, says:—

"The publication of intelligence respecting the worse than Bulgarian horrors perpetrated on the Jews in Russia, turns out to have been prohibited because the Journal de St. Petersbourg happened to let out that the Sous Chef, of Bialystock, was among the masked leaders of the rioters, being inadvertently arrested by a clumsy constable under his own orders, when he was engaged in leading on the attack on the Jew quarter of the town."

The following is an extract from a report compiled from official sources in 1882:—

"Simultaneously with the anti-Jewish Commissions, a special body has been appointed to discuss the means of diminishing inebriety in Russia. The measure is intended to trump up fresh accusations against the Jews, who, being frequently innkeepers, are charged with inciting people to drink. Unfortunately, M. Ignatieff forgot that in accordance with statistics previously collected by Government, the western provinces, in which the Jews are chiefly located, are the most sober and well-behaved of the entire empire. Only in the central provinces, where the Jews may not live at all, or at least are denied tap-room licences, drunkenness has reached the terrible proportions so frequently complained of by well-meaning people."

The Cracow Pryeglad Polstri, the leading Polish review, 1882, says:—

"We do not at all approve of these anti-Jewish dealings being extended to Polish soil. We object to seeing the Jews driven from Poland. If the Jews were to go, who is there in Poland to fill the gap and take up their occupations? There are very few Poles prepared to become operatives and traders. Consequently, if the Jews leave, their place will be taken by the Russian "kasap" (Muscovite boor) or the German "Kulturträger" (culture-carrier, nickname given to the Germans by the Slavs). Both elements are infinitely more injurious to us than the Jew, and imperil the national future of Poland a hundred times more effectually than the people some injudicious persons wish to get rid of."

In a report furnished to our Government by a British Consul, it is stated that "the Jews in Russia do not share in common with other subjects of the realm the same rights. . . . No career is open to them in the service of the State except the medical profession. They may also become engineers and sworn attorneys. Residence in the interior of the empire is restricted to certain districts [Jews are only allowed to live in 16 out of 86 governments], and in the capital only to a small number of First Guild merchants." These restrictions are partly the cause that the Jews turn their attention to commerce; but the report adds: "it must be acknowledged that the reasons of their success are their sober, laborious, and thrifty habits, and the mental superiority they possess over the lower classes. Nothing is beyond the enterprising nature of the Jew; and if he only receives a small return on his capital, he is soon able to outstrip his competitors, whose habit of living demands a larger expenditure, and consequently handicaps them in the race."

The corn trade of South Russia, which was chiefly in the hands of the Jewish middle men, was thrown into the utmost confusion and disorder, together with all the industries dependent thereon, by the persecutions in which the warehouses and stores of wheat were destroyed, all business stopped, and the Jews ruined and driven out into exile. They were the only middle men, and when they were ruined the peasantry were ruined with them. E. A. Finn.

ENGLISHMEN IN CAPE COLONY.

WHEN leaving Scotland for South Africa, a friend said to me, "Take care of yourself; going to the Colony means, very often, going to the devil." Since coming here these words have often recurred to me, as cases have presented themselves exactly as my friend put it. It is reported of a very popular minister of great influence with young men in Cape Town to whom many coming from home bring letters of introduction, that he invariably asks the new arrival to attach himself to his church. In many instances the reply is, "I should like to look round first;" speaking of such he says, "I generally find they do not turn out square."

A young man coming to this Colony must possess decision in religious matters, otherwise he is like a ship without ballast, and sure to come to grief. A minister who has had a good twenty years, experience in South Africa lately said: "Many young men accustomed in the old country to attend regularly the house of God with their parents, have on coming to this comparatively solitary country fallen away from their attendance at such places, preferring to follow the crowd in idleness, or in pursuit of pleasure." PETERHEAD, N.B.—During the months of July and August an interesting series of open-air meetings have been held at this place. From 8000 to 10,000 strangers are gathered here, from all parts of Scotland and England, for the herring fishery. The meetings have been conducted by Revs. Messrs. Maxwell and Chrystall, Free Church deputies; Mr. H. Ferguson, North-east Coast Mission; and Dr. D. M. Pittendreigh, Scottish Evangelist Association. Many have heard the word of life, and not a few have waited at the close of these meetings, seeking to know Jesus. In visiting among the women good work was done, and fruit has been gathered to the Master.

TAKE ME, BREAK ME, MAKE ME.

By Rev. W. T. SLEEPER.

O GOD, unblessing and unblest,
A withered plant but not at rest,
A useless cumberer I'm found
Upon Thy field, Thy purchased ground;
And yet I pray—"Do not forsake me,
But in Thy hand, O Jesus, take me!"
As workmen take unbroken flax,
As moulders take unshapen wax,
As smith, the iron, rough and cold,
A useful instrument to mould,
So, in Thy skilful hand, oh take me!
But never let thy love forsake me.

Like rock, uncrushed, the stubborn will,
Though bearing gold, is barren still;
Like marble in the quarry rough,
The natural heart is useless stuff;
And so I pray—"Do not forsake me,
But with thy hand, O Jesus, break me!"
As mortars crush the hardest rock,
As hammers break the stony block,
As millstones bruise the firmest wheat,
As nuts are broken for their meat,
So with thy mighty hand, oh break me!"
But never let thy love forsake me.

Though crushed and broken, yet I'm naught
But fragments to the furnace brought;
Though bruised, I have no worth to feed
The multitudes that die in need;
And so I pray—"Do not forsake me,
But meet for service, Jesus, make me!"
As into useful forms the ore
From molten scraps the moulders pour,
As fire doth make the bruised wheat,
When mixed and moulded, fit to eat,
So fit for use by fire, oh make me!"
But never let Thy love forsake me.

ANGLO-INDIAN EVANGELISTIC SOCIETY.

VARIED, interesting reports are being received of extensive evangelistic work by this Society's agents, principally among Europeans and Eurasians scattered throughout their wide districts in India.

Rev. H. G. E. de St. Dalmas reports from Munmar, on the great Indian Peninsula Railway, a full month's abundant opportunity of preaching the Word in safety, through heavy rains, destructive floods, and prevailing cholera. On Friday, July 6, he went by invitation to the gaol at Akola Berar, and spoke for nearly an hour, in Hindustani, to a most attentive audience of about a hundred prisoners. On July 10 he visited Amraoti, the capital of Berar, and had an evening service at the railway station, which gave an opportunity not known for years to some living at the station. On Monday, July 16, he attended an evening service in Wardha, Central Provinces, held in the house of the station master, whose wife is seeking to serve the Lord by assembling the few railway employés on Sunday afternoons for Bible reading and prayer. Next day he visited the Wardha Valley Colliery Railway, Warora. There is a considerable European community in connection with the collieries and railway, who very rarely have any ministerial visit, or have any Sabbath service. Mr. St. Dalmas says: "In most of the places visited it seems still to be only sowing-time as yet. With visits at long intervals, and for a day or so at a time, it is not easy to find out what amount of impression is created, but there are tokens for good, if only in the number of open doors."

Rev. Isaac F. Row, at Coonoor, in the Nilgiris, writes:—"The Government railway chaplain for the Madras Railway has recently gone home, and as yet no one has been found to take his place, so I hope to go along the line shortly for a little evangelistic work. We are having very good times here. Mr. Walker, our new chaplain, is very earnest and devoted, and he and I labour together in the most harmonious way. We have had quite a revival work lately. Many souls have been saved."

THE CANON & THE COMMISSIONERS.

CANON WILBERFORCE has written a very vigorous letter to The Times anent the Report issued by the Select Committee appointed to inquire into the relation of the Church of England to the liquor traffic. This Report the Canon charges with betraying a spirit of compromise, and of apparent concern for the financial rather than the moral aspect of the question. He describes it as "unspeakably humiliating and unworthy of a professedly spiritual body" such as the Established Church. The partial character of the Report is also complained of, as dealing only with London and the suburbs, and leaving untouched the provinces, and the enormous number of houses built on Church lands with the consent of the Commissioners.

The Report certainly is not what should be expected from representatives of a great religious body, engaged in dealing with one of the chief moral and social questions of the day, and is not likely to commend itself to public confidence. As Canon Wilberforce says, it is too "superficial and unsatisfactory" for that. Clearly those who are responsible for the Report have failed to apprehend the gravity of the situation and the moral responsibility involved in the position of the Church respecting it, otherwise at least regret would have been expressed for the errors of he past, and earnest measures of reform suggested or advised. The subject cannot rest as it is, and if a more searching and practical inquiry should be instituted it may lead to speedier action than would otherwise have been possible.

The words of the Canon commenting on the statements of the Committee, that "time will be required before any large change can be brought about," are so eloquent and so capable of wider application all round to the need of firm and uncompromising action in dealing with acknowledged evils, that we give them in extenso:—

"'Time' when the people are perishing by thousands under the maddening effects of the drug, for the purpose of selling which 24 houses are admittedly held in London alone by the trustees of the Established Church. 'Time' when it is notorious that a vast proportion of the crime, pauperism, and lunacy of the country is the direct fruit of the public-house system, which system the Church, while professing to be 'the light of the world,' is thus both directly and indirectly helping to support and to promote. Surely it is as impossible for a Church as for an individual to serve both God and Mammon, to be both for Christ and against Him at one and the same time."

LATYMER-ROAD MISSION.—Mr. Aulay Macaulay appeals for Sunday-school teachers for the Latymer-road Mission. He says: "Our Sunday-schools are crowded with children, and we have vacancies for at least twelve teachers." Anyone willing to respond should apply personally any week evening, or Sunday morning or afternoon, at the Mission-room, Blechynden-street, Notting-hill, W.

THE BIBLE VAN AT BUXTON.—After six weeks' successful work at Blackpool, the Bible van came to this fashionable resort. The sales of Bibles and various religious literature have been very encouraging, but we have rejoiced most to hear, each evening, Messrs. Wharton and Weaver, the Evangelists in charge of the van, tell out, with no uncertain sound, the story of redeeming love. In this work they have been frequently assisted by Mr. P. Moir Crane, who is staying here. We have been greatly impressed with the value of this work as a means of evangelisation. On no one evening, although some have been stormy, has there been less than 300 gathered round the van, and on the evening of Sunday week, when, through the kindness of the authorities, the van was removed to the top of St. Anne's Cliff, the numbers were variously estimated at from seven to nine hundred.

Notes and Comments.

THE first of the series of very important lectures, entitled "Rock and Sand," by Rev. D. J. Monro Gibson, will be delivered in the Lecture-hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., on Monday evening next, at eight o'clock, admission free. We would advise our Metropolitan readers who purpose being present to be early in attendance, and to provide themselves with note-books.

It is a good sign of the times to find so many eminent statesmen recognising and advocating the importance of Christian Missions. Sir R. A. Cross, M.P., has been speaking at Barrow on behalf of the Church of England Missionary Societies, and in the course of his remarks said: "It was not only the duty of this great empire, over which the sun never sets, to do all that was possible to Christianise the world, but every person ought to take an earnest interest in the work."

This individualising duty and responsibility is of utmost importance to the interests of Christ's cause on earth. Societies are of great value as instruments for promoting the spread of the Gospel, but their efficiency depends on the amount of personal concern which is developed among the people of God. They are not intended to relieve us of responsibility, but to help us to discharge it. The work of God at home and abroad languishes for want of individual earnestness and consecration in reference to its claims. Reader, the Lord has need of you; are you whole-hearted in your devotion to his service?

We are sorry to note the death, at the early age of forty-two, of the Rev. Lloyd Harris, pastor of the Church of the Pilgrim Fathers, New Kent-road, Southwark. He was engaged in good and important work amidst abundant tokens of Divine blessing and success, and his premature removal from the sphere he so ably filled will be felt as a heavy loss to Christian workers in South London. He was the founder of the Southwark branch of the Help-myself-Society for men, and of the Help-one-another-Society for women, which together numbered several thousands of members, and were productive of great good in the advancement of principles of religion, temperance, and thrift. We deeply sympathise with these societies, and with the church from which so earnest and devoted a worker has been thus suddenly removed.

An important meeting was held at the Albert Hall, Nottingham, the other evening, in connection with the Trades Union Congress, on behalf of the spread of technical education. Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., presided, and ably advocated the object in view. It was stated that poor districts abroad spent six times more in providing for primary education, such as included early introduction to tools, than is spent in England. There can be no doubt that if the British workman is to hold his own, we must devote far more attention than before to instruction in handicraft. Purely literary education will not suffice to maintain our working classes in efficiency to compete with those of other countries, or to fill the spheres opened to them by the modern developments of trade and manufacture. We may hope that this large meeting has helped to arouse more attention to the subject.

Bishop Ryle has, of course, had to answer some of his censors for his bold step in advance along the line of Christian charity and fraternity in associating with the Presbyterian Church of Scotland. He proves himself well able to defend his course, and does so in the following wise and outspoken terms, first of all dealing with the fact of his even attending service in any other than an episcopal sanctuary. He says:—

"I am blamed for attending the service of the Established Presbyterian Kirk of Scotland, and some have even dared to call that Church 'schismatical.' I care little for such blame. The Established Church of Scotland is a sound Protestant Church of Christ, and its confession of faith is scriptural. Personally I infinitely prefer Episcopacy to Presbyterianism, and our own liturgy to extempore prayer. But it is evident that the Presbyterian mode of worship suits Scotch people. And to tell me that there is anything sinful or wrong in attending such worship is an insult to common sense."

The Bishop then proceeds to deal with his further departure, in that he preached in the Presbyterian pulpit, and we think he will carry with him the convictions of large numbers in his own as well as other Christian communities, when he adds:—

"I am blamed for officiating and conducting services in Presbyterian churches when I have been invited to do so. But why? What is there wrong about it? What law of Church or State do I break? I know of none. So far from doing wrong, I believe I do good and do right. I give public proof of my respect for our ancient Protestant Churches, and of my earnest desire to promote unity and brotherly feeling between it and the Church of England. This very unity, I observe, the Bishop of Dunkeld, in his recent charge, is longing and yearning for; and I do not wonder, when I see the religious divisions of Scotchmen. But, with all respect to the worthy Bishop, I venture to think that when I accept the invitation of Presbyterian ministers to preach in their pulpits, I practically help forward the cause of unity between Scotch and English Christians quite as much as he does by his charge."

This is all most excellent and praiseworthy, although it occurs to us to remark that "religious divisions" are in no wise more prevalent north of the Tweed than south of it. Will the Bishop of Liverpool now be consistent with himself and fraternise, in the same practical way, with his fellow Protestants of other communities in his own diocese? If he is really in earnest in the matter, he could not manifest his sincerity better than by occupying a Presbyterian, a Methodist, or some other Protestant pulpit in Liverpool outside the Church of England.

Truth and religion ought to go together, and where the latter is real and of the heart they must and will. But form and outward show will not produce virtue or even subdue vice. The county court judge at Llanidloes, the other day, said of the district he travelled over: "The perjury he met with was simply sickening. The place was scattered with churches and chapels, and the people thought themselves religious, but at the same time told lies unblushingly."

The duty and importance of strict adherence to truth is a lesson which requires to be enforced with all possible earnestness. We cannot say that we have reached the time when "none calleth for justice nor any plead for truth," but there is a lamentable disregard of strict truthfulness in many modern circles, leading to a want of social confidence, and an air of unreality, which is painfully felt. Truthfulness in little things is a point all should aim at, lest the habit of departing from it should grow upon those who make light of it. Paley has said: "I have seldom known anyone who deserted truth in trifles that could be trusted in matters of importance."

Churches and chapels have their important uses, but they cannot make those who attend them pure and Christlike. It is not the place, but the Presence and Power of God, discerned and felt within it, which is efficacious for good. Solomon said, "I have seen the wicked buried who had come and gone from the place of the holy," and so it is still. There are numbers who are trusting to their church and chapel-going to save them, but such should remember that God says of those who draw nigh to Him with mouth and lips, while the heart is far from Him, "In vain do they worship Me." "God is a spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth."

The Crown Prince of Prussia was present at the Luther Festival held at Wittemberg last week, and spoke most cordially of the movement to commemorate the Reformation work. The King, though unable to be present in person, commissioned the Prince to say in his name that he felt the most lively interest in every such celebration, adding:—

"I most fully appreciate the rich blessing that may accrue to our beloved Protestant Church from its members everywhere being reminded of the great inheritance and noble possessions which God has given us through the Reformation. I pray to God that the festival may be blessed to the awakening and deepening of Protestant good morals and the confirmation of peace in our Church."

Would that more crowned heads and royal personages were equally clear and outspoken in their testimony to the worth of sound Protestantism.

A specially interesting service was held at the Baptist Mission House, Castle-street, Holborn, on the 14th inst., to take leave of several friends about to sail for different parts of the foreign Mission field. Mr. Jos. Tritton, the treasurer of the Baptist Missionary Society, presided, the hall being crowded to excess. The Rev. J. H. and Mrs. Anderson are returning to India; Mr. Alfred Leichman, for the first time going to that land; Mr. Sydney Comber, M.B., and Mr. Wm. Ross are just leaving for the Congo; Mr. Balfour, M.A., classical tutor of the Calabar College, Jamaica, and Mr. Williams, return to Trinidad. All were introduced by Mr. A. H. Baynes, secretary of the Society, each one in turn suitably and affectingly addressing the meeting.

The critical state of affairs in China makes it incumbent on the Church of God at home to let prayer be made unto Him continually on behalf of our missionary brethren and sisters at work in that land. We read with thankfulness that the Wesleyan Missionary Society has received a telegram announcing the safety of their agents in Canton and Fatshan, where the late riots have prevailed. The faith and courage of workers in the Chinese field need special encouragement and Divine support at this time, and the least we can do is to bear them before the Lord as often as we are found at the throne of grace.

Among the deaths recorded during the last week is that of Admiral Pierre, whose conduct has had so much to do with recent difficulties in Madagascar. The rule to say no ill of the dead is one to be respected as far as possible, but whatever cause his countrymen may have to speak well of him, and mourn his loss, outsiders have reason to be glad that commanders of his stamp are not very often to be met with in responsible positions. It is charitable, and perhaps reasonable, to think that disease had something to do with the irritability and want of courtesy shown by him in reference to the matter. He has, however, passed away, and we may hope with him, whatever bitterness of feeling has been caused by his mistakes.

It appears that France has some quarrel on her hands in connection with the Congo, as well as complications with foreign powers elsewhere. There has been a talk of hostilities being commenced between M. de Brazza and Mr. Stanley's party, but at present no actual collision has occurred. The Congo district seems to be in a very unhealthy state, and Mr. Stanley's men have suffered much in consequence. It is a sad pity that to the dangers arising from the climate and the barbarism of the interior, should be added that of disputes and rival factions between those who ought to be welded together as the pioneers of civilisation. For lack of the spirit of peace and concord, progress is hindered all the world over.

It is said that the Sultan has signified his willingness to allow the Jordan Valley Canal scheme to be carried out. Application has been made to the British Admiralty to send out a surveying ship to the Gulf of Akabah, while competent engineers are making the necessary surveys all along the route it is proposed to follow. It is a step which cannot fail to excite the attention of students of prophecy and all who are concerned about the future of Palestine and the Jews, and we shall await with interest reliable information as to the details of the scheme.

A letter from Dr. Kestell, Cornish Bishop of Madagascar, to the S.P.G., speaks of the new Queen of that island as being of good repute, and a Christian, all the people being delighted with her. Two other candidates, who would have been very unsatisfactory, were passed by in her favour. The Bishop and a Committee, of which he is chairman, have voted an address of confidence in Ranavalona III., and the whole nation has accepted her rule. These facts are pleasing to record as evidences that under the new régime the work of God is not likely to suffer from opposition on the part of the native Government. Foreign influence, however, still threatens evil, and the future is anything but bright for our missionaries at present, so far as the human outlook is concerned. But "The Lord reigneth."

We learn from the correspondent of The Standard that the present Queen was educated in the Friends' Schools at Antananarivo, and afterwards in that of the London Missionary Society. It is also said that on the morning of her death the late Queen sent for the young girl she had named as her successor, and exhorted her in some parting words to trust in the same God as she had trusted in. It is a significant fact, also gathered from the same source, that since the war broke out, instead of revolution and riot, as would have been the case some few years ago, the places of worship have been much better attended, and meetings for prayer numerously held.

Human nature presents strange phenomena for the consideration of those who are observant of its varied phases. But it may be questioned whether a stranger phase of character has ever presented itself for analysis than that exhibited by a labouring man in South Shields, who is described as steady and industrious, and who has applied for the office of public executioner. In his application he says that "if appointed the object of his life will be attained." Men have idiosyncrasies of all kinds we know, and objects worth liv ng for differ greatly according to the different temperaments and tastes which prevail, but this is the first time we have heard of a hangman's work being the summum bonum of human desire, and the acme of earthly delight.

While as an object in life an executioner's work is by no means elevating or commendable, much of the sentimentalism which brands that office with obloquy and scorn is fairly open to criticism, being both illogical and unjust while capital punishment is the law of the land. If it is right to take the life of a fellow-creature as a penalty for crime, then an executioner is essential to the interests of justice, and only an administrator of righteous law. In that case the holder of the office has no right to be scouted or despised. The feeling cherished so widely against the Marwoods of society opens up the whole question of capital punishment from an interesting and important point of view. It is surrounded with so much that is revolting to our common humanity that it is difficult to approach the question impartially.

The policy of the Bishop of Llandaff in refusing to institute a clergyman to a vacant Welsh living, because the candidate was unacquainted with the Welsh language, is undoubtedly a wise and right one. It is gratifying to find that a number of beneficed clergy in the diocese of Bangor have signed a memorial endorsing the Bishop's action with their hearty approval and consent. It would seem to require no argument to prove that a man charged with the religious interests of a parish, as a clergyman is supposed to be, should be able to make himself intelligible to every one of those to whom he ministers. The Welsh language, moreover, to those who understand it, is peculiarly adapted to move and arouse the heart, and is an essential element of successful ministry in many parts of the Principality.

An opening for useful charity is presented by an appeal made in the columns of The Times last week, entitled, "A Cry from the Workhouse." Mr. J. A Lunn, Medical Superintendent of the St. Marylebone Infirmary, Notting-hill, says that workhouse infirmaries have been entirely overlooked, although hundreds of the poorest and most afflicted of our population are in them. While their bodily wants are provided for, the use of books and papers suited to cheer their many weary and monotonous hours is not open to them, no provision being made for them in such respects. Flowers and fruits also seldom find their way thither. Many of our readers doubtless can and will consider this appeal, and may find by its means an open door for bringing "glad tidings of great joy" to some of the inmates of such infirmaries.

VICTORIA. — An "Evangelisation Society" has been inaugurated in this Colony, having for its object the salvation of souls on the same lines as the English society. "Its promoters," says The Southern Cross, "are men whose names will command respect everywhere."

DEEPENING OF SPIRITUAL LIFE.

FOUR DAYS' CONFERENCE IN GLASGOW.

A SERIES of meetings with the expressed object of promoting "the deepening of spiritual life" was held in the Queen's Rooms, Glasgow, from Tuesday to Friday last week. Judging from the extent and composition of the congregations that came together three times a day, and from the evident interest shown in the proceedings, it may fairly be inferred that the object of the meetings was amply attained, as far at least as human calculation can go. Some of the speakers were very careful to show that however good and enjoyable such gatherings may be, the real tests of progress in the Christian pathway must be looked for in the duties, ministries, pursuits, and tempers of daily life. In times like the present, when conventions of many kinds are being multiplied so largely, these counsels are not unneeded, and it is of course impossible for any one but God Himself to gauge the true and lasting results of such meetings. Still, if outward signs go for anything, there is reason to believe that this solemn convocation of four days in Glasgow had much of the approval and manifested presence of the Great Master of Assemblies.

The meetings were held morning, afternoon, and evening, and were in all cases presided over by Mr. H. F. Bowker, of London. The chief speakers, indeed, were all from a distance, and included such well-known gentlemen as Pastor Theodore Monod, of Paris; Revs. Hubert Brooke, Liverpool; J. B. Figgis, Brighton; W. Haslam, E. H. Hopkins, and Charles Graham, London, &c. It is no disparagement whatever of the teaching gifts of the other speakers to say that in our judgment the utterances of Pastor Monod were the most helpful of all the numerous addresses we heard during these four days. We are, therefore, exceedingly glad in being able to present them to our readers at length, in succeeding issues; the Pastor's first address will be found on a preceding page. It is not possible to give, within the narrow limits of our space, a fair representation of the many good and profitable words spoken by the other gentlemen from the platform. We trust, however, the following summary will indicate the tone and spirit of the Conference.

THE CONDITIONS OF BLESSING.

At the opening meeting, Rev. Charles Graham dwelt in weighty and measured words on the conditions on which God imparts to us all his spiritual blessings. First of all, he said, there must be an earnest desire to be blessed. Throughout the whole of the Scriptures we find that hungering and thirsting after God always precedes the bestowal by Him of any rich blessing. David and Paul were quoted as illustrious examples of this absorbing desire after a deeper and fuller knowledge of God and the treasures of his grace. A second indispensable condition of receiving any spiritual boon is an abhorrence of all that would hinder its reception. If we regard iniquity in our heart, how can the Lord hear us or bless us? God will not accept the gift we may wish to bring and lay on the altar, if we have any unsettled quarrel with our brother. Peter admonishes even the saints that they must lay aside all malice, hypocrisy, guile, and evil-speaking, if they would grow in the Divine life. Such meetings as these ought therefore to be seasons of great searching of heart on the part of believers who desire to progress in the spiritual life. Another condition is that there must be a full surrender of ourselves to God, no keeping back of any part of the price. God must have us in the entirety of our being—spirit, soul, and body. It will not do for a man to endow hospitals and churches or leave great legacies to the poor in lieu of giving himself to God. He wants not dead works, but living bodies and souls—consecrated temples of the Holy Ghost. A last and important condition of receiving blessing from God is the exercise of simple faith. Let faith but extend her arms and God will fill them with choice blessings from his bounteous store. As Christ could not do many mighty works in Capernaum because of the unbelief of the people, so his working is too often hindered now from the same cause.

Mr. Graham gave a second address on the power that there is in the word of the Lord. In the Scriptures this is exemplified in the sphere of nature as well as in the sphere of grace. The miracles performed by Moses in connection with the deliverance of the Israelites from Egypt were referred to as remarkable illustrations of the power of faith simply obeying the Word of God, in the region of physical nature. On the higher plane of grace we find the same truth exemplified. All God's triumphs through his people recorded in the New Testament were in connection with faith. Before this power disease vanished into non-existence. The subjects of our Lord's healing power did not stop to reason about the matter; they exercised unquestioning faith, and at the word of Christ they were healed. So it is when we come to the sphere of spirit. He that believeth on the Son of God hath everlasting life; and as this life at the first is granted to faith, so are all its accessions and increases. It is pure Popery to say that we are justified by faith and sanctified by works. How are our three great enemies—the world, the flesh, and the devil to be overcome? "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even your faith." "Reckon yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, and alive unto God." Taking the shield of faith, we overcome all the fiery darts of the wicked one.

In a third address on Thursday morning, Mr. Graham gave a striking and impressive sketch of the devotion of Paul to his Lord in the midst of all the sufferings and persecutions he had to undergo, and of the grace he exhibited towards his fellow believers. How did Paul attain to such heights in the Christian life? By quiet communion with his Lord. He got more grace in the desert of Arabia than by all the wonderful revelations vouchsafed to him. He learned to know himself when he was thus alone with God; how much he learned of the Lord Jesus Christ we cannot tell. Conferences are not to be despised, but they will not make anyone a great Christian—a giant in grace, such as Paul was. We shall attain to that more through the time we spend alone with the Lord Jesus, and in carrying out the blessed truths that we may hear at such meetings. We need to live on Christ as our daily bread. We need to have Christ ministered to us through prayerful meditation on his Word—there is no substitute for that; otherwise we shall be dwarfs and weaklings in the spiritual life.

On the first day of the Conference an address of solemn and searching power was given by Rev. J. B. Figgis on CEASING FROM SIN.

What, he asked, is sin? In reply, the speaker quoted various scriptural definitions of it. John says it is "the transgression of the law." Law, says Dr. A. Bonar, is the expression of the will of God; therefore, if we step over the line of God's expressed will, we commit sin. The same Apostle says that "all unrighteousness is sin." Whatever we know to be wrong or unjust we must consider to be sinful. James gives a definition of it that ought to cut many of us to the heart. "To him that knoweth to do good and doth it not, to him it is sin." If we have forgotten or neglected any known duty, slighted or disregarded any relationship, than we have been guilty of sin. What says Paul? "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." If we have doubts as to any course, we may take it that such a course should not be taken. Mr. Figgis told an incident to illustrate this point. A fellow-student of his, a physician, is in the habit not only of giving a tithe of all his fees to the Lord's work, but he thus devotes every fee that comes to him for service rendered on the Lord's day. One Saturday evening he was sent for to attend a case, and was engaged on it into the Sunday. He received £100 as his fee, and the question arose whether this amount should go into the family purse or into the charity purse. His wife said if there was any doubt about it, he had better give God the benefit of the doubt; so the £100 went to the charity purse.

Solomon's definition of sin is a most searching one—"The thought of foolishness is sin." The wise man goes to the root of the matter in thus tracing it to the human heart, as did our Lord Himself, when He said, "out of the heart proceedeth evil thoughts," &c. Where could such terrible iniquities as the Saviour mentions come from, besides coming from the heart? John tells us, "He that committeth sin is of the devil." You may say that the apostle means committing sin in the sense of practising it. Granted; are there no professed Christians who practise sin? Certain sins are broken away from, but others are allowed. A distinguished living theologian lately said it used to be currently believed that while a converted drunkard or thief or loose-liver must give up the sins to which they had been prone, a man who had been covetous or hot-tempered might remain so still after his conversion. Now, however, we are coming to see that the God who denounces the one sin denounces the other, and that the grace which is sufficient to cleanse and keep in the one case is equally sufficient in the other. God cannot look upon sin anywhere, and when He sees it in the heart of his chosen, blood-bought, blood-washed children, surely it must make heaven weep. "Thou hast fretted me in all these things," said the Lord to the people of Judah, by the mouth of Ezekiel; has He not cause, oftentimes, to say the same to his children now?

"Ceased from sin." What can it mean, and how can it be attained? It cannot mean ceasing from the law of sin that is in our members. It cannot mean ceasing from the nature that has got sin in it as a flint hath fire. That would not be a Gospel according to Peter, who knew what it was to be sifted as wheat is sifted, and found in himself much chaff as well as wheat. It would not be a Gospel according to John, who asserted plainly that "if we say we have no sin we deceive ourselves." It would not be a Gospel according to James, who said that "in all things we offend;" nor according to Paul, who confessed that he had not already attained nor was already perfect, but pressed forward toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Neither would it be a Gospel according to Solomon, who said, "There is not a righteous man upon the earth that doeth good and sinneth not."

When Peter speaks about ceasing from sin, he cannot therefore mean that there is no flesh to strive against the Spirit; that doth abide even in the very elect. Shall we not understand his meaning somewhat when we read in the letter to the Hebrews: "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us." That is the sin from which a man hath ceased who hath "suffered in the flesh." And is that nothing? Because we cannot tell you that this nature of sin may be actually rooted out and removed from us at once, is it no gospel to tell the drunkard that he may get quittance from his drunkenness, to tell the proud man that he may have deliverance from his pride, the pettish man from his pettishness? It would be a great thing for society if the miser could cease to love his gold, and the spendthrift cease to be such a fool, that the hot-tempered man should become calm, and the cold-hearted man should become tender and gentle and full of sympathy. It would be a glad day to the home, a glad day to the heart of the man himself when such a change as that should come. Such a change may come. We may not only cease from the "sin that doth so easily beset us," but we may also "lay aside every weight," not only that one fatal sin, but the other sins, the buzzing swarm of sins that torture, and torment, and sting, and poison our life. These, too, may be dealt with and got rid of by the grace of God. The Lord Jesus Christ is near enough and condescending enough to come down to the least as well as to the greatest. Over them, too, God giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. The nature left but the brood slain as soon as they are hatched; the sin left but the sins met and captured and conquered the moment they arise by the grace that is all sufficient.

What, you ask, are the means whereby we can reach this grand consummation of ceasing from sin? Are you willing to have the answer? We find it in the words of the Apostle, "He that hath suffered in the flesh." We know that Christ suffered in the flesh. Nay, we can never know what suffering, what agony, what anguish He endured, though we helped to lift the scourge, to drive the nail, to inflict on Him the cruel death of the Cross. But more than that, in the blessed purpose of God, when Christ bore those lashes, we were there receiving the stripes in Him; when He bore that death we were there in Him, agonising and answering to the offended law:

"Lord Jesus, Thou for us hast died,
And we have died in Thee."

We all believe that, but that is not the death that Peter speaks of here, or if it is, it is only the foundation of another death that Peter means you and me to die. It is a real dying, a real suffering, a real going down with Christ into the grave. Are you willing to do that? We have been dead in Christ long enough; it is about time that we should "mortify our members that are upon the earth." There is that pride of yours, for instance; let it not live another moment. If you will only consent that it should die instantly, it will be so much easier than dying by inches. Let us break with sin instantly. There is no royal road; we must cut off the right hand, and pluck out the right eye. They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with its affections and lusts. Are there provinces in your nature yet unyielded, sins that have never been surrendered? God wants the whole of your time, your energy, your entire being; there must be no reserve, no keeping back part of the price, and no taking back part after it has been given.

A second address by Mr. FIGGIS was on

THE PROMISES OF GOD.

In the Revised Version of the New Testament the well-known passage (2 Cor. i. 20) is rendered: "For how many soever be the promises of God, in Him is the yea; wherefore also through Him is the Amen, unto the glory of God through us." In your schoolboy days when you were set to make a skeleton map, say of England or Scotland, you were able to put down the capital city, some of the counties, and some of the great centres of manufactures; you could trace the course, perhaps, of the largest river, or fix the site of some great mountain. By and by, as you learned more about the land, you found you wanted a finer pen; you had to write in the name of another town, another mountain, another valley, and trace the course of another river. So it is with the promises of God. Some of them were whispered about our very cradle and in the nursery, but as we have gone on in life we have come to see and know them in all their beauty and fulness. There is that promise to the sinner, "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow." I think many of us fancy that when our sins are forgiven they are only turned grey—that the marks are left, and that God has them still before Him. It is this half-forgiveness that makes some of us the half-Christians that we are. Nay, they are washed white as the eternal snow. What a beautiful promise is that to the tempted one, "the Lord is faithful, who will not suffer thee to be tempted above that ye are able, but will with the temptation also make a way of escape." Or this word that comes home to so many a tried soul: "I will be with thee in trouble; when thou passeth through the waters, I will be with thee, and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee." Here is a promise sweeter still; it is the Master's own, and the words drop like honey from his lips: "Come unto me, all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Dr. Moody Stuart once said at the Perth Conference: "When I was a young man and seemed to have plenty of strength and energy and wanted to do God's will, I thought He would say, 'Come unto me and I will give you work;' but I found the word was, 'Come and I will give you rest.' There must be rest first, or there will be no work. In the old times, there were six working days, and when the work was done there came the Sabbath, the Day of Rest. But in the new and Gospel time, there is the rest day first. So when we have learnt to rest in the sweet arms of Jesus, then we begin to work for Him."

Heartbroken and weary, where'er thou mayst be,
There are no words like these words for comforting thee;
When sorrows are round thee, like waves of the sea,
The Saviour says cheerfully: "Come unto Me."

There are no words like these words: "Come hither to Dejected and weary, the thorn in thy breast, [rest:"
Afflicted and lonely, He thought upon thee,
And said in his tenderness: "Come unto Me."

O Jesus, my heart would fain be at rest,
There are passions that rage like a storm in my breast;
Oh, show me the path along which I may flee,
Oh, help me, dear Saviour, to "Come unto thee."

There are no words like these words; how calming they
How blessed when Jesus says: "Come unto Me." [be,
Oh, hear then, my heart, they were spoken to thee,
And still He is calling: "Come unto Me."

I would walk through the world with these words on my heart,
Through sorrow, through sin, they shall never depart.
And when dying, I trust He will say unto me:
"I have loved thee and saved thee, Come sinner to Me."

"In Him is the Yea." What can that mean? You commercial men know what it means. Is it not the case that for all the floating notes that are on 'Change, and scattered throughout the community, there ought to be so much bullion in the Bank? Perhaps it is not always so down here; it is always so in the Bank of Heaven. It cannot fail however tremendous were to be the run upon it:—

"Lord, I believe were sinners more
Than sands upon the ocean's shore,
Thou hast for all a ransom paid,
For all a full atonement made."

Then, saved sinner, treading the narrow path and thorny way, can you imagine a single circumstance in which you can be placed where the promised grace of God is not sufficient? Can you think of any wave of temptation or any trial too high for the long and strong arm of Christ to draw you out?

But there is another word: "Wherefore also through Him is the Amen." What does that mean? If the Revisers are right, while the "Yea" is God's, the "Amen" is ours. The ancient saints, by faith, we are told, "obtained promises." If these promises are to be ours, we must embrace, and be persuaded of, them; by faith we must say "Amen" to them. God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them. Let all the people say "Amen." "Christ is made unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption." Let all the people say "Amen." "I will not leave nor forsake thee." Let all the people say "Amen." It is said of the nobleman who came to Jesus for the healing of his servant, "The man believed the word that Jesus had spoken unto him, and he went his way." Go and do thou likewise.

A third address by Mr. FIGGIS was from the text: "Lo, we heard of it at Ephratah; we found it in the fields of the wood" (Ps. cxxxii. 6). In the little book by Mrs. Menzies, on Bible marking, this striking Psalm is taken as an example. In the first part of it you have a series of petitions, and in the second half a series of answers to them. Verse 2, David "sware unto the Lord;" verse 11, "The Lord hath sworn unto David;" verse 5, David desired a habitation for God; verse 13, The Lord desired Zion for his habitation; verse 8, David prays God to arise unto his rest; verse 14, God graciously says, "This is my rest for ever; here will I dwell, for I have desired it." Notice, first, with respect to verse 6, the difference between hearing and finding. "We heard of it . . . . we found it." How many people hear about salvation or sanctification and never find it. When the wise men came from the East they said they had seen his star, and now they wanted to see Him. The friends of the Samaritan woman returned to her and said, "Now we believe, not because of thy word, for we have seen Him ourselves, and we know that He is the Christ." Let us each have converse with Christ in the secret of his own heart that we may not merely hear about Him but find Him. In further expounding this verse, Mr. Figgis showed that the expression "the fields of the wood" most probably referred to Kirjath-jearim, where the Israelites found the ark after it had been for some time in the hands of the Philistines. The people had made too much of the ark, forgetting Him whose presence it symbolised, and God had removed it from them for a time. It is possible to make the same mistake now. At Keswick Mr. Hudson Taylor said: "I have known something about sanctification for many years, and my experience has generally been one of disappointment, so that I have come to think less about the impersonal blessing, and more about the personal Giver of all grace." Ephratah is Bethlehem, so closely connected in many ways with the earthly history of Jesus. If we would hear of spiritual blessing of any sort or degree we must go to Bethlehem, where Jesus is; we must follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth. The place of blessing is a place "where two roads meet;" one the way of suffering in the flesh, and the other the way of saying "Amen" to all the promises and appointments of God. I have been asked, said the speaker, what is meant by the term, "suffering in the flesh," on which I remarked the other day. I do not think it means going into hospital, or even going through deep waters of affliction and chastisement. "Suffering in the flesh," I take to be yielding to God in the very core of our being, giving up sin in the very centre of the will. When the will has made an absolute surrender the thing is as good as done. One of my own flock, who had been such a trembling, doubting one, wrote to me the other day after a short stay at what will henceforth be to her "the city of the wood:"—"The blessing I have been seeking for years was given. Jesus revealed Himself to me in all his fulness. He showed me the mistake I made in wanting to feel, when all I had to do was simply to believe in spite of my feeling. He did not give me any bright feelings, though there was the deep peace that comes from taking Him at his word. I never thought Jesus could so completely satisfy; now I know that He does. I go on believing, and He keeps me all the time. Satan has seemed nearer than ever he was before; he suggests that it was too easy a way of getting blessing, and he tries to trouble me about being kept, but Jesus tells me that I am 'kept by the power of God,' and He does keep me."

Some valuable words were spoken on Thursday by Rev. E. H. HOPKINS, on one of the most precious of the blessings that come to us in Christ. Look at it first as an act of emancipation—something done by the Lord for us. As Christ has made peace for us by the blood of his cross, so it is by Him that we are made free. "God hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son." Again, we are told that Christ "gave Himself for our sins that He might deliver us from this present evil world." Once again we read that we being delivered from the hand of our enemies" (not from their presence) "might serve Him without fear in holiness and righteousness before Him all the days of our life." The essential condition of true service is freedom from the hand of our enemies. And again, "Being made free from sin" (as a master) "and become servants of God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life." But now you say: How am I to enjoy this freedom? "Where the spirit of the Lord is there is liberty." I need mental liberty, for instance: how does the Spirit bring me into the enjoyment of that? A thing is only truly free when it is in its native element. In his original state man's understanding was free, because it was in its true element. What is that? The truth of God. "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." Believing Satan's lie, man lost his mental freedom, but the Spirit brings him back to the truth. You have all realised the emancipating power of the truth when it breaks into the mind. The Spirit brings us not only to the truth, but into communion with Him who is the embodiment of the truth. So, too, we have freedom of conscience when the Spirit teaches us how we may be at peace with God. Another, and a most important point, is the freedom of the will. A thoughtful writer has said: "The weakness of human action may be traced to the supremacy of passion. The passions are too strong in a man, and carry away the will with them." How true that is. How is the will to be set free? Just as the Spirit brings us to the truth, and sets our minds free, so He brings us to Him. who is the very embodiment of love, and sets our wills free. Faith makes all things possible, but love makes all things easy. The glorified spirits do what they like, but then they like what God likes. We need to have our passions cleansed and purified. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." We want, not simply to have gratitude in our hearts for what God has done for us, but to have shed abroad in our hearts the very love of God itself. Christ prays to the Father, "that the love wherewith thou hast loved Me may be in them." Do we understand what that means? "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us," not manifested to us. God not only gives to us the privileges of sons, but he hath communicated to us of his own love that we should feel towards Him as a child ought to feel toward a father.

Well, now, what is our position, having received this liberty? In the matter of conflict, for instance, let us ever remember that Christ has got the victory, and we must begin where He ended. We do not fight for victory or up to victory, as though we were down in the valley, and the enemy on the heights; Christ has already placed us in the victorious position, and we are to be strengthened in Him to maintain the conflict from this place of victory. To know that we are in this position before the battle begins is the preliminary condition to all successful conflict. "Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." That means that we are to keep in our entrenchments, so that we have Christ between our soul and the enemy; not that we are to go forth and turn the enemy out, Christ has done that for us. The devil knows that as long as we abide in Christ our position is an impregnable one, so the Apostle warns us against his wiles. As sure as he can tempt us to come outside our place of victory in Christ, so surely will he get the victory over us.

[We must defer to our next issue some notes of other addresses delivered during the Conference.]

WIMBLEDON.—Rev. A. Treslove Cox, late of West Hackney, has re-opened Christ Church, in Hartfield-road, Wimbledon; adjoining it he has built an iron room, for Sunday and regular week-night evangelistic work.

SOUTHAMPTON.—Mr. Henry Varley writes to us: "You will be interested to hear that the gatherings in this town are most encouraging. We believe that several hundreds have found the Lord. Large numbers are men, and the interest increases on every side. The circus, where Mr. Moody held many of his meetings, is crowded night after night with audiences evidently deeply moved by the truths preached. I seldom remember a more gracious work, or a deeper sense of the presence of Him who is Lord of all. The afternoon Bible readings are very hallowed seasons."

PERSECUTION IN SWITZERLAND.

Sir,—Having been a participator during the last few weeks in the events occurring in Switzerland in connection with the Salvation Army, I beg you to allow me space for a statement of facts involving principles of vital importance for all free nations. I am convinced that it must be ignorance of the facts alone which produces the present silence and apparent consent on the part of the English public and Government in regard to outrages of justice and violations of personal and religious liberty which have scarcely ever been exceeded in the present century.

I would beg your readers to put aside all prejudice in respect of the religious teaching and methods of the Salvation Army, and to look for a moment at this matter in the light of an infraction of justice and a violation of an International Treaty which, if unrebuked, will open the door to still grosser injustices, and to the utmost laxity of principle in International relations. I can never forget the warning words of a distinguished Swiss gentleman whom I met last week at a private conference to consider this matter. "If England," he said, "England, the representative of justice to the whole world, once begins to deal out legal justice in proportion to her antipathies and her predilections—theological, social, or political—she is lost. She has begun to descend the downward path." Others, at the same conference, spoke of the advantage taken of the silence of the English on the subject of these outrages by those persons in the Government of Switzerland who despise liberty. They are daily using that advantage to insult the weak and unprotected. They laugh in our face when English regard for personal rights is mentioned. "Evidently," they say, "these young Englishwomen, Miss Booth and her friends, are abandoned by their own country; we can do what we please with them. If they were persons of worthy character their countrymen would come forward."

I was in Geneva yesterday, and accompanied the leaders of the Salvation Army and others to attend the funeral of a young man called Wyssa, the first convert won by these evangelists in Switzerland, who died last week, worn out by his own labours to win souls, and by exposure to hardships during the prolonged persecutions. Miss Booth was expelled in February last from the Canton of Geneva. She had been given to understand, however, that she could re-enter the Canton for a few hours on the occasion of the death or burial of a friend. I doubted this, and expressed my doubts. A group of friends was assembled in a little garden in front of the house of M. Wyssa, the father, in a quiet neighbourhood a little way out of Geneva. The coffin was placed in the centre of the group; the mother, sisters, and personal friends of the deceased were there. Prayer was offered, and a hymn was sung. There was perfect tranquillity.

Presently there was a slight movement among the mourners, caused by the appearance of the Mayor of Geneva, dressed in his insignia of office. He entered the circle and declared this "réunion of the Salvation Army" to be dissolved. Mr. Clibborn explained—"We are not holding a meeting; we are about to bury a friend," to which the Mayor replied, in tones which must have grated harshly on the ears of the weeping mother, "Bury him, then!" We then moved on in a line from the house to the cemetery, along the country high road. Many Salutistes and friends had collected, so that the line of persons following the bearers was now long. At the grave Miss Booth spoke a few words, and then prayed. The Mayor, accompanied by police, again appeared, and stood opposite our group, at the other end of the open grave. As soon as the simple ceremony was over, and the younger Wyssa had thrown a handful of earth on the coffin, with the words "Au revoir, my brother," the Mayor, with his Marshal, came round and arrested Miss Booth and Miss Charlesworth, there, in the presence of the dead, and with the words of gentle and holy pleading which Miss Booth had spoken still ringing in the ears of all. The two ladies, Mr. Clibborn, and I were requested to get into a carriage which I myself had engaged with the intention of driving with the two ladies direct to the frontier the moment the ceremony was over. A large crowd had gathered, all in strong sympathy with the persons arrested. The coachman refused to drive on, imagining he was now ordered to drive us to prison. There was a moment of struggle and conflict, and the Mayor and his Marshal were hustled. The countenance of the former betrayed feelings of anger and distress; he appeared conscious that he was performing an unpopular, perhaps even an unjust act. A few Swiss Salutistes raised a shout of encouragement for us, and were arrested for doing so.

We were driven to the Palais de Justice, where we were detained several hours. It is impossible to say that we were treated with courtesy by our questioners. The British Consul stood by us kindly, and the arrival, after an hour and a half, of M. Cuenod, the head of the Cantonal Police, a benevolent man, brought about a decision in our favour. When asked why she had re-entered the Canton in contravention of the ban, Miss Booth replied by affirming that her expulsion was illegal, and a breach of the Treaty of 1855 between England and Switzerland. (She had in her hands a copy of the Treaty.) She also asserted that M. Heredia, the chief police authority of the city of Geneva, had actually falsified one of their Cantonal laws in order to expel her. Having myself prompted her to make these statements, I desire to share with her the responsibility of having done so. I am prepared to prove all these assertions, and I may here announce that a detailed account of the whole series of events which has occurred since last November is in course of publication, and will probably appear in October. The position taken by Miss Booth is approved by well-known Swiss jurists and other Swiss citizens. I had a conversation the same evening with a jurist and a late member of the Federal Government. Their opinion is that since no protest or demand for redress comes from our Government at home, the only thing to be done in order to break through the present rule of tyranny and terror is to ignore the illegal arrêtés (illegal in the sense of being a contravention of the Constitutional laws of the country and of Treaties), and to continue everywhere to hold religious meetings, public and private, of course with order and quiet. In return, I endeavoured to point out to the friends of justice here that it is the want of sufficient publicity given hitherto to the facts which has caused England to appear so unusually submissive to a series of insults and outrages such as British subjects are rarely allowed to submit to at the hands of foreigners without a protest.

To continue my recital: we were dismissed. The two banished ladies were ordered at once to be conveyed to the frontier, while Mr. Clibborn, whose only offence was that of joining in a funeral "procession"—a thing allowed every day—was warned not to do so again. A crowd awaited us as we left the Palace. The excitement in Geneva was considerable. M. Lenoir (banker) and M. Pictet and others joined us, and we went in several carriages, accompanied by the Police Agent, to the frontier. Our exit almost resembled a triumph, so little do the working classes in general sympathise with the persecutors. The violent mobs by whom these gentle and devoted ladies have been stoned, pelted with mud, covered with ink and dirty water, kicked, and struck in the face in the streets of Geneva and Neuchâtel frequently during the last five months, must not be supposed to represent the real people of Switzerland. They are the hirelings of the Radicale Autoritaire party now in power, the representatives of the brute force which for the present has got the upper hand. Our friends in Switzerland have heard the police themselves urging on these bands of roughs to acts of violence; and in every case they are further instigated by the wealthy traders in and patrons of vice in the towns.

On Sunday, the 9th, the day previous to these events in Geneva, Miss Booth spoke at a meeting in the Jura woods, some miles out of Neuchâtel. You are aware that the Grand Council of Neuchatel passed an arreté, absolutely forbidding all persons not only to hold but to attend any meeting whatsoever with Salutistes for prayer or conference, in public or in any private house. This has been styled by Neuchâtel citizens a "disgusting" arreté. One can scarcely believe that we are living in the nineteenth century. The disgust felt for this measure by the true Swiss is proved by the fact that gentlemen invite the Salutistes to hold meetings in their parks and houses, and when the police arrive and demand the fine for so doing, they refuse to pay it. The Grand Council of Neuchâtel, however, is determined to hunt down these Revivalists, and on the Sunday morning in question the Prefect of Police appeared, with the Chief of the Gensdarmie, and fifteen gensdarmes (having had to scramble through the forest for five miles), bearing orders to break up the meeting and bring away the ladies by force. But they paused, overawed, touched—as anyone must be who has not a heart of stone—at such scenes as these meetings present. For more than two hours those seventeen officers listened respectfully to the appeals of Catharine Booth, who, filled with the Spirit of our Lord, was speaking such words of power and of holy compassion as few are able to resist. When she prayed these stood with heads uncovered, and faces bent, joining silently. She prayed for the Prefect of Police, asking for him blessings, temporal and spiritual, with such sincerity and simplicity that he wept. At the close several Salutistes, who had formerly been criminals, spoke, mentioning the fact that the officials there knew them, having, in some cases, put them in prison. The completely changed appearance of these men, and their open, joyous faces, impressed the Prefect more than all; these were "living witnesses."

He said to Miss Booth: "You do nothing but good; I beseech you not to hold me responsible for this act; I cannot bear to be held responsible for it." He added that he had harsh orders, which he could not, and would not, carry out. The ladies were conveyed by him to Neuchâtel in a carriage, which was waiting at the edge of the forest, followed by a crowd of the scattered worshippers, who had mustered to the number of about five hundred. Very different was the manner of the President of the Grand Council who awaited them in Neuchâtel. "I come," he said to Miss Booth, "to tell you that you are my prisoner;" and his words and looks of triumphant bitterness were as if he said, "Where is the God who can deliver you out of my hands?"

M. Convert, of Neuchâtel, pleaded that Miss Booth was his guest, and that he alone had called the meeting, deliberately and with full consciousness of what he was doing. He asked to be allowed to bear the penalty. This was refused. There are deep, hidden motives which lead some of these men in office to persecute and insult and silence women. Male Evangelists do not excite their rage and hate to this extent. M. Convert was, however, allowed to give to give bail for Miss Booth for two days. She will probably return to Neuchâtel, and go to prison. Whether her imprisonment will be long or short, whether she will be treated with leniency or harshness, remains to be seen. She is ill and worn, and very frail. I do not believe that we have yet seen the worst. Will the English people, and will our Foreign Office, pause and hesitate until blood is shed? It is a mighty conflict which we are witnessing here, though its present platform is small. It is destined, I believe, to spread far and wide. It is, perhaps, the beginning of the last great conflict between principles of life and death.

Yours faithfully,

JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER.

WINCHESTER CONFERENCE.

[FROM A CORRESPONDENT.]

THEY that wait upon the Lord shall "renew their strength," is a promise we have just blessedly proved here. Our three days' Conference, with such a glorious subject as, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever," has been a time of much joy.

On Tuesday evening our hearts were cheered with a full room of the Lord's people to wait upon Him in prayer and praise, and we experienced then a foretaste of the "more to follow." On Wednesday, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday," was the subject for our meditation. Rev. J. McCARTHY directed our hearts and thoughts to some passages in the Word which reminded us that "before Abraham was I am," that before the creation of the world his delights were with the sons of men. This same Jesus who loved us and gave Himself for us was He who was with the Father in the glory before the world was. Our aged and beloved brother, Rev. J. MANNERS, spoke of Him who was the Eternal Word, who was in the beginning before the world was. Rev. J. H. TOPPING suggested that the "Yesterday" of Jesus Christ, though it had no beginning, ended with the tomb, that the "To-day," commencing with the resurrection, will end with the Lord's return, and usher in the "For ever." In the afternoon Mr. Topping conducted a Bible-reading on "Gideon."

On Thursday "Jesus Christ, the same to-day," proved even a still more precious line of thought than that of the previous day. Perhaps it was that the knowledge of what Jesus is to us now—Shepherd, Companion, Saviour, Friend, touches the heart and brings home to us the inestimable value of Him who loved us and gave Himself for us. Mr. RUSSELL HURDITCH testified powerfully to our souls that nought but Jesus Christ could satisfy the heart, and that in these days of speculation Christ must be our one object. Rev. J. J. LUCE, speaking from Song of Solomon vi. 1, 2, took up the word garden, and showed that it is (1), a purchased garden—bought with Christ's precious blood; (2), a protected garden—"I, the Lord, do keep it;" (3), a private garden—"enclosed;" (4), a garden possessed—the Lord comes into the garden.

In the afternoon we assembled for a Bible reading. Taking up the word "Life," in the Gospel by John, we gathered: Chap. i., life manifested; chap. ii., life in the social circle; chap. iii., life obtained; chap. iv., life imparted; chap. v., life possessed; chap. vi., life sustained; chap. vii., life flowing out; chap. viii., life of freedom; chapter ix., life of testimony; chap. x., life overflowing; chap. xi., resurrection life; chap. xii., life at home; chap. xiii., self-denying life.

In the evening we had a wondrously precious time, when the Lord spoke to us again, by the lips of his servants, Lord Radstock, Messrs. J. McCarthy, and J. H. Topping.

On Friday morning "the shout of a King was in our midst." Rev. C. E. UNWIN spoke powerfully of "Jesus Christ, the same for ever," in all his aspects. Then Mr. J. MANNERS filled our hearts with joy and gladness with the precious pearls of truth which the Lord gave him for us. In the afternoon Rev. J. J. LUCE conducted a Bible reading; subject, "Walking with God." After this Mr. McCARTHY spoke of the work in China, and of the poor women in that land. The hearts of all were touched with the deplorable condition of these sisters and their need of the Gospel. We believe that some of our English sisters were so moved that the outcome of that meeting will be, we trust, that one, if not more, will go forth as God's messengers to that needy people.

The evening was devoted to Evangelistic addresses to the unsaved, and afterwards there was a short praise meeting. Many were the expressions of deep thankfulness to God for blessing received. Throughout our meeting the Lord's presence has been wondrously felt and enjoyed. May we all now give out and live out that which we have received of the Lord, and thus may his name be fully glorified in us!

AN EAST-END CALL FOR HELP.

AT the bottom of Gibraltar-walk, Bethnal-green-road, is a good substantial chapel. For years it has been closed, and the good man who formerly preached in it is dead. His widow is anxious to have the place opened for Gospel work, and has let it on lease to a friend of mine, so that I may work it as a Mission station, Sunday-school, &c. The place will seat about 500 persons. There are two good large rooms at the back, for Sunday-school and all manner of meetings. But the whole place is in a very sad state of dirt and dilapidation. The repairs and cleansing would cost about £200. Towards this I have received from three gentlemen £100. The donors live on the spot, and know the whole circumstances of the case. They do not belong to my congregation, but they will be on the committee and help me to work the Mission. The workers and preachers will mainly go from our Christian Mission, and I shall preach there regularly once a month.

The chapel stands right in the midst of a mass of the poor and lapsed multitudes of Bethnal-green. The place is easy of access, as the Old Ford omnibus from the Bank passes the chapel. I should be most happy to show anyone over the district, that they may see what accommodation there is for the people, and how urgently needed a Mission of this sort is in such a place.

We have now six Mission halls and schools, worked and supported by our church and congregation. Just now we are building a room at the back of the tabernacle to seat 500 persons, so our hands are full. I am quite willing to do my best to work this extra Mission, if Christians will kindly help to put the place in a fit condition for services. We have the ear and the confidence of the people, and I feel sure the place will at once fill, and that a good work will be done. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN pray for a blessing on this effort? If they feel led to send the Editor any help, it will gladden the heart of Yours in the love of Jesus, Shoreditch Tabernacle, Hackney-road, E. W. CUFF.

EXETER HALL.—The Council of the Young Men's Christian Association have issued the programme of their Educational Session, 1883-4. In addition to a course of Lectures on "Christian Evidences," by Rev. C. Lloyd Engström, and the popular lectures on a variety of subjects, to be delivered by Revs. C. Spurgeon, Burman Cassin, De Kewer Williams, G. W. McCree, Denison Allport, Esq., John MacGregor, Esq. (Rob Roy), and others, there will be several Class Lectures, those on "Animal Physiology" and "Hygiene" by Dr. Newsholme, and on "First Aid to the Injured," by Dr. Cantlie. There will also be London Matriculation Classes, conducted by Dr. Hellen and Mr. Anderson, and Civil Service Classes by Mr. White. The usual classes for French, German, Spanish, Shorthand, Singing, &c., will be held. A compendium of the lectures and classes may be obtained by applying to the Secretary. Many of our readers might send stamps for a packet, and circulate them among young men.

HOP-PICKERS AT ALTON.—A most interesting work is being carried on among the thousands of poor people who have come from all parts of the country to the neighbourhood of Alton for the hop-picking season. Within a radius of about eight or ten miles there are five large tents erected, where every evening good hot tea is served out freely and bountifully to all comers, as many as 300 or 400 coming to one tent alone between the hours of five and seven. Short Gospel addresses, interspersed with appropriate hymns, are given at each of the tents every evening. The people listen most attentively, and at one tent near the village of Binstead, the Gospel has proved to be the power of God unto salvation to some who came here a week or so ago about as low down as they could get. God has begun to work, and we are expecting great blessing. The importance of this Mission also can be clearly seen in the vast improvement in the behaviour of the people. Five or six years ago scenes of drunkenness, quarrelling, and fighting were of constant occurrence, now they are comparatively rare. Any who feel led to labour in this direction will find a large field of usefulness. R. BASTIN.

PERTH CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

[FROM A CORRESPONDENT.]

THIS important gathering took place on September 11 to 13, the subject being "The Holy Spirit and his work." A retrospective glance of the twenty-one years the Conference has been held recalls many loved faces that were wont to greet us at our annual reunions. One after another has been removed from the sphere of service here, to enjoy the tranquil calm and joy of the Saviour's immediate presence. But the promise remaineth still: He, the Spirit of truth, will guide you into all truth. He shall abide with you, "the earnest of the inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession." His presence and power have been blessedly enjoyed, as we sat from day to day discoursing on his gracious work in the Church, and by the Church, the witness to the world that Jesus is the Christ of God.

On account of both the large public halls in Perth being closed during September, because of extensive alterations going on, it was necessary to hold the meetings in two of the city churches. On that account it was feared that the attendance might not come up to former years. These fears, however, were happily disappointed; the number of strangers from a distance was as encouraging as ever, and the warmth of the meetings glowed with all the fervency of recent years. Lord POLWARTH presided at the forenoon meetings all the three days, and by his quiet, solemn, devout spirit, frequently having recourse to prayer, both silent and public, sustained the element of devotional feeling, and led the meeting into the green pastures of the Word while sitting down under Jesus' shadow, and finding the fruit of the Spirit sweet unto our taste. On the first day of the Conference, the branch of the subject taken up was, "The work of the Spirit upon the disciples of Christ, individually and collectively." After a short address by the Chairman, in which he pointed out the peculiar feature which marked this year—the Conference having in respect of age reached its majority—how much stronger, therefore, we should be for service, and influenced by the responsibility of the possession of a power which should lead to an unreserved devotedness, as instruments of blessing to the world.

Rev. HUBERT BROOKE, of Liverpool, then led us through many passages in the Acts of the Apostles and the Epistle to the Romans, showing that the power for witness-bearing was in knowing that our Redeemer liveth. By his resurrection we are justified, and can bear witness to that fact, that redemption is perfected, and that in union with this living Christ we have dominion over sin and a spiritual power for service, as well as an abiding experience of communion with the living Lord Jesus.

The next speaker, Rev. EVANS HOPKINS, dwelt on "being full of the Holy Ghost," in order that our influence might carry blessing to others.

At the afternoon meeting, presided over by Mr. Hopkins, the subject of free conversation was "Revival Work: means of promoting, and how to guide Spiritual movements." The subject was introduced in an instructive address by the Chairman, and he was followed by Rev. Dr. A. A. Bonar, Dr. Baxter, of Blairgowrie, Mr. James Balfour, W.S., Mr. Ferguson, Mr. M'Laren, Mr. Robertson, of Carrubbers-close Mission, and Rev. Mr. Gibson, each speaker casting a ray of fresh light on the subject. The meeting was followed by one for prayer on behalf of our children, presided over by Mr. Balfour, Edinburgh.

In the evening, when Mr. MALCOLM, of Burnfoot, presided, a crowded attendance was addressed by Dr. Macrae, of Paris, on the Belleville Medical Mission of Miss De Broen, and by Mr. Geo. Müller, in a most interesting address on the value and fruitfulness of persevering prayer. The meeting was closed by a very solemn and awakening address from Mr. Jas. Balfour to the unsaved, and at a second meeting a number of professedly anxious souls remained to be spoken with.

WEDNESDAY.

The subject, "Work of the Spirit through the Church upon the world." Lord Polwarth again presided, opening the meeting with a few weighty words concerning the Church's responsibility for bearing the water of life to a perishing world. Mr. Ferguson, of Kinmundy, spoke briefly, and applied impressively the teaching of our Lord as to the office of the Spirit in the 8th to the 11th verses of the 16th of St. John. He was followed by the Rev. Dr. A. A. BONAR, who, in an address of remarkable fervency and great spiritual power, supplemented the introductory thoughts of the previous speaker. He gave a full exposition of the Holy Spirit in convincing of "sin, righteousness, and judgment;" leaving the world without excuse in still abiding under the guilt of sin, and refusing that righteousness, witnessed to in the fact of the Lord Jesus having gone into the presence of the Father, and the judgment thereby passed on the prince of this world. All the pleasures of the world which men are coveting and grasping are the gifts that Satan bestows, and wherewith he blinds the soul to the great realities of the kingdom, over which Christ shall reign with those who are his joint heirs and possessors.

The afternoon subject of free conversation was "Worldliness—Snares and Safeguards." Mr. F. Brown DOUGLAS presided, and introduced the subject by several appropriate remarks, viz., that believers are not their own, and are to cease from self, and to know entire subjection to the will of the Lord. Four beautiful scriptures were given, each a prayer, which might be used by the believer in the opening of the day, and through its course. Mr. Balfour, Rev. Mr. Gibson, Mr. Charles Cook, London, and others, spoke on the dangers of the dancing saloon, the theatre, and other seductive pleasures. Afterwards the meeting was constituted into one for information as to Christian work on the Continent, and was addressed by Rev. Mr. Greig, of Paris, on the work of the McAll Mission in France, and by Mr. Charles Cook, of Hyde Park Hall, on the state of the prisons and prisoners in France. The Chairman closed in a few remarks on the usefulness of the stations in different parts of the Continent, to meet our English-speaking countrymen.

At the evening hour, Mr. Ferguson, of Kinmundy, presided; Rev. R. W. Barbour gave an address on Luther, and a rapid and interesting sketch of his life and work, in connection with the 400th anniversary of his birth, exciting at present so much interest in Germany. Rev. W. Haslam gave next a very full and deeply-interesting address on "Christ, the power of God unto salvation," bringing out the three distinct Baptisms of the Holy Ghost—"with you," "in you," and "upon you"—and the need-be for the believer passing upward from conviction, conversion, into consecration, and becoming thus entirely an instrument fitted for God to use.

THURSDAY.

The work of the Spirit, in the fuller enlightenment and sanctifying of believers, was the subject of to-day. Lord Polwarth again was in the chair, and gave a few suitable thoughts, remarking that, being the last day of the feast, we should go away filled. He reminded us of what Miss Havergal said, that we are like narrow-necked vessels under a very Niagara of grace; enlarge the neck of the vessel, that we may be filled to the utmost capacity. Rev. Professor LAIDLAW, of Edinburgh Free Church College, was the next speaker. In an address of a most exhaustive nature, starting from the remarks in last night's address of Mr. Haslam, as to the three baptisms, he showed how the first work of the Spirit was a hidden, secret work in the soul, and that we should let the Spirit alone in dealing with the soul. Then comes his open work, in which there is the impress of the seal in the soul, confirming, establishing, settling, expressed in one word, "Consecration," or the whole being given to Christ. This, again, was fully and impressively illustrated by the texts, Ephes. i. 13, "Sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise," and 2 Tim. ii. 19, "Having this seal," &c., setting forth the divine part in the believer's salvation in the eternal purpose, and the human in the manifested life before the world, "depart from all iniquity."

Mr. MULLER followed in a few remarks on the Spirit, affording light on any passage of the Word where a difficulty is experienced, and bringing to remembrance years afterwards the Word spoken to the soul, a comfort to those who labour for the Lord. Lord POLWARTH gave the parting text, Rev. xxii. 17, "The Spirit and the birds say, Come."

In the afternoon, the Communion of the Lord's Supper was held in the North U. P. Church. Rev. John Duncan presided, and was assisted by Rev. Dr. Laidlaw, who gave the closing address. Many sat down at this part of holy fellowship, and shared in the blessing.

In the evening, Mr. Stuart Gray, of Kinfauns, presided. The first speaker was Mr. George Muller, and he was followed by Mr. Hudson Taylor, who described the wants of China for Missionary agency; Rev. Mr. Train, of Buckhaven, gave the last, an impressive evangelistic address, and thus was closed another happy and instructive Perth Conference.

Each morning at 9.30 there was a meeting for prayer, and to hear accounts of work in different parts of the Kingdom. Mr. J. Mudie, of Montrose, gave interesting accounts of revival work seen by himself; the village work in Aberdeenshire was well spoken of by the brethren from those parts, whilst Mr. Spurr and Mr. Charles Cook were able to cheer the hearts of the Scotch friends by telling of what God was doing in London. Special interest was manifest in the work of open-air preaching, as seen at many of our English race-courses, and as the blessing seen in the Hyde Park services was mentioned, many hearts were made glad.

TWO ST. LEGER DAYS.

A FORTNIGHT'S meetings have been held by Mr. Edwin H. Kerwin, of the Tower Hamlets Mission, in Mr. Telford's tent, Stockton-on-Tees. The meetings have been well attended, and much blessing has resulted. Stockton is a great betting centre, and on St. Leger day handbills were distributed in the quarters frequented by these bookmakers, announcing that Mr. Kerwin would tell the story of two Doncaster St. Leger days, 1868 and 1880. This brought together a large number of those interested in the Great Northern Carnival. The stories consisted of his conversion to God in 1868, and his preaching on the Town Moor in 1880.

Many were greatly impressed, and one poor, wretched, degraded man in the after-meeting, completely broken down by the Holy Spirit influence, sobbed and prayed to God, saying, "O, God, I come to thee. I can't tell thee more about myself than thou knowest. I've been a wicked man, and have nothing to offer thee but my sins. O, God, take 'em, and give me Jesus." This man has since attended the meetings, and his happy face betokens a change of heart and life.

MR. T. E. MURPHY.—A great Gospel Temperance gathering was held at Ballyroney, Ireland, on the 10th inst., when Mr. T. E. Murphy delivered a long and thrilling address. "His impassioned oratory," says The Belfast Witness correspondent, "his pointed logic and apt illustrations, rivetted the attention of his large audience for an hour." About 150 pledges were secured.

OBITUARY.—We regret to have to record the death of Mr. W. R. Ellis, 197, Maida-vale, W. Mr. Ellis was a member of the Committees of the Religious Tract Society and the London City Mission. For upwards of twenty years he spent his Saturday evenings with the missionaries he superintended. Mr. and Mrs. Ellis were accustomed to hold four drawing-room meetings annually, so as to create and deepen an interest in the work of various Evangelical Societies. Much abiding spiritual blessing has been the result of these meetings.

A MAHOMMEDAN CONVERT.

ONE of our correspondents sends us the following interesting account of the conversion of a Mahommedan at Cairo, received by him a few days since from Dr. Lansing, who is labouring there:—

"We have had a most interesting day in the Sanctuary lately, on the occasion of the baptism of Mohammed Remzi. He is about twenty-five years of age, and of the 'honourable holy' family of El Khaidare. This family enjoys the revenues of one of the Cairo mosques. He graduated at a Government college here, where he was a fellow-student of our convert Mohammed Habeeb. After graduating, M. Remzi went to the medical school at old Cairo for four years, thence to France, to complete his course, and returned to Cairo last year. Convinced of the falsity of the faith of Islam, he in France put himself under instruction of the Catholic priests, and attended their church service. He saw in the Papal system things of which he could not approve, especially image worship, and so he was deterred from applying for baptism.

"When the case of his old schoolmate, M. Habeeb, occurred, it drew his attention to us; some of our more earnest native members gave him almost daily instruction, and the week before last he applied for baptism. He was so earnest in desiring to be baptized before the commencement of the Ramadan fast, that we called a special meeting of Session to consider his case. Not seeing in him the decided marks of heart piety which we had seen in M. Habeeb, the Session decided to put him off for 'better acquaintance,' telling him that he must bear his cross in the matter of conforming to rites in which he could not conscientiously unite. He left us, deeply grieved and cast down. We felt that, if he had not the root of the matter in him, it would be the last we should see of him.

"It, however, sent him home and to his knees. One of the women of the house observing him at his devotions, broke in upon him with 'What sort of prayers are these; upon your knees, and with your boots on?' He told her the way the Christians prayed, and she gave the alarm to the male members of the family. They threatened to take him to the Cadi (the head of religious matters). He told them he was prepared to go with them at once. On reaching the Mehkomeh (the Cadi's court) they wrote in his name, in the official book, a formal renunciation of Islam, and asked him to append his signature. He did so; when they asked him to append 'the Apostate,' he added this also. He was then told that he would be sent to the Prefecture of Police for three days; and if, at the end of that time, he did not recant, the sentence of the law would be executed. They asked him if he knew what that was. He said, 'You mean my annihilation.' They answered 'Yes.'

"On going out of the Mehkomeh, a number of the rougher sort gathered around him, and showed a disposition to treat him roughly. He said he was a believer, and not a Kafir (infidel). This being reported to the Cadi, he had him brought back, and asked him if he was a believer, to which he answered, 'Yes, in the Lord Jesus Christ.'

"During the three days allowed him for recantation, he was kindly treated, but every effort was made by the Chief of Police (Osman Pasha) and others to induce him to recant. Finally, the Chief of Police told him that he might have the freedom of the house, going upstairs or down as he might choose. Finding, after a while, that the great gateway was left open, and none of the soldiers on duty had been commanded to detain him, he concluded that it was intended that he should have the freedom of the door also, and so he walked out, and came to the Mission House, where he has been ever since. Then another meeting of Session was held, and as his examination was all that could be desired, it was determined to baptize him. An impression was abroad that he was to be baptized, and the audience was very large. The eagerness with which, at the close of each service, not only our brethren but strangers crowded around him to give him the right hand of fellowship, and congratulate him, was very pleasing to behold. The sermon was on God's covenant with Abraham (Rom. iv. 11, 12). He was baptized by the name of Ibrahim Remzi.

"This case, if allowed by the authorities to stand thus, is one the importance of which cannot be over-estimated."

OUR COASTGUARDSMEN.

MAY I be permitted, as an old "salt-water worker," to say a few words about our fishermen and coastguardsmen? The Fisheries Exhibition has done much in bringing the brave fellows before thousands who only think of them when some terrible disaster to the fishing fleet fills a column of the newspapers. The attractive stall of the Thames Church Mission at South Kensington has done its work, and has led hundreds to think of and help forward the Gospel and Temperance cause among these men.

The Monthly "Blue Backs," which I have been permitted to write for many years have been eagerly asked for by fishermen, and although my funds were low I felt that I was called to do my uttermost. I have therefore commenced, by the kind co-operation of the Thames Church Mission, bringing out monthly a special "Blue Back" for fishermen, and sending 1000 copies a month to the 1600 fishing boats of the North Sea fleet, This is but a small beginning of what I hope will be a great work; and if friends interested in our fishermen will intrust me with the needful funds I will gladly send to other fleets; about £50 a year would enable me to send out many thousands of these little blue messengers to our fishermen, who value them as much as the blue-jackets do.

Then as to our noble coastguardsmen. Regan, the hero of Perranporth, who risked his life over the cliffs, is an old personal friend of mine, and an illustration of the self-sacrifice that is bound up in the hearts of these men. I want two things: 1st, To hear of Christian friends who will volunteer to visit the cottages at the stations in connection with my work, and 2nd, the sum of about £20 to enable me to send the Brigade News monthly to each station.

The Duke of Edinburgh spoke truly when on reviewing them he said "they were the flower of the Navy." I am sure the readers of THE CHRISTIAN will bear with me in my plea for my coastguard and fishermen friends.

REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES.—Arrangements are in progress for Evangelistic Missions in several large towns, to be conducted by Rev. H. P. Hughes. He is expected to attend the next Christian Convention in Dublin, and afterwards to conduct a week's revival Mission in the Abbey-street Methodist Church.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY'S VISIT TO LONDON.—The Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association have arranged that during the month of October the Noon Prayer-meeting held in Exeter Hall shall have special reference to the visit of these brethren. Feeling sure that every one will recognise the need of special prayer at this particular time, the co-operation of Christian friends is cordially invited—(1) By making these meetings known; (2) by personally attending; (3) by bringing others. The meetings are from one to two o'clock each day, except Saturday.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.—There was an excellent attendance at the meeting convened in the Mildmay Conference Hall for the purpose of commending in prayer to God Mr. Henry Soltau, returning, with his wife, to Bhamo, on the borders of Burmah and China, as a medical missionary. Mr. Hudson Taylor presided. Mr. Soltau gave an interesting account of the work in Bhamo, contrasting the state of things at present with that when the Mission was established in 1875. Mr. Pearce told why he was so glad to go back to his work in China, and each of the lady missionaries stood up to wish good-bye, and to ask the prayers of the audience. Will our readers remember in prayer Mr. and Mrs. Soltau going to the pestilential country of Bhamo, and Mr. Pearce with these brave women proceeding into the interior of China.

A PRAYER.

O SAVIOUR, wilt Thou me prepare,
For all Thou hast prepared for me,
That in life's joys, and grief or care,
My trustful praise may rise to Thee.

Prepare me now with grace and strength,
To meet the dark temptation hour,
For prayer and watchfulness at length
Will triumph o'er its hurtful power.

Saviour, if Thou shouldst honour me
To bring lost wanderers to thy feet,
Prepare me now to meet with Thee
Around thy glorious mercy-seat.

And through each day Thou giv'st to me
Prepare me for the Home above;
Oh, may I consecrated be
To Thee my King for thy great love.

REVIVALS IN RUSSIA.

A LITTLE disturbance in an obscure Russian village a few weeks ago incidentally brings to notice a deep religious movement, running back at least to the mandates of the last Czar tolerating the sale of New Testaments in the Russian language. It appears that not long since a landowner was called to a neighbouring village to quell a riot. Carts full of "stundisden," or prayer-meeting people, had been attacked by the peasants, but the converts not making any resistance, the rioting was all on one side, while the sufferers occupied themselves with singing psalms. So impressed were the more sober portion of the peasantry with this practical application of religion that they fell upon their knees before the strangers and regarded them as saints. In a few days the whole village became converted to the new faith. The reading of the sermon on the mount and other portions of the New Testament is a complete revelation to the masses, and during the last few years a movement, which bids fair to equal the Methodist revival of Wesley's time, has been spreading. While this revolution is strong among the common people in the south-eastern part of the empire, a similar revival among the aristocracy is reported in the north, at St. Petersburg. A colonel in the guards, a man of birth, has even left the army and opened his palace to the higher classes, where prayer-meetings are regularly held in French. The poor also have the New Testament expounded to them on certain days in their native tongue at his palace. —Evangelical Churchman.

MELBOURNE.—A writer in The Southern Cross advocates the establishing of a Temperance hospital in Melbourne, similar to the hospital in London.

SOUTH LONDON.—A new branch of the Y.W.C.A. has been formed for South London; the opening meeting was held on the 10th inst., at the Institute, New Kent-road.

"THE LORD THINKETH UPON ME."—The verses with this heading that appeared in our last issue, by M. S. Macritchie (now Mrs. W. P. Haycraft), will be found in a volume of her poems entitled "Songs of Peace," about to be published by Messrs. Nisbet & Co.

MR. W. FORBES IN CANADA.—Many of your readers who have been praying for me, will be glad to know that, after a rather uncomfortable voyage, I arrived here on August 31. During the voyage I conducted four Evangelistic services and two Gospel Temperance meetings, at the latter about seventy steerage passengers and crew signed the pledge and put on the blue ribbon. I regret to say that the food and accommodation for steerage passengers on board the Ocean King were rather defective. Since arriving in this city I have been giving addresses in the fine hall of the Y.M.C.A.

Montreal, Sept. 3. W. FORBES.

MISSIONARY WORK IN MINNESOTA.—I am thankful that several readers of THE CHRISTIAN have sent me Gospel tracts for distribution in my great missionary field. The people receive them most gladly, and I am sure some good must result from all this seed-sowing. I am now getting up a free library for the young people in this valley. It will be kept in the Baptist Meeting-house, and all the people will have free access to it. I believe it will be a great blessing to the community. If any of your readers can spare a few volumes, and will send them by mail, post-paid, I shall be glad to receive them. GEORGE RODGERS.

Notices of Books, &c.

BIOGRAPHICAL TRACTS.—It is intended to comprise in this new series sketches of great outstanding personages in Christian history, to tell, in a manner adapted for wide circulation, the story of their lives and works, what they did and taught, and to show the extent of their influence in the Church and the world. The first number is entitled, "MARTIN LUTHER, the Reformer of Germany." Religious Tract Society, 1d. We heartily commend the series to the Christian public. They ought to be read with interest and profit.

THE JERUSALEM BISHOPRIC. Trübner & Co. A collection of documents, with translations, published by command of His Majesty, Frederick William IV., King of Prussia, and relating to the establishment of an Anglican Bishopric in Jerusalem. The volume is ably edited by the Rev. Professor William H. Heckler, British Chaplain at Stockholm, and contains much useful information concerning Missions to the Jewish capital, and on Jewish topics generally. It abounds with illustrations, and to those who take an interest in such matters will prove a most acceptable book.

WORSHIP AND RITUAL. By the Rev. E. A. LITTON, M.A., Rector of Naunton, 1s. Shaw & Co. We have in this work a specially important contribution to a specially important subject; its issue just now is timely and a cause for rejoicing. It is a strong and conclusive argument founded on Scripture basis against sacerdotalism and ritualism of all kinds. The author's treatment of the theory of Christian worship as viewed in the light of history and the Bible is clear and concise, while his inquiry into its true principles is honouring alike to the headship of Christ and the spirituality of the dispensation in which we live. We warmly commend the book, and wish it wide circulation; it cannot fail to do good service in the cause of Evangelical truth. Its price places it within general reach.

YOUR INNINGS By Rev. GEORGE EVERARD, M.A., Nisbet & Co. Books for schoolboys are by no means too common: indeed, sound, healthy books, really adapted to the boy stage of thought and action are rare rather than otherwise. In this new publication of Mr. Everard's we have one well suited to supply the want. The Archbishop of York writes a brief commendatory preface, in which he justly speaks of its power to quicken and increase aspirations towards good in the youthful breast. The book is divided into twelve chapters, and these, again, into attractive and well-defined paragraphs, giving to the volume a bright and attractive aspect. The subjects are varied, and include wholesome advice on habits, companions, and a host of other points of first importance to youthful life. The only fault we should be disposed to find with it is its sectarian bias, which militates unnecessarily against its free employment among all class It is an Episcopalian's book for boys, all may read it with profit, nevertheless.

LIFE: IS IT WORTH LIVING? By REV. DR. MARSHALL LANG. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. The question which forms the theme of this new volume of the "Theological Library," might be answered either briefly by the Christian believer or by the physiologist, in a way that would not be flattering to the modern pessimist. There was need, however, of a complete rejoinder, and this has been conclusively supplied by Dr. Marshall Lang, the successor of Norman Macleod as minister of the Barony parish, Glasgow. The present work is powerful, learned, and thoroughly sound and good. As an argument to meet the philosophy which is bewildering this age it is most valuable and timely. No greater service could be done to thoughtful young men who have been unsettled by such works as those of Mr. Mallock than to place this book in their hands. But the question of the worth of life has a history much further back than our own times, and the deep inward want of men, estranged from the life of God, has had a solemn significance among millions of the human race. All this, and much more, is taught in the fourteen chapters of Dr. Marshall Lang's treatise. The modern theories which attempt to exhibit the meaning of life, and the modern standards for measuring it, are ably and concisely dealt with; and these reflections lead up to the closing chapters on the import of life as set forth in the Christian scriptures. With unqualified praise we would speak of these chapters. They are fresh, forceful, and full of truth, and are eminently fitted to meet the restless thought of our times. Would that such expositions as the one on "Eternal Life" were multiplied a hundred-fold.

HIGHBURY.—The Temperance workers in this neighbourhood purpose holding a ten days' Mission, towards the end of September. Many prominent advocates will speak; as they are desirous of making the Mission effective in the best of senses, Mr. T. H. Humphrey, 92, Riversdale-road, Highbury-vale, will welcome the aid of those who can in any way further the work.

CALCUTTA EXHIBITION.—Mrs. May would be glad of suitable Gospel Books, for distribution at the coming International Exhibition. Many educated natives will visit the same, and she desires to take advantage of so golden an opportunity for service. Parcels of books and illustrated papers may be sent to Mrs. Rouse, care of Mr. A. H. Baynes, 19, Castle-street, Holborn, London.

THE SALVATION ARMY.—A large and enthusiastic meeting in connection with the Salvation Army took place at Exeter Hall, on Tuesday 11th inst. Rev. W. Booth made a statement of the distribution of the Army in the different parts of the world. In reference to the arrest of Miss Booth and Miss Charlesworth in Switzerland, he said the only information he could get from the Foreign Office was that the "law officers were looking up the case." He said it was intended to build halls for the Army in different parts of the Metropolis at an aggregate cost of £40,000. While the Army was never more prosperous, they were never in greater financial straits. He still hoped there would be some way out of the difficulty connected with the licensed part of the "Eagle"; at the worst they would only have to sell the tavern. Mr. Booth stated in the course of the evening that he had received an invitation to visit India, and had promised to go.

THE BOYS' HOME, SOUTHWARK.

LITTLE WANDERERS' HOME, GREENWICH.

BOYS' ORPHAN HOME, RAMSGATE.

DEAR FRIENDS,

Through mercy I am back again at my post, and able partially to resume my usual duties.

I am very anxious to express my heartfelt thanks to all those who have shown so much kind sympathy toward me personally, and who have helped to support the work during my absence.

I find everything has been going on satisfactorily: the Homes are quite full; the behaviour of the lads has been very good; and I have many cheering letters from "old boys" who are getting on well in the world. Thus there is much cause for praise to our Heavenly Father.

The pecuniary support of the work is my chief anxiety. Many friends have contributed, so as to lighten this burden as much as possible, while I have been away; but we now need £400 to meet pressing liabilities, and to sustain our various agencies. As I am not yet fully restored to health, but am very anxious to personally supervise the work here, it would be a great relief to me to be quite free from monetary anxieties under present circumstances. Asking your continued remembrance,

I remain, dear Friends,

Yours faithfully,

The Boys' Home,

THIS Society has been formed for the purpose of establishing a Christian Settlement in South Africa, the intention being to continue, and, as far as it is possible (with God's help) complete, the noble work begun by those Institutions which shelter the children and orphans in this country by emigrating them to a land where, under the supervision secured by the family system (besides obtaining places for these children in Christian families residing in South Africa), it is hoped they will continue to develop in moral character, and earn for themselves the advantages of an honest livelihood.

The Government of Natal has given a tract of land in Alexandra County, on Umzimkulu River, opposite Port Shepstone, of about 3,400 acres, on most favourable terms, and will grant free passages for our settlers and children. The climate of Natal is one of the healthiest in the world.

We require for our work just now about £1 000 for our settlement or depot. We have selected a party of five Christian men (without salary) and their families to go out and prepare the place for receiving our first party of boys. Everything is ready, but we have not yet received all the funds required. We believe the Lord's work must be done without running into debt.

It will take £360 to build our houses at the Settlement. Are there six to be found willing to come forward to build these houses? We do look forward to that time when Missionaries shall go forth from this Settlement into the "Dark Continent" to tell of Jesus' love.

It is urgent that we should have the sum required in hand within this month, so as to be in a position to take out the boys offered us by Dr. Barnardo, Mr. Fegan, Miss Macpherson and others in December or January, a time when much distress prevails.

Donations and Subscriptions (for even the smallest sums) will be thankfully received by any of the Society's Bankers, or at the office of THE CHRISTIAN. All Cheques and Postal Orders should be crossed.

SCRIPTURE TEXTS.

Published by MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings; and may be had of any Bookseller.

From the late AGNES ELIZABETH JONES, Lady Superintendent of Nurses at the Liverpool Workhouse.

"The Lady Superintendent of Nurses begs to acknowledge the receipt of the parcels of Texts as ordered. She more and more feels their value. The patients lying in their beds can read the words—the print is so distinct.

"As she is going to undertake the charge of several hundred more patients, she wishes to give other Wards the advantage of these Texts on the wall."

In very large type, printed in blue ink, size 31 in. by 20 in., 70 different Texts, 3d. each.
Mounted on canvas, varnished, and with eyelet holes, 9d. each.
Mounted on rollers and varnished, 1s. 6d. each.

LIST OF THE TEXTS

1. "Choose you this day whom ye will serve."
2. "The wages of sin is death."
2.* "The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."
3. "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out."
4. "Repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance."
5. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die."
6. "In whom we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins."
7. "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God."
8. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."
9. "The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon Him; to all that call upon Him in truth."
10. "Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world."
11. "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost."
12. "The Lord is good to all; and His tender mercies are over all His works."
13. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge; but fools despise wisdom and instruction."
14. "Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered."
15. "When we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly."
16. "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus."
17. "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."
18. "Now in Christ Jesus ye, who sometime were far off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ."
19. "Seek ye the Lord while He may be found; call ye upon Him while He is near."
20. "Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the Just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God."
21. "Herein is love: not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins."
22. "God commendeth His love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us."
23. "As by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so, by the obedience of One, shall many be made righteous."
24. "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing."
26. "The just shall live by faith."
31. "As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God."
32. "The blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin."
33. "Through this Man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins."
34. "Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by Thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation."
35. "God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through Him might be saved."
36. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life."
37. "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."
38. "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."
39. "God so loved the world, that He gave His only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."
40. "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by Me."
42. "Let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus."
43. "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."
44. "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."
45. "Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not."
46. "He shall gather the lambs with His arm, and carry them in His bosom."
47. "Children, obey your parents in all things: for this is well-pleasing unto the Lord."
48. "I love them that love Me; and those that seek Me early shall find Me."
51. "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth."
52. "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him."
53. "Casting all your care upon Him; for He careth for you."
54. "The Eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms."
55. "He hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."
56. "I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content."
57. "As thy days so shall thy strength be."
58. "In all their afflictions He was afflicted."
59. "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth."
60. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."
61. "Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God."
62. "He is despised and rejected of men; a Man of Sorrows and acquainted with grief."
63. "He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities."
64. "The chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with His stripes we are healed."
65. "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way."
66. "The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquities of us all."
67. "Look unto Me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth."
68. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters."
69. "If any man thirst, let him come unto Me, and drink."
70. "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shall believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved."
71. "It is the blood that maketh atonement for the soul."

The eight following are in Extra Large Type.

25. "Jesus only."
27. "Now."
28. "God is love."
29. "Behold, He cometh."
30. "Have faith in God."
41. "Prepare to meet thy God."
49. "Thou God seest me."
50. "Be ye kind one to another."

MARY LYON.

RECOLLECTIONS OF A NOBLE WOMAN

BY

FIDELIA FISKE.

"Miss Lyon established, and for many years superintended, the Mount Holyoke Seminary, from whence a large number of devoted and earnest women have gone forth to do good service in the Master's cause. The author of the 'Recollections' was herself a pupil of Miss Lyon; and, after labouring with much success in Persia, returned to South Hadley to succeed her former instructress."—Sunday School Teacher.

SEVENTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN"
WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK
CASE OF CONSUMPTION at SLEAFORD.

Miss AMBLER, of RUSHINGTON, SLEAFORD, consulted me first in July of last year.

Memoranda of case:—The patient's mother and three brothers had died of this terrible disease. Illness commenced about twenty months before with severe pains under the shoulders, oppressed breathing, troublesome cough, and heavy grey purulent phlegm. These symptoms had continued, more or less, until the time she wrote, when the case assumed a very serious aspect. There were burning heats, palpitations, hectic fever, and loss of flesh was taking place in all parts of the body.

I need not say I did my best to advise her in this and various other letters, dealing in the meantime with certain contingent symptoms, such as nervous prostration, sickness, and rheumatic pains, the correspondence extending up to the end of April of this year, when she was able to leave off medicine.

In a recent letter, dated August 3, she says:—"I am very happy to tell you the great good I have derived from you. Since I discontinued the medicine I have had no cough or pain, or other symptoms. I feel certain that I owe my life to your Balsam. I thank you for all your kindness as to charges. I recommend your treatment whenever I have opportunity."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

SUPERIOR EDITION, Cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"Mr. Bliss poured forth a glorious tide of artless song. He 'sang praises to God.' He sang before countless thousands the message of Divine love. He fashioned the ringing chorus and the lifting melody which touched the hearts of millions, and consecrated patriotic enthusiasm, military pride, domestic sensibility, and common instincts, to the service of the Christ whom he passionately loved."

WORKS PUBLISHED BY MORGAN & SCOTT,

12, PATERNOSTER-BUILDINGS, LONDON, E.C.;

AND MAY BE ORDERED OF ANY BOOKSELLER.

CHOICE SAYINGS.

Being Notes of Exposition of the Scriptures.

Revised by ROBERT C. CHAPMAN.

NEW EDITION.

Tinted Covers, 9d.; Cloth Limp, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.; Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s.; Morocco, Gilt Edges, 3s.

Rev. C. H. SPURGEON in the Sword and Trowel for September, 1883, says:—"Here we have gold dust, 'and the gold of that land is good.' We hardly know a man more noteworthy for abounding grace and deep piety than ROBERT C. CHAPMAN. His name has never been sounded abroad, but those who know him value him beyond expression. Some of these brief 'Sayings' contain whole sermons. Personally, we expect to gather many discourses while studying this little book. A dew from heaven rests upon Mr. CHAPMAN'S expositions."

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE

To the OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS.

Strongly Bound in Cloth Boards, PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

Presentation Edition, handsomely bound in Cloth, price 7s. 6d.

THE POPULAR EDITION

Of CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE (Published by MORGAN & SCOTT) contains a carefully revised and much extended List of the PROPER NAMES of the OLD and NEW TESTAMENTS with their Meanings in the Original Languages, by Rev. ALFRED JONES, M.A., Author of "The Proper Names of the Old Testament Scriptures Expounded and Illustrated.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—The Publishers will supply twelve copies of the "POPULAR EDITION" of "CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE" to any Sabbath School Superintendent on receipt of Post Office Order or Cheque for 50s. Thus the Teachers of his School may be supplied with this useful handbook at a reduced rate.

☞ "CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE" may also be had in Twenty-Four Weekly Numbers, price 3d. each (post-free, 3½d.)

THE NUMBER "SEVEN" IN SCRIPTURE.

Compiled by S. A. BLACKWOOD, Esq., C.B.

Paper Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.; Presentation Edition, Cloth Boards, Bevelled, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

"Many other attempts have been made in tabulating the circumstances connected with the word "seven" in the Bible, but we cannot think of any one which is so complete, so concise, and so systematic as in the small volume compiled by Mr. Blackwood. From Genesis i. to Rev. xxii. all the many times the word occurs are duly noted, and each book is dealt with seriatim, so that reference is easy. One object of the book is "to stimulate search and to arouse inquiry," and with this book by the side of the Bible one course of study can be made very profitable indeed."—The Rock.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

CALLS TO CHRIST.

A Series of Addresses by Rev. R. W. NICOLL, M.A.

"It is admirably fitted as a gift-book to older scholars; but to Sabbath-school teachers also we would heartily recommend it."—Children's Record.

"Force and freshness are eminently the characteristics of these 'Calls to Christ;' they are also brief to a proverb, and hence they may be of great service to an earnest evangelist who knows how to use another man's thoughts."
Kelso Courier.

"A choice book. Sweet-scented throughout with the name of Christ, it sets forth the 'old, old story' in eleven simple but explicit lines of Gospel teaching. Though on a familiar theme, it has an unobtrusive originality, and many touches of beautiful thought, which remove it far from commonplace."
Children's Record.

A Cheap Edition, price 6d. In cloth (with Portrait), 1s.

The Life of GEORGE WHITEFIELD.

By J. R. ANDREWS,

Author of "The Life of Oliver Cromwell to the Death of Charles I."

Superior Edition in large type, for Presentation, cloth, bevelled boards (with Portrait), price 5s.

"Whitefield was not a framer of discipline, not a leader of a sect, not a founder of societies, not a ruler of men, but pre-eminently a winner of souls. Would that such preachers were multiplied in the present day! We thank Mr. Andrews for this seasonable addition to our religious biography. No young preacher or student should be without it. But it possesses an interest far beyond any special class, and deserves a wide and general circulation."
Methodist Recorder.

Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d. Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 2s. 6d.

THE CONVERSION OF CHILDREN.

By Rev. EDWARD PAYSON HAMMOND, M.A.

Author of "Familiar Talks with the Children," "The Better Life," "Tracts for the Children," &c., &c.

"We devoutly wish that by some means or other a copy could be placed in the hands of every Sunday-school superintendent and every pastor of a Church."
Pennel.

"A careful perusal of the testimony here given must convince every unprejudiced mind that in our days, as in the days of old, God perfects praise out of the mouths of babes and sucklings."—Woman's Work.

"We commend the book very heartily to the prayerful attention of all parents and teachers."—Freeman.

Institutions.

URGENT APPEAL to all interested in the work of the Gospel in Ireland. Our more favoured brethren in England are most earnestly asked to contribute a sum of THREE HUNDRED POUNDS to finish the building of a Parsonage in the remote and poor parish of Roundstone, Connemara, founded by the late Rev. Wm. Pennefather, and since in part sustained by the Irish Church Missions. The work was "boycotted" for a period of three months, but is now being rapidly pushed forward, and this sum is needed to meet the Incumbent's (Rev. J. McCormick) engagement with the contractors. —Donations will be received and acknowledged by Richard Nugent, Esq., Hon. Sec., Church of Ireland Sustentation Fund, 32, Charing-cross, S.W.

IRISH SOCIETY, for Promoting the Scriptural Education and Religious Instruction of the Irish-speaking Population, chiefly through the medium of their own Language. Established 1818. FUNDS ARE VERY URGENTLY NEEDED. Liabilities in connection with the Achill Mission; the Frances Ridley Havergal Memorial Institution, Limerick; and the enlargement of the Society's work generally, are heavy. Christian friends are earnestly requested to help by their prayers and contributions. Contributions will be received at the office of THE CHRISTIAN; or may be forwarded to the Secretaries, Rev. T. KEANE, 32, Sackville-street, London, W.; Rev. C. T. PORTER, LL.D., Kensington House, Southport; or to National Provincial Bank, Piccadilly Branch, London.

GEORGE YARD RAGGED SCHOOL, &c., Whitechapel, E.

MENTAL AND PHYSICAL MALADIES:
THEIR CAUSE AND CURE.

MANY persons are never well, although not actually invalids; health in its fulness is a stranger to them. They consider themselves, and are considered by others, incurable, because they have been so long in this state; and yet their only ailment is a deficiency of that energising element which it is so manifestly the office of Odo-Magnetic influence to impart, an abiding energy which medicine cannot give. Rarely can a tangible and measurable potential remedy minister to the necessities of a distressed mind or a debilitated constitution. Is it not to natural external influences that the physician consigns his patient when his skilful treatment has done its utmost without restoration? We say, then, why leave the most effective means out of the prescription at the commencement, allowing the spirit to hunger and pine to powerlessness, while seeking in vain to inspire a living energy from inert, but noxious and irritable compounds? For while medicinal treatment is being directed to the symptoms, it too often happens that the affection, or, more correctly speaking, its cause or causes, are allowed to assume a chronic type.

Our experience is being repeatedly enriched by additional proofs of the advantages of Odo-Magnetic methods of invigoration, in such cases as those detailed above, and with these facts of experience to support our method of treatment, we are not perplexed by the queries which would too often confound some practitioners if they attempted to give details of their practice. We are always willing to confer with any inquirer, and fearlessly invite the strictest criticism by interview or correspondence with ourselves or former patients. Modern therapeutics have taught us that instead of weakening an enfeebled constitution by artificial stimulants, there must be a radical invigoration of the system by natural means, if we would reach and affect the cause beneficially. By a force at once subtle, powerful, and continuous, Magnetism penetrates and permeates the innermost fibres and tissues of the system, imparting to the blood a rich and healthful quality, and to the nerves a vigorous tone, enabling the whole system to perform its functions with normal vigour, and the patient to engage in the activities of life with pleasurable alacrity.

Many affections are classed as incurable because the sphere of action claimed for medicines does not extend beyond the symptoms of disease, and the sufferers become reconciled to a recurrence of the attacks. It is the impetus given to the vital energies by Magnetic treatment which controls the cause of our ailments, and not only relieves, but removes many so-called incurable affections; and from this point of view it cannot be difficult to see how cure becomes possible by this means.

In proof of this, we ask the consideration of the following statement, which has reached us recently.

From MISS MOSELEY, 42, Foxley-road, North Brixton, S.W.

"I have now worn your appliances for some time, and am pleased to tell you that there has been a sense of comfort and warmth and perfect circulation such as I have not experienced for years. I had bronchitis eight years ago, which left me with a chronic cough and difficulty in breathing. Medical treatment produced no lasting benefit. My cough has now quite gone, the extreme nervousness under which I suffered—manifesting itself in the uncontrollable twitching of the eye—has been overcome, and the neuralgia which troubled me so much has also disappeared.

"I ought to have written you sooner, but I waited to give you an extended experience. Whenever opportunity offers I recommend your treatment as the best means of showing my grateful appreciation of the services rendered to myself, as well as to others whom I know."

Letters commendatory of Mr. GARRATT'S treatment by Magneto-Electricity have been received from hundreds of persons in all classes of society. A private list of 850 names as referees can be had on application. Consultation free, personally or by letter. B. COPSON GARRATT, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

THE NEW THEOLOGY.

A BOOK, which has lately been imported from the other side of the Atlantic, and published in a cheap and readable form, is just now exciting much attention in some religious circles. It is entitled "The Freedom of Faith," and aims at presenting a clear view of what modern thought upon Christian doctrine is leading men of trained intellect and devout reflection to regard as the true Gospel of God. From a literary point of view the book is stimulating and suggestive; it is with its theological positions only that we have to do in our references to it. That the Gospel of this book and the Gospel of the Evangelical Churches of all ages past are not the same the reader soon discovers. Indeed, the use of the term "The New Theology," as descriptive of the position taken by the writer and those who accord with his views, in itself asserts this fact.

It is a gain, however, to have the admission made, and the points of difference clearly laid down, by one of its most able advocates. The author first gives certain negative features indicating what the new theology is not, and then declares its more positive character. He says, "It does not propose to do without a theology." It claims to be a science, but inductive rather than deductive, "since it regards the revelations of God as under a process still enacting, and not as under a finality." Its model teachers are said to be Erskine, Campbell, McLeod, Maurice, Stanley, Robertson, the Hare Brothers, and Bushnell. "It does not part with the historic faith of the Church." "It finds in the early Greek theology conceptions more harmonious with itself than those in the theology shaped by Augustine. . . . . It does not reject the specific doctrines of the Church of the past. . . . . It is not iconoclastic in its temper. Believing that revelation is not so much from God as of God, its logical attitude is that of seeing and interpreting. . . . . It is not disposed to find a field and organisation outside of existing churches."

As to its positive features, we are told that (1) "It claims for itself a somewhat larger and broader use of the reason than has been accorded to theology." (2) "It seeks to interpret the Scriptures in a more natural way. Its strongest denial and its widest divergence from the old theology lies here. The Bible is a history of the highest form in which God is manifesting himself in the world, but it is not the manifestation itself; it is not a revelation, but the history of a revelation." (3) "The New Theology seeks to replace an excessive individuality by a truer view of the solidarity of the race." The race, as a race, is "fed by a common life, watched over by one Father, inspired by one Spirit, and growing to one end." (4) "This theology recognises a new relation to natural science." An illustration of this is found in the fact that "It accepts the theory of physical evolution as the probable method of physical creation." (5) "The New Theology offers a contrast to the Old in claiming for itself a wider study of man. It deals with human life as do the poets and dramatists; it views humanity by a direct light, looks straight at it, and into it, and across its whole breadth." (6) Once more, "It recognises the necessity of a restatement of belief in Eschatology, or the doctrine of Last Things." "It does not regard the future world as identical with the eternal world."

How completely these statements alter the complexion of the Gospel as presented to us by the whole army of Martyrs for the truth, and by revered leaders of the Church through every age, it does not require much insight to perceive. It is a question of the deepest and most serious import, whether it is possible that for eighteen hundred years the faith and the spiritual life of the Church have been feeding on error and resting on fallacies, and that it is reserved for this nineteenth century to give to men the right conception of God, and to show the true way of salvation. It is important to notice how reason rather than revelation, sight rather than faith, are brought to the front in this new system of theology. This alone is sufficient to excite apprehension and arouse suspicion on the part of the wary. This feature at least is not new. The Greeks and the Jews of Apostolic times pleaded for the same line of argument in relation to the Gospel of Christ, and they applied it with the same results. The same doctrine of the Cross, which the new theology rejects, became to them also foolishness, and a rock of offence. Man, says our author, "is a knower; the reason never ceases to be less than itself without losing all right to use itself as reason." The Gnostic of St. John's day asserted precisely the same, and therein proved himself at war with the Apostle's doctrine, and outside the pale of true Christian faith.

It is of equal importance to note how revelation is by this modern creed reduced from being divinely complete and unchangeably true and binding upon men, to be dependent upon human genius for its interpretation, and chameleon-like in its ever-changing aspects and hues. Doctrines, too, of the past, if not rejected, are so altered in their form that they cannot be regarded as the same. Atonement, for instance, though held as a term, and spoken of as "the central and broadest fact of theology," is yet so severed from the idea of a satisfaction for sin, or of providing a substitute for the sinner, that it is a wholly different thing from the evangelical believer's conception of its nature and purpose; justification by faith also is held only in the sense of a faith that, by its laws, induces an actual righteousness. It is said to be "a simple, rational process realised in human experience," not an imputation of the righteousness of Christ to the believer. Indeed, so completely does the system exchange the theory of God's governmental rule over the world for that of universal Fatherhood, that it is impossible to blend the Old with the New, or to discover any positive traces of the one in the teaching of the other.

Why do we want a new theology at all? Does the Old fail to reach the heart of man, to furnish peace to the anxious one who accepts it, or to exalt the Saviour whom it reveals? Or does the New, so far as it has been tried, prove a better comforter of the soul in time of need, or more powerful to win men to Christ? We have no proofs that it is so in either case. As of old, the Gospel which our fathers believed is proving itself all over the world the power of God unto Salvation. In every land men of every clime and under every condition are by its means being regenerated and brought into the redeemed family of God. "The Old, Old Story" gives birth to philanthropic and social reforms, such as nothing short of it has ever awakened or attempted. The Bible as the very voice of God coming to us with all the force of a plenary inspiration, such as admits of no change or modification as to its assertions of truth, commands millions of minds, and accelerates the cause of liberty and true progress in all parts of the world. Christ, lifted up on the accursed tree, bearing the sins of men, and revealing the character of God as the justifier of sinners who believe in his name, as holy and just as it is loving and compassionate, still draws all men unto Him; while systems destitute of a vicarious sacrifice fail to save or attract the lost, and only serve to flatter the pride and uphold the self-righteousness of the human heart. We want no other Gospel than that which Paul proclaimed and realised when he declared, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth, to the Jew first, and also to the Greek."

True, that Gospel is not comprised in any set of doctrines formulated by man: it is inexhaustible, infinite in its fulness; the further we advance in its study, the deeper and wider its glorious truths become in their development of the wisdom and grace of God. But none the less are the foundations firm, and the truths based upon them unalterable and fixed for all time. The book from which we have quoted may have fascination and charm for those who prefer the shifting forms of human thought to the eternal verities of the Divine mind; it will doubtless serve to confirm many of its readers in doubt as to some spiritual truths, and in rationalistic methods of interpreting Bible records; possibly it will unsettle not a few who have hitherto been anchored in the faith of Christ crucified; but all who read the sacred Word with self-renouncing faith and humble, childlike mind, it can only induce to turn with keener satisfaction and desire to the Old Theology, which is based, not on modern speculation and human reasonings, but on "The foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the Chief Corner Stone."

DELIVERANCE FROM SELF.

NOTES OF A SERMON,

By Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES,

At City Temple, last Sunday evening.

"Oh, wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death?"—Rom. vii. 24.

THE parable of the Prodigal Son, that I read for our lesson, gives a typical history of the human soul. It describes the successive stages in the history of every man. Each man begins at home—in his Father's house. Therefore, if he dies in infancy, he goes straight to heaven. But as he reaches the period of moral choice, a subtle temptation presents itself to him—the desire to be independent, to go his own way, to please himself. So he goes to the far-off land, where the authority of God is rejected.

The first result is the pleasures of the world for a season. But soon there comes a check; pain comes and pleasures pall; there is a mighty famine in the land, and he begins to be in want. But he does not at once come to his senses; he takes a deeper plunge. At last he "comes to himself." What a crisis! what a revolution! Everything is possible now. All the intolerable weight of sin may be wiped away. The lost may be found. The dead may live. All may yet be well. Until a man comes to himself, God can do nothing with him, and he can only go on reaping more and more the wretched harvest he has sown. Therefore all the efforts of Divine love from the day of Adam until now have been directed in the first place to this one result—to bring men to themselves. This is the explanation, from the Divine side, of the whole history of man.

The experience of one who has thus come to know himself is nowhere so graphically depicted as in the passage which immediately precedes the text—a passage which is absolutely unique in human literature. You may search the British Museum and the Bodleian Library at Oxford, but you will find nothing equal to this. Here is a man who describes his very self with such overpowering force and fulness, that beside his description even the subtle analysis of Shakespeare is superficial and tame. He lights up his own soul with a dazzling electric blaze that reveals every detail of its agony. Listen to Paul's description of himself when his eyes are opened and he knows himself:—

"I am carnal, sold under sin. For that which I do I allow not: for what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I. If, then, I do that which I would not, I consent unto the law that it is good. Now then it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me. For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh,) dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not. For the good that I would I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I do. Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me. I find then a law, that, when I would do good, evil is present with me. For I delight in the law of God after the inward man: but I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members. O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?"

Have you ever had any experience like that? Have you ever beheld the solemn beauty and divine majesty of the law of God? Have you realised that the will of God is pure, and acceptable, and perfect? Have you felt an overwhelming obligation to obey God? Have you ever yearned to lead a saintly life? Have you ever been constrained to cry, "My soul thirsteth for God?" If not, you know nothing of religion, and your opinion of it is absolutely worthless. If you have never come to yourself there is no intellectual delusion of which you are incapable. You may be able to assert with the brilliant Frenchman of our time, that the Gospel according to John gives signs of the increasing imbecility and old age in which it was written. You may even be able to say with the great German of our time that at the close of his life Jesus Christ of Nazareth displayed a positively insane fanaticism! You may go further, perhaps, and be capable of the supreme irrationality of saying there is no God, and actually believing that you are a very clever fellow for saying it. There is no possible limit to the depth of dark stupidity to which a man may sink until he has come to himself.

Alas! for you if God has not yet opened your eyes to see yourself. There is no Gospel for you. The minstrelsies which on the morning of the Nativity overflowed the walls of heaven and ravished the hearts of the shepherds of Bethlehem will fall upon your deaf ears in vain. In vain should I disclose to you the unsearchable riches of Christ. This service can bring no message of mercy or of love to you. But is it possible that in such a congregation, in a city where the Gospel has been preached for a thousand years, there is any man so absolutely blind, who has never yearned to lead a Christian life, never felt the intolerable oad of his sin, who could stand up and declare that although he knows nothing of God and Christ he is perfectly happy? What! no aching void, no restless desire, no unsatisfied aspiration? If there be such a man hearing me I can only pray God from the bottom of my heart to shine into his dark heart and let him quickly see the salvation which Christ is waiting to bestow.

I address myself to another class—to those who know the meaning of the text only too well. There are men and women here who have been uttering its piteous cry for years and years together. Oh, how wretched you are! Convinced of sin, groaning under sin, struggling with sin, dreading sin, hating sin, but still in the clutches of sin, and not able to escape from its heavy burden.

It may be there is some special sin that torments your soul. Perhaps you are the slave of drink. Alas! alas! in every congregation of this size, in the realm of England, there are scores of men and women who are the victims of this cursed sin, which has been dragging them down to hell for years. God is here, and is ready to snap the chain that binds you, if you are willing to have it done now. It may be you are the victim of licentiousness. Of all the sins that men are guilty of, it is the most seldom named in the pulpit; yet it is one that is dragging many down to the lowest depths of hell. Man does not punish it; God will punish it all the more. If there is a man here who is guilty of the most damnable sin under heaven, and while hell is yawning to swallow him up—the only place for which he is fit—I pray him in God's name to cry out for mercy; God will save even such a wretch as he. Perhaps you have yielded to the awful snare of gambling. I once knew a man who shook from head to foot under the sound of the Gospel; I could not understand why he did not yield to Divine power, until I heard afterwards that he was a secret victim to gambling. If this chain ties you down, Christ is able to snap it for you. It may be a violent temper, or the deadening pleasures of the world; or perhaps it is nothing beyond the fatal habit of procrastination, that astonishes yourself.

You have often meant to yield to Christ, but here you are still; and you are not happy—far from it. You may be like a man in the fulness of worldly prosperity, who said to me the other day, "I would to God I were dead!" Will you return to your Father, now? You have come to yourself; now arise and return. Are you willing to be delivered? Then I have good news for you.

Consider the seat of your suffering. "Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" Your body is the throne of your sin. You are not tormented by your circumstances; therefore no change in your circumstances will deliver you. Milton boldly and profoundly put into the mouth of Satan these terrible words: "Myself am hell." And in a lower degree that is true of you. How many frivolous, worldly girls flee to a nunnery; how many blasé men rush into a monastery to escape from their circumstances; but they cannot escape from themselves. Do not blame your friends, or your business, or your pleasure; blame yourselves. "Who shall deliver me?"—not from my circumstances, but the evil that is in my heart? That is the question to be answered, and until it is answered nothing else is worth a moment's attention on your part. If there is anyone here who can answer it better than this Book that lies before me, I should like to hear him. Can the atheist or the worldling answer it? Shall we dance the wretchedness out of our soul? Shall we administer a well-selected series of theatrical entertainments for its comfort? Who shall deliver you? I stand here to assert that there is only one person in the wide world who can turn the cry of sorrow into a cry of joy. He is the Lord Jesus Christ. He is as truly here as I am—here to deliver you, if you are only humble enough to throw yourselves at his feet.

Mark the wretched Saul of Tarsus, in the very next verse, pass into the happy Paul: "I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord." How blessed the change! It is the will of God that every man here should experience it. Will you allow your Divine Father to make you happy to-night? He cannot save you against your will, but I declare to you, in his name, that there is no other difficulty. If you are willing, there is no power on earth or in hell that can prevent God from saving you now. The issue, therefore, is absolutely in your own hands.

"Jesus ready stands to save you,
Full of pity, joined with power;
He is able, He is willing: doubt no more."

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

DURING the past fortnight these evangelists have been engaged at Bury, Lancashire. The Committee who made the arrangements represented nearly all of the Nonconformist Churches, and with hearty unity worked in the good cause. In the course of the Mission ten chapels have been visited, and services have been held in each, while the principal place of meeting has been the Phillips Hall, where large crowds have assembled.

During the second week of the campaign the Bury Fair was held, and notwithstanding the excitement connected therewith, the meetings were well attended. The meeting for men only on Sunday afternoon was a splendid success; the Hall was full, and the sound of the men's voices singing, and the sight of their earnest, upturned faces, will not speedily be forgotten. As a result of the meetings, many Christians have been blessed, and will, doubtless, be earnest in carrying on the good work, while not a few have been led to decision for Christ.

THE PARABLE OF THE POUND.

A VIGOROUSLY expressed and practical exposition of this parable (Luke xix. 13—27) was given by Rev. J. Smith, of Berwick-on-Tweed, at the Central Noon Prayer-meeting last week. Taking first the case of the man who did not trade with his lord's money, Mr. Smith pointed out that in the original the word "napkin" means literally a "sweat-cloth." When a man has put forth a great amount of energy he begins to perspire; then he finds relief and refreshment in the use of "the sweat-cloth." This man made a very different use of the napkin; instead of using it to refresh himself after his toil, he hid in it the talent with which he ought to have traded. He is a type of those professors who think themselves very religious because they are regular in attendance on the ordinances of God's house, though all the time they engage in no kind of service for their Lord. This slothful man's excuse teaches us that it is hard work keeping up the spiritual life if we do not work for Christ, but simply look upon our privileges as so many spiritual luxuries.

Since the man would not trade with his pound it was taken away. Unused spiritual faculties are sure to die. What is the last sight that this cumberer of the ground sees before he passes away, without a star in his crown? He sees the enemies of his Lord, among whom he has lived, taken away to punishment. If he had been an active servant it might not have been so. As he goes his solitary way into the presence of his God, to meet the Christ who gave Himself for his salvation, how sad will be the man's thoughts at lost or misspent opportunities that might have been used to good purpose if he had been filled with a spirit of consecration to the Master. Surely the sight of these enemies taken away to punishment will be burned into his memory and conscience through all the ages.

Glance briefly at the two kinds of workers described in the parable. The pound that is given to each may be said to set forth the common gift of his grace, bestowed on all God's believing children. The second man came to his master and said the pound had gained five pounds. This simply means that he had put out the money at the current rate of interest. He was a worker who did not put himself to much trouble; he enjoyed all the comforts of life and gave up his spare time to his master's service. His pound of grace had developed into five distinct faculties, and these, of course, would fit him for some grander arena.

But look at the case of the other worker. Sometimes it seems to me a great pity that since the Revisers of the New Testament went so far they did not resolve to go a little farther. You do not see from the English version that there is a beautiful distinction between the answer of the first man and that of the second. The man of whom I have spoken said, "Lord, thy pound hath made five pounds;" but the first man said, "Lord, thy pound hath wrought out ten pounds." The second man gave Christ the current rate of interest, but the other man gave the sweat of his brow, the whole expenditure of body and brain. There are some Christians who not only realise that God is able to make all grace abound towards them, but their life becomes an intense force, a mighty power in the world. Such men will have a double reward. But there is something more. Notice, the man whose pound made other five pounds receives no special commendation from the Master; we would not think of commending such a man ourselves. We follow him to the grave perhaps, and say he was a good, faithful, honest man, but we do not go into raptures over him. But there is a Dr. Livingstone, for instance, who puts his all into the hand of Christ, and who dies on his knees alone in the central wilds of Africa, praying that the great cloud of darkness might be lifted away from the land. Are not our hearts thrilled when we read of that? For such a man there is the Master's "Well done, good and faithful servant." We are living in a time when Christ demands all the energy of our being. We need to remember that He is looking down upon us, expecting that we should place all we have at his feet, to be used in the way that seems best to Him.

A PASSION FOR SAVING SOULS.

The subject of the "Pen Portrait" in last week's Christian Leader is the late Rev. W. Gebbie, Parish Minister of Dunlop, who died on August 2, at the age of 73. The writer of the sketch thus speaks of Mr. Gebbie from personal knowledge of the man:—

"WHAT is commonly called 'saving souls' was a passion with him. He pursued it constantly—everywhere, in season and out of season. His zeal never tired. His keenness for that sort of work never lost its freshness. In order to introduce the subject of personal religion to those whom he wished to converse with, he was in the habit every year of thinking out a new plan of attack. One year he would begin by asking the unsuspecting listener, 'Have you heard the news?' 'No; what is it?' 'Jesus Christ has died for the sins of the world.' 'Oh, that is no news.' 'Indeed, I am glad you know it, and hope you have accepted it personally.' 'Another year he would startle the rough workman at his side, in the train or elsewhere, by asking, 'Can you fight the devil?' 'No,' the workman would reply, 'I can't.' 'Then,' said Mr. Gebbie, 'I hope you have got some One to fight him for you.' 'I am not sure of that,' would grudgingly come as a reply, which gave the eager speaker the opportunity he longed for to sow the seed beside all waters. On still another occasion he would pose the quiet, thrifty-looking woman by his side by asking, in an earnest way, 'Have you paid all your debts?' The indignant answer would be, 'Of course I have,' an answer which was at once followed by the quaint remark, 'I mean your debts to God.'

"I remember Mr. Gebbie on one occasion staying at my house for a few days, and his life and habits were a study. His appearance in the morning was generally heralded by some text he had discovered in his meditations, with a special meaning in it, and on which he would dilate. (He mentioned to me that he always slept with a New Testament under his pillow.) Then, after breakfast, he would sally down the town with a bundle of tracts in his pocket, addressing himself to all and sundry with wonderful tact and unfailing good humour. To a group of workmen whom he was not quite sure of, he would begin with, 'Would you take a tract from an old man?' which at once put the roughest on his good behaviour; while to children he was wonderfully fascinating, and would seek out his nicest picture-tracts to please them. He spoke on personal religion to nearly everybody whom he thought he could approach.

"In his house texts on the walls took the place of pictures. In the inside of his pulpit, below the book-board, so as to catch the eye of the preacher, was pasted a small slip of paper on which was written in Mr. Gebbie's well-known hand—

> The Father's everlasting love,
> And Jesus' precious blood,
> Shall be our endless theme while here,
> And yonder with our God.

Even his hat was utilised, for on the inside of the crown of it was pasted an evangelical text, so that when brethren at a meeting were looking for their hats they might haply be profited by casting their eye on this reminder. 'My hat is well known at the presbytery,' he would say, in his quietly humorous way; 'nobody ever takes it away by mistake.'

"Mr. Gebbie wrote many tracts and short sermons. They are all in one strain, however, for, as he said of his preaching, 'he had only one string to his fiddle,' but that one string was the highest, 'I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified.' Still, although his writings are all in the same key-note, they are wonderfully fresh, and the style is clear as a limpid brook. Nobody can ever mistake his meaning, as nobody can ever mistake his earnestness. He was a man with a mission. He lived for it, and he died for it. He counted not his life dear unto him that he might win souls to his Redeemer."

DESTITUTE BOYS IN CLAPHAM.

THAT useful and flourishing institution, the Carter Home, has issued its annual report. During the year the work has been carried on vigorously and successfully under the efficient management of its excellent master and matron, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Gray. The financial statement shows that not only has all debt been paid off, but there is a small balance in hand. Still, the Home is in special need of increased funds at the present time, to meet the expense of a considerable enlargement of the premises. Another dormitory, dining-room, wash-house, &c., are being erected at the back, the cost of which, estimated at £250, will have to be met by extra contributions. When this addition to the Home is completed, the Committee will be enabled to receive within its sheltering walls twenty more boys.

The progress of the boys appears to be most satisfactory. About one-half of the younger ones attend Board schools, where their conduct and diligence are all that could reasonably be desired. A night-school is held on the premises for the elder boys employed during the day. It is a noteworthy fact that the earnings of the boys form no inconsiderable part of the income of the Institution. Though there are not more than about fifty boys, and many of them regularly attending a day-school, £529 appears in the balance-sheet as the produce of their labours—being £100 more than last year. This constitutes a striking testimony to the industrial character of the Home.

Not only the material but the spiritual welfare of the inmates is made an object of care. Some of the boys have experienced a change of heart. In the case of one lad, repentance had its fruit unto righteousness with the best of results. After conversion he confessed his true antecedents, which for fifteen months he had concealed, and the prodigal was restored to his parents, who had sought everywhere for their lost boy.

A truly Christian work is being accomplished quietly and effectually at a comparatively small cost. It helps itself, and is, therefore, the more deserving of outside help, which can be rendered in a variety of ways. The Treasurer is Dr. Eugene Cronin, Old Manor House, Clapham, S.W.

MR. PHILIP PHILLIPS gave a farewell Service of Song in the Eglinton-street Congregational Church, Glasgow, last week, and left the following day for America by the Ethiopian.

II.—THE TEST OF HOLINESS.

IF the question were put to this large meeting, "Who is the Author of sanctification, of holiness, of all true life?" we would of course answer, with one voice: "The Holy Spirit." "Yes, but to whom does God give the Holy Spirit?" We would answer: "To them that ask Him." These would be, in truth, the very words of our Lord; and yet we might give another answer, also from the Scripture, and which, while it can in no wise contradict the first, brings to it a significant addition and complement. You will find it in Acts v. 32: "We are his witnesses to these things, and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey Him."

God will not give his Spirit for any other purpose than obedience. And therefore the great question which we have to consider before we go further is this: Are we desiring to obey God? This whole subject of holiness, that leads to so many controversies, resolves itself practically into a very simple question: Do we wish to obey the will of God? To do the will of God because it is the will of God, whatever it may prove to be? To do it in all things? To do it at all times? To do it lovingly, cheerfully, and from the heart, because it is good, acceptable, and perfect? Do we desire this? It is so very easy to persuade ourselves that we do, especially in such meetings as these, and then, when we get home and find these little temptations, as we call them,—I do not know whether they are little, but the mischief they lead to is surely not little,—when we meet these temptations to disobedience, in one shape or another, be it only neglect of duty, or giving way to temper, or a spirit of judging, or a spirit of slothfulness, or a spirit of levity, or anything else that we know to be contrary to the will of God—oh, when we find ourselves before these temptations, when they start, as it were, on our path again, then we see that the question is not so easy as it appears at first.

Is this, then, what we mean—that we want to obey God at home, to obey God in everything, even though some whom we love and respect should begin at once to say that we are—well, "exaggerated," perhaps, or "ridiculous," or "fanatical," or something else? Are we ready to go right on, to go right through, and obey God? It may cost us much more than this. We may have many in the world, and even in our church, against us; we may be looked upon as "fools for Christ's sake:" are we ready for that? We may lose position, lose money perhaps, lose a great many things that we hold dear, and have to part with them for the sake of Christ: are we ready for that?

Perhaps you will say: This is not what ought to be put before Christians who desire to be holy. Is it not? Do you remember what Christ said to his disciples? "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself." And again: "Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple." He hangs this sign outside the door, as it were. Look at it. Sit down, first, and count the cost, lest you be as the man who began to build and was not able to finish, so that all the beholders began to mock him.

Of course I know there are two sides to every question. At times we ought rather to say, "Come and be happy; come and find rest." So Christ also says; but that rest is but the initial step towards service. "Take my yoke upon you," He at once goes on to say. Is it not far better to know what we are about to engage in, than to make a Christian profession and then to draw back when we meet with difficulties, resembling that ground the Saviour speaks of in the parable, where the good seed is choked by thorns, or that other ground where the good seed could take no root? And why? Because, just as soon as tribulation or persecution ariseth because of the word, they are offended and draw back. If we will be in earnest with God, He will be in earnest with us. If we really know what we mean, and truly purpose to be followers of the Christ who was crucified, who was neglected and despised of men, but who saved the world; if we want to enter into his work (and his work is to save the world, even now), to continue by his Spirit what He has done by his blood, to lead sinners to Himself and to use them in the salvation of others; if we are willing to enter into that work, if we want to be his servants, He is quite ready to receive us. Then we shall find that for such work—his work—everything is provided. "All things are now ready." All things are not ready for the work that we may have planned for ourselves, but all things are ready for the work God has given us to do.

I may add, and ought to add, that God deals very gently with us when He receives us. He does not lay the heaviest burdens upon us at once. He leads us on, step by step, according to our strength; and He will give us more and more of his grace as He gives us more and more to do or to bear for Him. You need not be afraid of Him. If a man had died for you, you would not be afraid to trust your interests to him; you would not think he would be hard upon you, or take advantage of you. If Christ has died for us, and if we go to Him to commit ourselves to Him, to do his will and his work, we need not fear. He is not the hard Master of whom the slothful servant spoke; He is the kindest of Masters. He says, "Come unto Me, and I will give you rest: learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly in heart." As much as to say: "Do not be afraid of Me, although I be the Son of God, the express image of his person, the holy and just One; I am meek and lowly in heart." Go to Him with confidence; and go to Him because you are determined by his grace to do his will, to be his servants.

Oh, brethren, this question seems almost too personal and too sacred to be treated in a public meeting. We cannot help it, however: but I wish each one might consider himself now as if he were alone before God. The question is this: "Wilt thou serve Me, or wilt thou not?" It is not a question of making a profession, or of what our religious privileges have been, it is just this: Whose servants are we? For whom are we living? What is the object of our life—of this short, uncertain life of ours? What are we doing with it? Be assured that the Lord is now calling to Himself a people to serve Him. "He shall see of the travail of his soul and shall be satisfied." And in the measure in which we enter that service of his, we renounce the service of sin. As the Apostle so clearly puts it: "Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness? But God be thanked, that [though] ye were the servants of sin, ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you. Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness,"

Then "yield yourselves unto God;" commit yourselves, or "present" ourselves, which is perhaps simpler still—present our bodies, as living sacrifices, and let Him accept the sacrifice; let Him sanctify and consecrate the unworthy gift; let Him transform it, and use it to his glory.

The world is waiting for this. Nowadays, as you know, the world has found out, it says, that there is no God. The notion that there should be a personal, living God is exploded, we are informed. And one of their arguments is this: "We look," they tell us, "upon those who profess to serve the living God, and to be animated by his Spirit; we compare their lives with the lives of the Apostles, and the difference is such that it amounts almost to contradiction. We ask them the reason, and they simply reply: "Oh, but those were Apostolic times, and these are our times; that was Paul and John and Peter, but this is you and he and me; we never can expect to live now as they did in Apostolic times.'" I ask whether you can find half a syllable in the Bible on which to rest such a statement? We have the same God, the same promises, the same law, the same Saviour, the same Spirit. What Christ did for Paul He is quite ready to do for us. His Saviour is our Saviour. The Holy Ghost that was in him is the very same Holy Ghost that is now given to everyone who asks, everyone who believes, everyone who obeys.

Be sure, however, that it is not a natural life, nothing like it. It is a supernatural life. That is what we need, and what the world rightly requires. We want a supernatural religion, a religion that not only can prove that its credentials are supernatural, but can show that it is now doing supernatural things, lifting us above mere nature, by a power that does not come from nature but from grace, not from man but from God.

PORT SAID.

I INTEND, with my wife and three children, to leave for Port Said towards the end of October, for definitely fixing our abode there. During my recent sojourn there, I wrote to Count de Lesseps applying for a suitable house, at a moderate rent, for the use of the Mission, but have not yet received a reply.

Some English residents advised me to get a large barge and fit it up for a Bethel ship, as many captains do not like to let their crews go on shore, for fear of getting intoxicated. This I found very good advice. Some of them would like even to subscribe towards it (its cost would be about £400), on condition that I would arrange at certain times for concerts and other entertainments. On hearing this I politely refused their kind offer, plainly stating that my work among the sailors was intended for their moral and spiritual good, according to God's revealed Word, and unless I had freedom to act accordingly, I would abide the Lord's time and help.

Will you help us in your prayers, that the Lord may graciously bless our going out to that land, darkened by unbelief, infidelity, and superstition? In leaving dear friends and many comforts here in England, for that place of discomfort and man's utter rejection of God's Word and sound doctrine, we have need of a close walk with our adorable and risen Lord, who is well worthy to be served, in return for what He has done for us.—Yours sincerely and gratefully in Christ,

G. A. Egli.

HOW THE POOR LIVE.—2.

In a recent issue we made some quotations from the articles lately published in The Pictorial World, written by Mr. Sims and illustrated by Mr. Barnard, descriptive of the condition of the London poor. We now resume the subject, in the hope that some further extracts may prove interesting to our readers, and useful in suggesting ways of meeting or mitigating the sore evils so graphically depicted.

The degradation of any community very quickly tells upon the children. The framers of the School Board System do not appear to have taken into account the hindrances to school attendance that must arise amongst the very destitute, from hunger and nakedness. Messrs. Sims and Barnard were not long in discovering this. After describing a very painful case of destitution with which their explorations had made them acquainted, Mr. Sims continues:—

"The children have not been to school. 'Why?' asked the officer who accompanies us. 'Because they've no boots, and they are both ill now.' It is true The children, pale, emaciated little things, cough a hard rasping cough from time to time. The children's boots have gone with the father's coat, and at present it does seem hard to say that the parents must be fined unless the children come barefooted through the sloppy streets to school. Such, however, is the rule, and this boot question is an all-important one in the compulsory education of the children of the slums. How to get the boots for Tommy and Sarah to go their daily journey to the Board school is a problem which one or two unhappy fathers have settled by hanging themselves behind the domestic door."

Several of Mr. Sims' chapters are devoted to an account of the method adopted by the School Board to secure the attendance of the children at school; and to the many extenuating pleas, more or less cogent, urged in defence by the parents of the defaulters. Mr. Sims looks for great things from the working of the Education Act, but it is evident that the interest taken in it by multitudes of the London poor is chiefly confined to the most successful schemes for evading its provisions. The post of School Board visitor in a poverty-stricken neighbourhood is not one to be envied:—

"There are some rough customers to deal with in this district—so rough that it is a wonder the Act works so smoothly as it does. The fiercest and most reckless of the lawless classes have to be bearded in their dens by the devoted, ill-paid officers, who ferret out the children and insist upon their coming to school. Up to the topmost garret and down to the lowest cellar, in dens and hovels given over to thieves and wantons, I have accompanied a School Board officer on his rounds, and I frankly confess that I have passed a few bad quarters of an hour. There are dozens of these places where the blow follows the word in a moment, where life is held of least account, and where assaults are so common that the victims would as soon think of asking the police to notice their broken windows as to take cognisance of their broken heads."

Here are three paragraphs that may well give us pause and set our wits a working to find out some speedy remedy:—

"How foul, how awful, some of these places are, where the poor have found their last refuge from Artisans' Dwellings Acts and Metropolitan improvements, I dare not tell you. I have been told that the readers of a sixpenny paper don't care to know, and the difficulties of dealing with this subject are increased by my knowledge of the fact that in a truthful account of 'How the Poor Live' there can be but little to attract those who read for pleasure only. Rags—that is to say, the rags of our cold, sunless clime—are never picturesque; squalor and misery can only be made tolerable by the touch of the romancist—and here I dare not romance.

"Bad, however, as things are, shocking as is the condition in which thousands and thousands of our fellow-citizens live from the cradle to the grave, it is not an unmixed evil, if out of its very repulsiveness grows a remedy for it.

"It has got now into a condition in which it cannot be left. For very shame England must do something—nay, for self-preservation, which is the most powerful of all human motives. This mighty mob of famished, diseased, and filthy helots is getting dangerous—physically, morally, politically dangerous. The barriers that have kept it back are rotten and giving way, and it may do the State a mischief if it be not looked to in time. Its fevers and its filth may spread to the homes of the wealthy; its lawless armies may sally forth and give us a taste of the lesson the mob has tried to teach now and again in Paris, when long years of neglect have done their work."

Chapter seven deals with the difficult subject of the proper treatment of sickness and disease in these crowded localities. A pencil sketch by Mr. Barnard, fearful in its fidelity to the sickening truth, represents "a domestic tragedy"—a dying woman with a babe at her breast, lying in a miserable apartment, her life slowly but surely ebbing out while her husband is out on the weary search for some work. Mr. Sims gives many instances of dead bodies having lain for lengthened periods in the same room as that occupied by the surviving members of the family. Nothing that we have ever read shows in a more ghastly light the need of reform in domestic sanitation and the housing of the poor. In this connection Mr. Sims pays a high tribute of praise to the work of the hospitals:—

"If I were asked to say off-hand what was the greatest curse of the poor and what was the greatest blessing, I think my answer to the first query would be the public-house, and to the second the hospital. Sickness, disease, and accident enter very largely into the annals of the poor. Overcrowding and unsanitary dwellings—all the ghastly surroundings of poor life in a great city, which I have attempted feebly to describe in these papers—render the masses peculiarly susceptible to illness in every shape and form. Epidemics of some sort or other are rarely absent from the poorer districts, and many painful diseases and deformities are transmitted regularly from parent to child. To be sound of limb and well in health in these dens is bad enough, but the existence of an invalid under such circumstances is pitiable to a degree. The hospitals are the heavens-upon-earth of the poor. I have heard little children—their poor pinched faces wrinkled with pain—murmur that they didn't mind it, because if they had been well they would never have come to 'the beautiful place.' Beautiful, indeed, by contrast with their wretched homes are the clean wards, the comfortable beds, and the kind faces of the nurses.

"The elder people, doubtless, appreciate the blessings of the hospital as much as the children. The poor generally speak in the highest terms of such institutions. They could not, as a rule, lie ill at home; care and attention would be impossible; and for a sick person the atmosphere would mean certain death. Doctors they cannot afford to pay. The class of practitioners who lay themselves out for business in these neighbourhoods are not, as a rule, much more than nostrum and patent-medicine vendors, and their charges are generally extortionate. If you could bring yourself to imagine truthfully the condition of the sick poor without the hospitals to go to, you would see a picture of human misery so appalling that you would cover your eyes and turn away from it with a shudder."

We might multiply extracts of a similar kind from the succeeding chapters of this grimly realistic narrative, but we have given enough to indicate its scope and purport. We trust every reader will be moved to do what in him lies to bring about happier conditions of life among the London poor.

BIBLE FLOWER MISSION.—The Hon Superintendent of this Mission reports the continuance and progress of the work of giving texts with flowers to the sick and needy. One woman said recently, "Well, now, that is true, for I have just the message I needed to-day." Another: "I do thank you for telling me the way of salvation." Everlasting flowers, lavender bags, and ornamental cards are much needed, and may be addressed to Mr. Dove, 110, Cannon-street, London, E.C.

THE PUNISHMENT OF EVILDOERS.

Attention has been called in the columns of The Spectator to the following passage, taken from the last edition of "The Unseen Universe," by Professors Balfour Stewart and Tait. The reference, as will be seen, is to the punishment of our criminals:—

"Imprisonment has been tried in vain, and, besides, it involves great and needless expense. The 'cat' though thoroughly appropriate, is objected to, as tending to brutalise (!) the patient, and render murder not unlikely. No such objections can be urged against the use of electricity in any of its many forms. For it can easily be applied so as to produce for the requisite time, and for that only, and under the direction of skilled physicists and physiologists, absolutely indescribable torture (unaccompanied by wound or even bruise), thrilling through every fibre of the frame of such miscreants."

The idea that physical torture is the punishment best suited for the prevention of crime appears to be a growing one; at any rate, it is pleaded for by some who rank high in varied circles of thought and influence. Great criminals and ruffians are generally great cowards when their own suffering is in question, and possibly fear of such treatment as that suggested above, might be a deterrent in some cases, although the consequences of crime are rarely, if ever, weighed before its committal.

The moral aspects, however, of such a proposal demand careful attention. Even if our "skilled physiologists" were willing to change places with the hangman, and to become the inflictors of vengeance upon our criminal class, it may be questioned whether the influence of such a change would not be more demoralising to society than the present system of the "cat," the treadmill, or the gallows. Not the torture of the criminal, but the rescue of society from his power to harm, is the main object of penal law. Compassion for the criminal (so far as is consistent with this end) is rather to be chosen than torture, whether we think of the remedial or the simply retributive aspect of his punishment.

Humanity must not be forgotten, even in dealing with those who are lost to a sense of its claims. The criminal, hardened and depraved as he may be, is a man, a partaker of our own flesh and blood, and his moral obliquity must not blind us to his claim upon our regard as a fellow creature.

John Howard and Elizabeth Fry would be better guides on this subject than modern scientists who advocate refinement of torture and excruciating pain as preferable to more outwardly repellent, but we venture to think, not more barbarous methods after all, of visiting guilt upon the guilty. In some directions at least, the refinements of this nineteenth century are only seemingly in advance of the barbarisms of earlier ages. G.

[Nevertheless, we think the scriptural punishment of scourging (i.e. the "cat"), not exceeding forty stripes, would be a most suitable penalty for wife-kickers and the like. It put an end to garotting, and would do good service now. We have no sympathy with the invisible cruelties proposed by our electrical scientists, and we cordially endorse the desire for the reformation of the offender; but we cannot withhold our sympathy from the injured victim of his cruelty.—Ed.]

MEDICAL MISSIONS.—Miss Annie Butler's Report of the Children's Medical Missionary Society contains a number of interesting details of the good done by the little ones. Among others, there is a letter from the late Dr. Schofield, written expressly for the children. Communications should be addressed to Miss Butler, 47, Endell-street, London, W.C.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN SWITZERLAND.

THE action of Mr. Booth and his friends in relation to the movements of the Salvation Army in Switzerland is a subject upon which different opinions are, and may well be, entertained. The course adopted by the Swiss authorities in reference to the matter does not, however, become any the more justifiable on that account. The principle of religious liberty is, unquestionably, being lost sight of, while intolerance and injustice are being displayed. Several hundreds of Swiss people who have disobeyed the law (as it is asserted) by attending a forbidden religious service, are allowed to go scot free, while Miss Booth is imprisoned and about to be tried for the same offence; this is, in itself, manifestly unjust, and proves an animus that goes far to convict the authorities of persecution and oppression.

An article in The Pall Mall Gazette of 20th inst. deals with the question in a very plain and outspoken manner, and says of the conduct of those who are at the back of the movement:—

"The old persecutor has but changed his frock, and the Swiss Freethinker is as intolerant as the Spanish Inquisitor. The battle of religious liberty will have to be fought over again before the century closes, nor will the struggle be less arduous because the new persecutors treat religion rather as a disease than as a heresy."

Mrs. Butler's words, in her letter published by us last week, are to the same effect, and without endorsing, or otherwise, the tactics of the Salvationists, the friends of liberty in matters of conscience are bound to raise their voices against the effort that is being made to restrict the freedom of men to worship God in accordance with conscientious conviction. That foreigners should conform to the laws of the country in which they reside is perfectly true, but we have a right to expect that in Protestant countries, at least, those laws shall be such as will ensure protection from persecution for conscience sake.

The following statement is from last Friday's telegraphic correspondence by the Geneva correspondent of The Times:—

"The imprisonment of Miss Booth at Neuchatel is likely to give rise to an important constitutional question. The Constitution guarantees the fullest religious liberty and right of meeting, and the point is whether or not a constitutional guarantee can be set at naught by a simple resolution of the Council of State and the Great Council. It is not disputed that the authorities can legally forbid an assemblage which they have good reason to believe may lead to a breach of the peace. But the authorities of Neuchatel have done much more than this; they have proscribed all future Salvationist meetings, even for Sunday worship, and will not allow them to be held in a forest, where a breach of the peace is hardly possible. It remains to be seen if any Swiss Canton has the right to place a perpetual interdict on the public worship of a religious sect, however objectionable its principles may be deemed.

"The only excuse of the local authorities both here and at Neuchatel for thus acting is that they have to maintain order with a very slender police force; that they are reluctant to call out the militia; and that, in short, it is easier to suppress Salvationist meetings than to protect them from mob violence. A member of the Neuchatel Legislature said a few days ago that it was an infamy to treat Salvationists as they had been treated, but that the only alternative was to shoot down their assailants, which would be a still greater infamy, and of the two the civil authorities chose the lesser. On this principle religious liberty and every other liberty exist only so long as it may please the mob to tolerate them. Miss Booth will probably support her imprisonment with considerable equanimity, for it can hardly fail to increase the number of her followers and add to her influence and importance. Captain Beckett has been invited to constitute himself a prisoner, and is probably by this time in custody."

MORNING HYMN.

THE night is past, the morning's come,
O Heavenly Father, hear!
For Jesus' sake, look down on me,
And listen to my prayer.

A little Christian child I am,
Washed in my Saviour's blood,
And if I all day trust in Him
He'll keep me pure and good.

Jesus, be with me in my work,
Be with me in my play:
May I do nought to grieve Thee, Lord,
All through this coming day.

Oh, let thy Spirit be in me,
The Comforter from heaven;
Then I shall be a comfort, too,
To those to whom I'm given.

My life is like a longer day;
Oh, when that day is done,
Let me not fear to lay me down
To sleep till Jesus come.

MAH ONGEE'S GOOD BYE.

Mah Ongee was a teacher in the American Mission Boarding-school for Burmese Girls, Burmah. She was coaxed into a Mission day-school, when a little neglected, motherless child. There I found her, and struck by her very frank, confiding ways, asked her if she would come and live with me, and be my little girl. She was delighted with the idea, and her heathen father giving his consent, I took her home with me, half naked and covered with filth as she was. She proved a bright scholar, and a very loving, grateful child.

She became a teacher in the school shortly after her conversion in 1872, and continued to be employed as such until stricken down by the illness which ended her life on earth. In 1877 she thought she would like to live at home, but she soon found she had to choose between Christ and her friends. She chose Christ, and her heathen father beat her till she was badly bruised, because she would not join in idol worship. Ongee then returned to the school, and never left it till the Lord took her home on August 5, 1883. Before she departed she said, "It is all light. Look which way I will, I see the face of the Lord Jesus. There are many shining ones here; I think they have come to meet me; they will not let me fall. The Lord Jesus is close by me, He is holding my hand; He never leaves me. I have not one bit of fear or anxiety. Oh, how happy I am! I never was happy like this before. I am going before you all, and I shall be getting ready for you, perhaps I shall be allowed to come and meet you. All must follow the road I am travelling now."

Turning to the native teachers, and addressing each one by name, she said: "Do not be sad because I shall not be here. I want you to help Mama Sheldon all you can; she is not strong. Mama Payne is going away and I shall not be here. She will feel almost as if she were left alone. Never look cross when she asks you to do anything. Don't any of you ever say, 'I don't want to do this work, I want to leave school.' I have twice talked in that way. But though I talked so, God never took this work out of my hands, and I am so thankful that even to the very end He has kept me in it. If it should please Him to make me well again, I would never leave this work for any other, it is the best of all."

"Be patient and long-suffering with the children, and try to set a good example before them; never be ashamed to talk to them about the Lord Jesus. Never mind if they mock or deride you, or call you 'the great female preacher,' never mind whatever they say; if the Lord Jesus approves and loves us, that is sufficient. I shall soon worship in the presence of the Lord Jesus. I shall worship there before the rest of you will. What joy it is! I long to worship before his face."

Turning to me she said: "All trouble will soon be over for me, I never shall have to suffer any more, will I, Mama? Have you given me up wholly to the Lord Jesus? Do yield me up to Him altogether; send me away joyfully." Being assured that we had yielded her entirely to the Lord, she replied, "That is good to hear. When the Lord Jesus calls me I shall go at once, no one can hold me back. How happy I am! Bid all the Christians good-bye for me. Tell the young Christians to take heed to themselves; to remember they must all follow this road, and not be careless; tell them to live so that they will be glad when they come to the end."

When asked if she had anything to say to her heathen relatives, she said, "It is sorrow to think of them." She talked very faithfully to her heathen father, and expressed great thankfulness that she was able to do so. He listened very attentively to her words, which rejoiced her greatly, as he had never done so before.

When begged to rest she replied, "I am too happy to go to sleep," and indeed the only cloud upon her joy was the remembrance of her unconverted friends.

Ongee made her will, and gave directions for her burial without the least shadow dimming the peace and joy she had expressed.

Just before the final struggle began she said, "I think I shall go to-day or to-night. They have been waiting for me a long time." She asked me to pray that the Lord would not take her away in one of the convulsions, saying, "I don't want to die writhing, if it can be God's will, I want to go quietly." She begged us to sing, and the last hours of that day were spent by her in listening to such hymns as "In the Christian's home in glory," "There is a land of pure delight," &c., and to God's Word, and in prayer, till at eight and a half in the evening she quietly fell asleep in Jesus, her last words of farewell being, "I am going, good-bye, everyone!"

Will not those who may read this account join us in the prayer that Ongee's heathen friends may be brought to Christ through her death?

WORK AMONG SOLDIERS.—Miss Sarah Robinson's ninth annual Report of the Soldiers' Institute at Portsmouth gives a plan and description of the new buildings in Nobb's-lane, which were opened on the 4th instant, at a cost of £8000; towards this £3500 has been subscribed. Miss Robinson gives a beief account also of her general work and the success which has happily attended it, and closes by an urgent appeal for continued support. The Report of the "Sailors' Welcome" shows that it is also doing a good service among our blue jackets.

JEWS AND GERMANS IN GLASGOW.—A good work of evangelisation is being carried on by Mr. Barron among the many Jews who pass through Glasgow, en route for America. He visits them on board the emigrant vessels, and being able to converse in their own language, his ministrations meet with much acceptance. A young German who lately came to reside in Glasgow, being concerned for the spiritual condition of his fellow-countrymen in the city, commenced a small evangelistic effort, which has been greatly prospered; the attendance on Saturday evenings now numbers over one hundred.

SCATTERING THE GOOD SEED.

FROM an intensely interesting letter lately received by Mrs. Robertson, of the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures (1, Oakhill-park, Hampstead, N.W.), from Mrs. Berger, of Sweden, we are permitted to make the following extracts; they will be read with much thankfulness by all who help in this good work:—

SWEDEN.

"It will gladden you to know that the fishermen, to whom we gave Gospel portions, have received them with much thankfulness. Some women asked, "How is it that you have got it on your heart to think of us poor fishers? We answered, 'Have you not read that Jesus' first disciples were fishers, and that He loved them?' We picture to ourselves how they will, on their return to their poor homes, tell of the wonderful things that have happened to them in town. Such a gift is something new to these poor people living amongst the rocks in the sea. It has been to ourselves quite a treat to move amongst them, seeing their eagerness.

"We find, at every new place we visit, that these portions are quite a new thing, and therefore eagerly accepted. One day, in a railway carriage, we gave a portion to three young people. They looked most happy, and we found they were Christians, going to America. We gave them some more Swedish and also Danish Gospels for giving away to other emigrants. They also had never seen these portions. While we were speaking with them, we observed an elderly gentleman looking much astonished. My brother offered him a Gospel, which he received, and began to study very intently. A young servant girl came in. I gave her a copy of the Acts, and when she had only read a few lines, she buried her head in hands and burst into tears. We looked at each other, and lifted up our hearts to our God for the young girl. She continued after a while to read, tears trickling down her cheeks. Before leaving, I said some words to her about trusting Jesus as her Saviour. We always travel third class, and it now and then happens that we get the whole company to discontinue their foolish, and often sinful talk, all of them reading in their books instead.

"One day a party of women were on their way to Denmark, where many Swedes go during the summer months for higher wages. They had a look of melancholy; one of them said, 'Oh, my heart was so faint in me, this was reviving for the spirit.' One of them asked to get one to 'send home to mother.' They got each a portion to give out to a Swede in Denmark, who had no Word of God.

"One day, in a train, my brother gave some books to some young men sitting in the same compartment. At the first stop a young man rose from the farther end of the carriage and came forward, asking if he could also get one. He sat down opposite my brother, and after a while he was unburdening his heart, telling with sobs about his miserable life, and how he had a dear Christian father praying for him. He was just on his way to him; he had got uneasy, and wished to see him, and thought it was so wonderful that he should get this book (the Psalms), and get to speak with my brother. He cried bitterly when he spoke about his wicked life, but said he wished to become a new creature. Another man, who also had got a book, was sitting opposite me, also seeking 'the one thing needful.' At a change of trains we met with a theological student, who was most glad to receive a portion. He had never seen one, but had heard that such had been distributed in Lund (we came just from there). He asked to get one to send to his mother.

"Some days since we were sitting at the pier, waiting for a fisherman who had asked us to meet him there for getting a book, when a nice-looking fellow came looking at us reading, as if he also wished to have something to read. We offered him a book, asking if he was a fisher? 'Yes, a stone-fisher; I and a comrade have a large boat, which we load with stones from the sea, at the coast. We are building a little harbour for fisher-boats, some seven miles from here. We have only just sailed in to town to-day on an errand.' He sat down reading, when another man came looking over his shoulder in the book. 'It is my comrade,' our friend said. We asked if he also wished to get a book, and gave him the Gospel by Matthew. He was soon seated, and had not read long before we observed his rough hand going up stealthily, first to one eye, then to another. After a while he could stand it no longer, but rose, and went a little apart. I went to him, and there he was weeping like a child. I said some words about the great love of Jesus to great sinners, and that He never cast off anyone who called on Him to save them, and pressed upon him the necessity of accepting Christ now. He sobbed and sobbed, 'Yes, yes.' We trust fully that God, who began the good work in him, will perform it. They had come, and we had come to the right place, in the right moment, with the right thing! Praise be to our God.

"We have given out these portions in two hospitals, to hotel-keepers and servants, public-house keepers, servants and customers, police, post, railway men, night-watchers at market places, Jews, to students, sailors, and nineteen of them to workmen in a distillery. We met the other day a person who had seen your Testament in one of our railway waiting-rooms, with some hearty words of thanks given to the Lord Jesus for sending the Testaments to our railway waiting-rooms. It was inscribed in a gentleman's handwriting. It gladdened our hearts.

FINLAND.

"We had lately a letter from our dear friend Miss Alba Kellman, in Wasa, Finland, who is such an eager worker in the Temperance cause, and, when her weak health permits, amongst sailors. She writes that she had lately again got a grant from you, which she was so thankful for.

DENMARK.

"We were exceedingly glad to hear from Mr. Wright, Copenhagen, that he had got another grant from you. We know him personally to be a most earnest young Christian. In the last three years he has succeeded in that wicked Copenhagen—pleasure-sick beyond description—as also our Stockholm is—through his unwonted zeal and perseverance, and notwithstanding all kinds of opposition, both in his own home and in the outer world, to establish a thoroughgoing work amongst those who do not enter church or chapel. He, with a few helpers, now goes out almost every evening preaching in courts and alleys, in open places, public-houses, &c. We have quite lately read, in a Swedish religious paper, a leading article about this blessed work, accompanied with a stir-up to our own countrymen to take his work for an example. He is personally quite without funds, having to subsist on a small salary in a Government office. His father is dead, was an Englishman, and he was himself converted through Rev. W. H. Aitken.

"We would mention to you another dear, earnest worker in Denmark, Mr. F. L. Rymker, in Odense. They are this autumn to open there for the first time a Sailors' Mission-room, and Mr. Rymker, as the missionary, would be greatly encouraged and helped if you could provide him with the Word for free distribution among sailors and others. Odense is a town of 20,000, in a populous district, with a much-frequented market-place, where we saw, twice a week, Mr. Rymker on his wooden leg. He fell from a mast in his youth, and was converted then in the hospital in America, doing the work of a faithful colporteur, though seldom encouraged by buyers. Few will buy; but, as we know from our own experience, nearly all will receive a gift. Mr. Rymker has for several years been in the service of the American Seamen's Friend Society."

COTTAGE HOSPITALS.

DEAR SIR,—On coming from Tunbridge Wells to this place I stopped near Lichfield, and was taken to see a Cottage Hospital. I know that many such hospitals are being founded, but may I crave a space in your columns to say that I can hardly conceive of a higher or better service for our poorer brothers and sisters, and for sick children, than further to establish these unpretending but most beneficent institutions. This is especially true with regard to places far removed from larger hospitals. The one I visited at Hammerwich was built in memory of Mr. T. B. Wright, the founder of the simultaneous hospital collections. Its erection did not cost a thousand pounds, and it is kept up most inexpensively. Hard by are Cannock Chase Collieries, and among the patients were three miners who had met with serious accidents in the pits. They seemed very softened, happy, and grateful, as they felt themselves surrounded with quiet home comforts and attentions. There were also three growing girls who were sufferers, and three little boys. These were all within easy reach of their mothers, and under the hourly watching of the one resident nurse.

The blessing of all this in a locality cannot be readily comprehended. There are cases of accident or sudden illness constantly occurring in country parishes. To take some of these sufferers a long journey to a city hospital or county infirmary is all but impossible. To leave them to suffer in their small cottages entails burdens and distresses all round, and places country labourers at a sore disadvantage with the residents in towns. To admit them to a Cottage Hospital is to give the grateful satisfaction to wives and husbands of being near to one another. In the case of poor suffering children the arrangement is unspeakably merciful, and often saves from life-long disabilities and poverties.

As I looked on the sweet content of the little patients in the humble hospital I visited, I asked, Why should not such homes of peace and healing be multiplied in our English counties? Once opened, a surgeon could come over from a neighbouring town, and a consulting physician would be near. The economy observed would command subscribers and collections in any neighbourhood; and, as in this case, the poor would willingly give their periodic pennies. I venture, then, to plead with those who have wealth, and would use it in a way pleasing to Him who "carried our sicknesses," to found such hospitals where they do not exist. If any information were needed, I am sure that in this case it would readily be supplied by the Rev. Robert Gordon, the Rectory, Hammerwich, near Lichfield.—Yours truly, WILLIAM GUEST.

Southport.

P.S.—Since the above was written I have learnt that the total cost of the district hospital I visited (for building, site, well, and boundary-walls, &c.) was £920, and for the furniture £140. The expenditure for 10¾ months has been £175. There are three wards (one extra for isolation), nurses' room, surgery, a roomy hall used for religious services, kitchens, and small bed-rooms.

SPECIAL MISSION TO ISRAEL.—Arrangements are being made during the approaching Jewish Feast of Tabernacles to conduct special services to Jews in East London. Christian ladies are wanted with good voices to form a small choir. As few ladies will be able to attend all the meetings, it is desired to have as many names as possible, in order to secure a sufficient attendance at each meeting. Full particulars may be obtained from Mr. S. Schor, 16, Glenarm-road, Clapton-park, E.; or Rev. J. B. Barraclough, 46, King Edward-road, Hackney, E.

Notes and Comments.

THIS (Thursday) evening a meeting is to be held at Exeter Hall, under the auspices of the London Missionary Society, to welcome the Revs. B. Briggs, G. Cousins, and G. A. Shaw, on their return from Madagascar.

Among the many Christian sisters who are doing the Church's work in caring for orphan girls, Mrs. Parsons, of Walthamstow, must not be forgotten. We should be glad to know that her Home, as well as that of Miss Mittendorff and others, was more liberally sustained than it recently has been. Prevention is better than cure, and from every point of view the care of orphan children, especially of girls, should be one of first consideration.

A leader in The Times of last week severely, and as we think unjustly, criticises Canon Wilberforce's energetic action in reference to the connection of the Church of England with the liquor traffic. It is time that all religious bodies should be stirred up to clear themselves of complicity with a trade which is universally admitted to lie at the root of the greater part of all our social miseries and crime. The Times itself lately used the following weighty words which we quoted at the time, and which will bear reproducing:—

"Drinking baffles us, confounds us, shames us, and mocks us at every point. It outwits alike the teacher, the man of business, the patriot, and the legislator. Every other institution flounders in hopeless difficulties; the public-house holds on its triumphal course."

A witness giving such a testimony should be the last to rebuke or in any way lessen the influence of one who, like the worthy Canon, seeks to arouse both Church and State to take a vigorous part in so stern a conflict.

The following letter from Rev. H. M. Davey, Oving Vicarage, Chichester, which appeared in The Times last week, is perhaps a severer condemnation even of the action of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners than the famous indictment by Canon Wilberforce:—

"I am incumbent of an agricultural parish, of which the Ecclesiastical Commissioners are lords of the manor, impropriotars of the great tithes, and owners of property bringing them in £3000 a year. In one part of the parish they own a public-house only 230 yards distant from another public-house. The number of houses within "drinkable" distance of both is under forty. Something may be said for the other public-houses as being required for the accommodation of travellers on the high road, but nothing for the Ecclesiastical Commissioners' beer-house. The farmers would be glad enough to see both abolished, as tending to the ruin and dismissal of many of their labourers. In another part of the parish is a population of 100 souls at an average distance of two miles from their parish church or any place of worship whatever.

"For this population I hold a service on a Sunday evening in a farm building kindly lent by a tenant of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. This entails a third service and a four miles' walk, in addition to the usual two services at the parish church, and cannot be continuous, by reason of there being an evening service in the parish church in the summer, and the darkness of the roads in winter. It might have been supposed that the Ecclesiastical Commissioners would have granted some assistance; but applications, both written and personal, have been refused. As the benefice is in public patronage—i.e., of the Bishop, in virtue of his bishopric—the payers of the great tithes think that some consideration might have been shown for the spiritual benefit of this portion of the parish, from which the Commissioners derive so large a revenue. So much for the duties and rights of property affecting this parish as exhibited by an ecclesiastical corporation."

The population of Japan, according to the census returns made this year, is 36,700,110, and is made up of 18,598,998 males, and 18,101,112 females. The number of inhabited houses is 7,611,770, giving an average of about five persons to each house.

The meetings of the British Association have been held at Southport, under the presidency of Mr. Arthur Cayley, Professor of Mathematics in the University of Cambridge. In our next issue we shall give a brief article on the gathering from the pen of our esteemed correspondent Rev. W. Guest.

We regret much to hear of the sudden and dangerous illness of Mrs. Ziemann, wife of Dr. Ziemann. Our brother was called to England on the very day on which he was to have started on an evangelistic Mission in the Province of Saxony. We commend him in this affliction to the sympathetic prayers of our readers.

Dr. Oswald Dykes, in his first sermon at Regent Square Presbyterian Church, after returning from his vacation, thus rebukes want of earnestness and depth in matters of religious experience:—

"We lead a pigmy life, methinks—a life out of all harmony with the faith we profess, if we think superficially, feel indifferently, resolve languidly, perform little. If we can chatter about religion, chatter with the same shallow glibness about the gloom of Calvary and the radiance of the celestial City—if we neither tremble for dread of judgment nor burn at the words of mercy—if the depths of our being are never stirred by our faith, nor its mightiest currents set in motion by the attraction of God's sacrifice, we are dwarfed in our spiritual development."

It is this dwarfish and emasculated type of spiritual life to which we owe much of the indifference and scepticism with which we are surrounded. Laodicean religion is powerless to convert the world, though powerful to paralyse the Church. We need to be often reminded of the greatness of the truths we believe, that we may be stirred to make our life worthy of them. Doctrinal soundness apart from experimental fervour is not only of little worth, but is dangerous to the interests of truth, and becomes, to many, a delusion and a snare. "The words which I speak unto you," said Jesus, "they are spirit, and they are life."

Special interest attaches to the unique circumstance of our Premier entertaining three crowned heads and their consorts, beside other eminent royal personages, on board the Pembroke Castle. It is interesting from every point of view. It has political interest, as indicating the present absence of any cause of disagreement between the Governments thus socially met together in the persons of their representatives. It has a social interest, as illustrating the spirit of friendship and goodwill which peace begets and fosters among the nations when it prevails. It has much literary interest, whether we think of our Poet Laureate entertaining the assembly with his own rich and rare productions, or of the translator of the ancient Homer receiving as his guest the King of Modern Greece. It is not without religious interest, as pointing to a time when all nationalities shall be brought round one common centre, and bound together in one social bond. Long may it be ere the possibility of such happy and friendly associations between the kings and rulers of Europe is disturbed.

A largely-attended and very hearty gathering of friends belonging to various sections of the Church was held at the Priory, Islington, on Tuesday last week, in view of the approaching services in an adjacent structure by Messrs. Moody and Sankey. The greatest cordiality and unanimity were shown with regard to the needful arrangements for assisting the evangelists, and all bids fair for a time of much spiritual blessing in the neighbourhood. The place of meeting is now in course of erection, and the meetings, as we have already announced, are expected to begin on the first Lord's day in November.

We have pleasure in announcing that the daily prayer-meeting at Mildmay Conference Hall will have special reference during the month of October to the approaching Mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in the neighbouring district of Highbury. Christian friends will be welcome at these daily meetings, from twelve to one o'clock; on Saturdays from five to six o'clock p.m. Our readers will have observed in our last issue a similar notice with respect to Exeter Hall.

Rev. W. H. Aitken purposes working in London during this autumn, specially with a view of following up and consolidating Mr. Moody's work. From October 21 to November 4 he will be at St. Peter's, Clerkenwell (Martyrs' Memorial Church); on the 18th he proposes beginning a Mission at Holy Trinity, Cloudesley-square, Islington. Earnest prayer is asked for these Missions.

The letter signed by eight Anglican Bishops in India, pleading for unity, and addressed to all of every race and religion in India and Ceylon, has been translated into various dialects, and widely circulated. Happily it is not bearing the fruit its authors desired. Its object was to set forth the Church of England as the only authorised means of conveying the Gospel to the people, and so to discredit all other agencies at work. It is hardly necessary to say that the document which thus regards all other Churches as inferior to that to which its authors belong, emanates from the High Church party, represented by, or representing the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. Bishop French, of Lahore, had the good sense as well as the Christian feeling not to sign an address which is calculated, as some of the native papers have said, to hinder Hindus and Mussulmans who read it from coming to Christ.

The Church Missionary Intelligencer, the organ of the Church Missionary Society, has thus openly rebuked and repudiated the spirit of those who have circulated the letter referred to:—

"We cannot but feel that if it had been written rather from the standpoint of our common Christianity, dwelling on the love of God for his wandering children, on the great redemption wrought out by that love, and on the message of that love to the world, such an appeal from the Bishops must have had great weight with thoughtful Hindus and Mohammedans, and might have stirred up many Christians, English and native, to more zealous efforts for the evangelisation of those around them. But this would have necessitated the admission that God is sending his message to India—as a matter of fact, and whether we like it or not—by others as well as by ourselves. A more cordial recognition of that fact on the part of the Bishops would, we verily believe, have been more honourable to the Church of England, and have tended in a far greater degree to commend her to the people of India."

In this all Christians possessed of the spirit of Christ must, we think, concur.

An important meeting of native Christians was held recently at Krishnaghar, Bengal, to consider whether it would be right for them to take part in the agitation which is now going on in the country, by means of secret societies and other disloyal methods. The chairman, Babu Behari Lal Chandra, thus spoke on the subject :—

"What is the duty of native Christians at such a time? Their duty is to be on the side of peace; to preach peace and goodwill to all. I have heard it said that the native Christians are a small and insignificant community, and that they can do nothing. We are not so very small a community as people generally suppose. There are at this moment more than a million and a half of native Christians in India. That is not a very insignificant or despicable number. But what if we are but a small community? Our task is not one that requires the aid of might and number. Surely that is a task that the poorest and the weakest may undertake without being guilty of presumption. Let each native convert go forth and tell his neighbours at least, if he can do no more, to avoid pestilential agitation, and to be peaceful and loyal; and, if they are really anxious to see the morning star of liberty, to wait for the coming of Him who is the root and offspring of David, the Bright and Morning Star."

Such words are a noble testimony to the power of Christianity, and the reality of its influence over the native mind and heart. They were followed by the unanimous adoption of resolutions to the effect that "the religion of Christ is the only effectual remedy for all evils, whether moral or social," that "whilst claiming the fullest and freest right to represent to the rulers any grievance, they yet disapproved of organisations having for their sole object political agitation;" and that "such agitations engender a spirit of deep and lawless revenge dangerous to the well-being of society, and native Christians should stand aloof from them." This fact speaks volumes for the vital hold the Gospel has taken upon its converts in India.

The Peace Society has published the following facts, setting forth what some would scarcely have expected as the views of the great warrior referred to :—

"The Duke of Wellington, in giving his reasons for conceding Catholic Emancipation, said (March 21, 1829): 'My Lords, I have passed more of my life in war than most men, and I may say in civil war; and if I could avoid, by any sacrifice whatever—if I could avoid, even for one month, a civil war in a country to which I am attached, I would sacrifice my life to do it.'

"Further, the Earl of Shaftesbury recently related the following incident: 'He once travelled to Hatfield with the great Duke of Wellington, who, as they passed through a lovely country, turned to him, after a long silence, and said, "Can you guess what I have been thinking of?" Being answered in the negative, he said, "I have been looking at this country, where everything is beautiful, and fills the heart with joy; and I was thinking that, if I had to take military possession of it, I should have to lay waste that beauty and dispel that joy and produce instead nothing but devastation and misery." Then the Duke added, with a depth of feeling he should never forget, "If you had seen but one day of war in the course of your life, you would pray before God that you might never see another." His Grace held that war was a most detestable thing.'"

War may sometimes be a necessity in a world where disordered minds and lawless passions rule so widely and so fiercely, but it can never be anything but a curse, and everything which fans the desire for it, or helps in any way to promote it, is a folly to be exposed, and a sin to be rebuked. We may admit that peace is dearly purchased at the price of principle, but for lack of a wider acceptance and adoption of the principles of peace, wars are engendered and entered on which might well have been prevented.

The painful and revolting extent to which slavery is carried on in Morocco has been fully admitted by Lord Granville in a recent despatch to Sir J. D. Hay, Her Majesty's representative at the Court of that Empire. It is gratifying to find the head of our Foreign Office giving directions on the matter in the following distinct and urgent terms :—

"Her Majesty's Government would, in the interests of humanity, make an earnest appeal to the Emperor, and ask him to consider whether the time has not come when he would be ready to place himself on a level with other civilised rulers by taking steps to abolish Slavery in his dominions. They are aware of the difficulty which the Government of the Emperor may meet in dealing with a long-established custom, but that difficulty has been found not to be insuperable by other Mahommedan Sovereigns. His Majesty might be assured that any step taken by him in this direction would be welcomed, not only in this country, but in the civilised world; whereas the position of his State, as the only territory bordering on the Mediterranean in which no effort is made to combat this evil, must become daily more intolerable in the eyes of all nations, whatever may be their religious creed. I have to instruct you to make a strong representation to the Moorish Government in this sense, and to lose no opportunity of renewing your efforts whenever a favourable opportunity may offer."

The Emancipation movement in Brazil proceeds with most encouraging speed, as the following cutting from the Anglo-Brazilian Times will show :—

"In Ceara, the head-quarters of the movement, the Quixeramobim Society commenced its existence March 25th with thirty-two emancipations of slaves. On the 11th of the same month a Society was inaugurated at Crato, when twenty slaves were freed; on the 18th the town of Pereira formed a Society, which is preparing to inaugurate with a number of liberations. Several emancipations since last mail are also reported from Pernambuco. In Amazonas a Bill has been brought in to vote 10,000 dollars to the Emancipation Society of Manaos, and at the opening of the library two slaves were freed."

The moral influence of a fact like that recorded concerning Condessa De Barral E Pedra Branca must be great in accelerating this great and good cause. She gave liberty on the 13th inst., her natal anniversary, to forty slaves, the last she possessed, making in all about one hundred she has gratuitously set free. Nothing contributes more to commend a principle to others than voluntary sacrifice in its behalf on the part of its advocates.

We would remind those of our readers who reside in or near London of the "Conference on Unfulfilled Prophecy," to be held at Rev. Chas. Graham's church, in Avenue-road, Shepherd's Bush, October 9—11. A deeper acquaintance with the prophetic portions of Scripture will help much in the understanding of many of the signs of the time, especially those that relate to the present position and future prospects of the Jewish people. We trust these gatherings may, by the illuminating influences of the Spirit of Truth, brighten many a page of the sacred records.

A large and influential Committee embracing various Protestant Societies has been formed, under the presidency of Earl Shaftesbury, for the purpose of arranging for the due celebration in London of the Luther commemoration. In these circumstances the Committee previously formed by the Evangelical Alliance has agreed to dissolve in order that there may be no seeming division of interest. In taking this step the Alliance Committee express "their cordial desire for the complete success of the movement inaugurated."

Dr. Baedeker left England on the 24th inst., to attend a Conference at Leitmeritz, in Bohemia; also to visit several places in Austria, Hungary, Bulgaria, S. Russia. We commend our devoted and apostolic brother to the earnest prayers of our readers.

The remarks at Llanidloes of Mr. Homersham Cox, the County Court Judge, concerning perjury in Wales, which we referred to in our last, appear to have roused considerable indignation throughout the Principality. So far as they make Wales to appear worse than other parts of the world in reference to falsehood, they are undoubtedly unjust and uncalled-for. County Court Judges all over the land could speak of similar experiences, and in some cases probably with even more reason. Wales will certainly bear comparison with other districts both as to religion and morals.

In a letter to The Daily News, Mr. Cox vindicates himself from the charge of throwing special opprobrium upon the Welsh people, and expresses his admiration of many traits in the Welsh character; nevertheless, he adheres to his statement as to the prevalence of perjury in connection with County Court trials. He says, however, that it is rarely found among the commercial and middle-classes, but exists mainly among those whose children attend the Board Schools. He remarks, as follows, on the need of more attention being given to moral training in connection with our Government system of education :—

"I suspect that the teaching of morals in those schools is sometimes defective. For my part I would sooner have a child taught the wickedness of lying than the latitude and longitude of Ispahan or the date of the battle of Blenheim."

These are words of truth and soberness If the evil complained of should be more fully seen, and its correction in any degree promoted by Mr. Cox's utterances, no one will have reason to complain. Truthfulness does need, all the world over, to be inculcated, and falsehood to be severely condemned.

Congregationalism in Ireland clearly has a mission to perform, and its adherents are alive to the fact. The annual meetings of the Irish Congregational Union have just been held in Dublin, and the report read by Rev. J. Irvine, of Kingstown, indicated healthy progress. Dr. Eustace Conder, of Leeds, attended as a delegate from the Congregational Union of England and Wales, and preached during the proceedings to a large congregation, a united Communion service following his sermon. The subjects chosen for conference appear to have been eminently conducive to spiritual life and progress.

Considering the widespread influence exerted by those in high office under the Government, it is matter for much thankfulness that an increasing number of these positions is being filled by men of earnest and pronounced Christian character. The mind readily recurs to such examples as Mr. S. A. Blackwood, Secretary to the Post Office, Mr. Willis, Accountant and Comptroller-General of the Navy, and others less known to the public. We are glad to know that to the list may now be added another, Mr. A. Pennefather, who has been appointed as Receiver of Metropolitan Police. We feel sure that all who, in different parts of London, are seeking the spiritual welfare of this important class of our vast community, will have a hearty sympathiser in the person of the new Receiver.

In connection with the discussion in The Daily Telegraph as to what to do with our boys, a practical offer of a very substantial kind has been made. A gentleman, signing himself "Middle Class," has offered to contribute £10,000 towards a scheme for establishing special schools all over the country for training in all branches of technical study—chemistry, agriculture, and so forth, the schools to be worked on sound business principles. There is an abundant supply of schools and colleges for the wealthy, and the School Board system provides adequately for the poor, but for middle-class education there is but little suitable provision made. Reform in this direction is a want felt by thousands in our land.

We have received the prospectus of a new and important work about to be published by Messrs. Funk & Wagnalls, New York. It is entitled "The Theocratic Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, as Covenanted in the Old Testament and Presented in the New Testament. By Rev. Geo. N. H. Peters, A.M." The work will be issued in three volumes at three dollars each, provided a sufficient number of subscribers be secured. Our friend, Dr. Brookes, of St. Louis, says: "It is the most complete and exhaustive discussion that has been prepared of the important subject of which it treats." Many other prophetic students give similar testimony. The prospectus may be obtained from the author, whose address is 35, Mound-street, Springfield, Ohio, U.S.A.

The article in our last issue on "The Theatre in France" is applicable, we fear, to other lands besides that referred to, and calls for serious reflection. Having regard to such facts, we deeply regret to find men of influence in the Christian Church lending their aid to advance the influence of the theatre. Dr. Donald Macleod and Rev. W. Tulloch are mentioned as among those present at a recent banquet given in Glasgow in honour of a well-known actor. "Let Glasgow flourish by the preaching of the Word" has long been the motto of the fine old Scotch city. The Lord Provost at the same banquet said, "Glasgow would flourish none the less that her people were better patrons of the theatre." Viewing the modern theatre as it is, and not as it might or ought to be, we should be disposed to say that the exact opposite is nearest the truth.

We rejoice to find that the Trades Union Congress at Nottingham passed a resolution calling upon the Government to complete the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts. It is a working men's question. It is their class, as well as that of the cottager, the small farmer, and the minor tradesman, that chiefly recruits the ranks of the "unfortunate," the "gay," the "frail," the "fallen;" call them by whatever name we please, but they are our sisters still. It is their firesides that are desolated, it is their daughters and sisters whose lives are blasted, in order to supply victims for the luxurious, the sensual, and the depraved. A surgeon employed under these hateful Acts, who was asked what classes especially were contemplated by its provisions replied, "milliners and dressmakers, wives of labourers and small tradesmen, and domestic servants, of course." If this degrading legislation is not doomed, then this realm of England is doomed; her violent and fraudulent dealing with her own children will come down upon her own pate. For righteousness and judgement are the foundations of God's throne.

Dr. Culross has been publicly welcomed at Bristol as the successor of Dr. Gotch in the presidency of the Baptist College there. The late president is honoured and beloved wherever known, and takes with him in his retirement the grateful and loving respect of all. In every way it is a cause for congratulation to the friends of the College that such a man as Dr. Culross, whose praise is in all the churches, both as an author and as a Christian minister devoted to the Gospel of Christ, should be found to fill the place. Long may the rising ministry trained at the College be blessed with his influence and counsel.

A country correspondent of The Daily Telegraph raises a question of considerable importance in its columns. The proposal is that a kitchen and dining-room should be attached to infant-schools, and that the very poor children should be provided with plain and wholesome meals, the children being thus saved the journey to their homes in the middle of the day. The writer, in justification of his project, says that in his own limited experience he has met with many cases of very young children who had passed the entire day with barely enough food to save them from starvation. We do not know how far the scheme is feasible on any organised scale, but there can be no doubt of the need for such philanthropic action. As far as the poor children in several districts of London are concerned, the London Samaritan Society has been meeting this need very successfully during the past two winters.

SPITALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.

THIS Mission is so intimately associated with the name of William Joseph Lewis, that it will be impossible ever to break the union. Those in connection with the hall who have been brought to the Lord Jesus, through his many years' labour, feel his loss very keenly. For just over seventeen years it has been my happy privilege to be his fellow-worker and companion in the Gospel of Christ. And I can testify to his devoted and self-denying life for the benefit of the perishing in Spitalfields. Like many others of the Lord's labourers at the East-end, he has stood the heat and burden of many days, counting it his highest pleasure to spend and be spent for God's glory and the salvation of the people.

I have had every opportunity of knowing his manner of life, purpose, doctrine, practice, &c., and as, in the providence of God, it falls to me to fill his important position, my earnest prayer is, "May the faithful, persevering spirit of this Elijah rest on Elisha."

It is no new work on which I enter, seeing I am personally acquainted with the congregation, workers, and neighbourhood generally. It is a field of labour where the precious seed of the Kingdom has been sown for years. I verily believe there is an abundant harvest to be gathered in yet. Feeling my own weakness, I do ask earnestly the prayers of God's people on the behalf of myself and fellow-workers.—Yours truly in Christ, James Sharpless.

YOUNG WOMEN IN MANCHESTER.—The Business Young Women's Association of Manchester have recently opened a second branch house, at 69, Ardwick-green. The new establishment, which was formally opened by the Bishop of Manchester, in July last, has been tastefully furnished, and contains accommodation for sixty boarders, besides various class-rooms, a large reception-room, &c. It consists of three houses thrown into one. Miss Havelock, the daughter of the late General Sir Henry Havelock, has kindly come from London to undertake the duties of honorary lady secretary to the Association, and the house is under the management of Miss Littler, of London, as resident superintendent.

WORDS AND DEEDS.

BY JAMES H. HOADLEY.

THEY do the least
Who talk the most;
Whose good designs
Are all their boast;
For words are dew.

They do the most
Whose lives possess
The sterling stamp
Of righteousness;
For deeds are true.

And if the heart
Be pure and good
The life will be
Just what it should—
Not dew but true.

MRS. MUMFORD IN PHILIPPOPOLIS.

THE past year has been a very prosperous one with the school conducted by this servant of the Lord. During its progress a very powerful revival of religion occurred, in which nearly all of the unbelieving pupils were converted, and the spirituality of the school greatly deepened. Some items from a letter just received from Miss Knapp, Mrs. Mumford's assistant, will indicate the character of the scholars.

"Dilla Stoclava, who has been here about three years, went with a brother, after the school was out, to Marachlava, their own village, and stayed there about two weeks. She called here yesterday, and made the following statements about her people. They have a Protestant Church, but are at present without a pastor. Many of the people, she says, have become Christians since she was there. One woman, who formerly talked much against the truth, now attends church, and prays from the heart. Dilla went round to many of the houses, read to the people, and talked with them about their eternal welfare. She is anxious that God shall give her a place where she can work for Him. She will make a first-rate Biblewoman.

"Stephana, the best scholar in the school, who made great advancement spiritually the last year, thus writes in English, not one word misspelled: 'My parents do not let me go to the meetings. I think I must not feel too bad about it, because God works so that I may show them the right way.' She desired much to go to America, but her father refused to let her go. 'I am very sorry, indeed,' she adds; 'but it seems to be God's will.'

"Talka, another scholar, will probably not return. If not, it will be because she is prevented by her parents for the reason that she is a Christian, and is leading a Christian's life. Such facts greatly encourage us in our work."

Mrs. Asa Mahan, who forwards to us these particulars, says that 27, Ceylon-place, Eastbourne, will be her future address.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for week ending October 6:—Sept. 30, Psalm lxxxiv. 1-12; Oct. 1, Ezra i. 1-11; Oct. 2, Ezra iii. 1-13; Oct. 3, Ezra iv. 1-10; Oct. 4, Ezra iv. 11-24; Oct. 5, Ezra v. 1-17; Oct. 6, Ezra vi. 1-12.

RELIEF OF PERSECUTED JEWS.—Dear Sir,—We have just received most interesting accounts of our Cyprus colony who have taken possession of the land granted by our Government at Kuklia. This is none other than the ancient Paphos, so that here we are upon the footsteps of St. Paul. Our Jews are hard at work digging wells for water, clearing the brushwood from the ground, and pruning the old fruit trees that exist on the hill sides. They find the soil excellent. Some rain has already fallen. It is of urgent importance to give them the money to build their dwellings and sow their seed. Nearly £400 has been sent us of the £1600 lately asked for in your columns. The British authorities are helping these Jews with utmost kindness, and now to British Christians we recommend their pressing wants. E. A. Finn.

CITY YOUNG MEN.

THERE was no small stir at 186, Aldersgate-street on Monday evening last week. It was "the opening day" of the educational session, and the youth of the City mustered in force. They swarmed in like bees during the tea hour, and by eight o'clock there was hardly a foot of vacant space in the lecture hall. The Aldersgate-street friends recognise the importance of making a good start; so they very shrewdly arrange that the prizes gained during the last term shall be publicly distributed on the first day of this. A young man may be lukewarm in the desire to sharpen his intellect and increase his store of useful knowledge, and yet he may not be indifferent to the satisfaction and éclat that attend the receipt of a prize in the presence of some hundreds of his fellows. We do not quarrel with the feeling, though it may not be a very exalted one. As the speaker at the noon prayer-meeting the same day remarked, "We all need to be supported to some extent by the consciousness of success." Anyhow, the young men came, whatever may have been the varied motives that prompted them, and we feel sure none of them went away disappointed. If they continue to attend throughout the winter in anything like the same numbers, Mr. Burn and his advisers will have to take serious counsel together about the enlargement of their borders.

Mr. Samuel Morley in the chair was the right man in the right place; with much geniality and bon hommé he gave away the handsome bundles of books to the fortunate fellows in the second row, emphasising each prize with a hearty hand shake. We mentally put the question to ourselves once and again during the ceremony, "Where can all these beautiful and valuable books come from?" We had our answer when Mr. Burn solved the mystery by saying that they were the generous gift of the Chairman himself, Mr. George Williams, Mr. Allcroft, and others. Verily the commercial youths of the City may well be proud of such large-hearted and constant friends as they possess in these Christian gentlemen.

The prizes and certificates were given for proficiency in the study of animal physiology, French, German, Spanish, Latin, Greek, English composition and grammar, arithmetic, shorthand, writing, singing, &c.

The Chairman's words to the young men were grave and weighty, as they always are. He feared there was much less serious study among young men, and more pleasure-seeking than prevailed a generation ago; he was glad, therefore, to see so many joining these classes, and seeking to qualify themselves for future usefulness. He very pithily observed that, in the matter of early closing, young men will materially increase their chances of further shortening the hours of toil by showing that they make good use of the leisure hours they have got.

These educational classes, though highly important in themselves, are rightly considered in the Y.M.C.A. scheme as largely a means to an end; that end, in brief, is the conversion of the young men to Christ and his service. So the spiritual needs of the company were not forgotten in the evening's programme. When the Chairman had closed his remarks, addresses followed from three reverend gentlemen.

Mr. Gaster exhorted his younger brethren to place a high value on the revealed Word of God, to attach themselves to some Christian community, and to recognise the fact that they could serve God in the commonest pursuits of daily life. He was severe on those who neglect the duty they owe to their earthly master, that they may engage in what they call "direct religious work." Mr. Horton, of Hampstead, greatly delighted the crowded audience by his thoughtful and able defence of the alliance between culture and faith. Despite the fancied and oft-asserted antagonism between the two, he maintained that nothing deepens and widens true faith so much as culture. Time did not permit Mr. Horton to expand his interesting theme as he had intended, but we hope some early opportunity may be afforded him of doing so. No subject is of more pressing import to the young men of this learned but sceptical age. Mr. Smith, of Berwick, completed the trio of addresses (in the unexpected absence of Mr. Ossian Davies) by an earnest and admirable exposition of the faithful, manly witness borne by the Hebrew youths at the Court of Babylon to the law and commandment of their God.

DARK MOROCCO AND THE KABYLE MISSION.

DEAR SIR,—You will be glad to hear that an effort is being made to carry the Gospel to the inhabitants of "Dark Morocco," concerning whom a letter from Mr. Mackintosh appeared in The Christian of August 16. The Council of the Kabyle Mission which has lately been joined by several ardent friends of Mission work abroad, determined at its last meeting to include Morocco within the scope of its operations.

More than 3,000,000 of the inhabitants of Morocco are of similar origin and character and of kindred language to the Kabyles, and up till now have been totally unevangelised. Tangiers is the diplomatic capital of Morocco, and the gate of north-west Africa. Near it are to be found 200,000 Riffs, who, like the Kabyles, are of Berber origin. In Tangiers also may be found some of the Sous people, also of Berber origin; their home is farther south, where, at least, 3,000,000 of them live. Moors, Jews, and mixed Europeans also reside in Tangiers, while inhabitants of the Sahara and the Soudan find their way there either for trade, or on pilgrimage to Mecca.

The experience of Mr. Mackintosh and other information teach us that there is now an open door and a readiness to hear the Gospel, which is remarkable among a Mohammedan people. In Tangiers, therefore, we have decided to open our first station, and from thence make known "The glorious Gospel of the blessed God" in Morocco.

Mrs. Johnson and Mr. and Mrs. Mackintosh having informed us that they had seen a large and substantial house, built by an English gentleman close to Tangiers, and that it was now for sale on reasonable terms, it was decided, if the title, &c., proved satisfactory, to purchase it. Inquiries having been made, it has now been arranged to buy the house, premises, and garden of two acres, originally costing £4000, for £2250; the money to be paid by December 25. The vendor has kindly promised to give £250 towards the Mission, and we have also another promise of £100 and some shares in a mine of which at present we do not know the exact value. We are sure that many of your readers will feel it a privilege to assist us in starting this, the first Mission to the natives of Morocco.

Mr. and Mrs. Mackintosh return to Tangiers in October, for six months, under the auspices of the Bible Society, after which they will give themselves to the work of the Kabyle Mission there. Their long experience as missionaries among Mohammedans in Egypt and Syria, and their knowledge of the Arabic language, eminently fit them for pioneers in this important work. We are also glad to report that the second half of the mission-house at Djemaa Sahridj, in Kabylia, is nearly ready to go into, and Mr. Lamb, who has been improving his French by working with M. L. Dégremont, pastor at Boulogne, starts with his family on October 1, to occupy it. He and his wife will have, as fellow-workers there, Miss Gillard and Miss Wördler. Mr. G. Pearse, with the enterprise and energy which have always characterised him, goes forth to find other dark spots amongst the Kabyles, where centres of light may be established.

I hope to accompany Mr. Lamb and his family, and see them settled at Djemaa Sahridj, and also see that the house is furnished according to contract. We have not been able yet to put up the verandah or to dig the well, but intend doing so when we have sufficient funds, which, doubtless, will be before long.

Yours faithfully in Christ,
E. H. Glenny, Hon. Sec.

Barking, Essex, Sept. 22.

THE CONTINENT AND ARBITRATION.

MR. HENRY RICHARD, M.P., and the Committee of the English Peace Society, are directing their practical attention to the advocacy of International Arbitration on the Continent. On September 13, Mr. Richard read a paper on this question at the International Law Conference at Milan, presided over by Sir Travers Twiss. He also introduced and carried a resolution expressing satisfaction at the increasing proofs of the willingness of the chief Powers of Christendom to resort to Arbitration for the settlement of their disputes, and embodying a suggestion that in every treaty henceforth there shall be inserted an arbitral clause similar to the one just adopted in the Treaty concluded between Great Britain and Italy. Mr. Richard is about to visit other cities of Europe, with a view to enlist the sympathies of influential men further in this movement.

The Committee of the Peace Society also recently despatched their organising secretary, Mr. William Jones, on a visit to the chief Continental capitals, on a similar mission in advocacy of arbitration. He has had interesting and encouraging interviews with influential statesmen, jurists, editors, and professors, in Rome, Vienna, Berlin, Brussels, the Hague, Paris, and other places. The Committee have further rendered active aid lately to the movement in progress in North Europe for the neutralisation of the Scandinavian lands. The increasingly favourable and frequent references to the question of Arbitration by Continental statesmen and journalists afford indications that efforts like the above are tending to produce encouraging results.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE NOTES.

South Wales.—Dr. J. W. Kirton has just been holding a series of very successful Gospel Temperance Meetings in Swansea, Merthyr Tydvil, Aberdare, and other towns in the locality. Large numbers have donned the blue ribbon and taken the pledge. On Sunday, the 22nd, Dr. Kirton opened a seven days' Gospel Temperance Mission at Crediton. He is supported by a number of the local ministers and laymen.

Mr. T. E. Murphy in Ireland.—This earnest advocate of Temperance has been holding successful meetings at Coleraine, Maghera, and Garvagh. His method of urging the question of total abstinence has made a good impression wherever he has gone. The crowds which have attended the meetings, the numbers that have signed the pledge, and the enthusiastic receptions he has received, are all evidences of the manner in which the work is spreading throughout the land.

London.—During the past week a vigorous campaign has been in progress in the north, south, and east of the metropolis. It is gratifying to see that there is apparently no diminution of interest in this movement, though there does not appear to be any special attraction offered in the way of "star" orators. At Morley Hall, Hackney, the meetings are reported to have been most enthusiastic. At Kilburn and Brixton Rise there have been large assemblages of people from night to night; both by speech and song the advantages of total abstinence have been earnestly set forth, and many have been induced to enrol themselves in the ranks of the water drinkers. We trust the tide may continue to rise till the growth of public opinion shall sweep away the temptations to indulgence that are now so rife in our midst.

A HINDOO LADY of Brahminical caste has gone to the United States to study medicine. In thus acting, she renounces her caste. Her intention is to labour for the elevation of women in her own land.

CHURCH ARMY.—There is an increasing demand for officers of the Church Army from the parochial clergy. Devout men are urgently needed at once, who will be willing for a bare subsistence to face a life of hardship. We can only account for the many openings for this class of aggressive work by the fact that (1) The officers are under the local clergy; (2) they are self-supporting by their own collections; (3) every four or five months they are exchanged for others.—Yours faithfully, W. Carlile.

Christian Conferences.

Y.M.C.A. CONFERENCE, MONTROSE.

THE thirteenth annual conference of delegates from the Y.M.C.A.'s in Scotland was held at Montrose, on 18th, 19th, and 20th inst. The attendance was the largest ever known, and the whole of the proceedings were characterised by a high spiritual tone, with an enthusiastic display of loyalty to Christ and brotherly love. A very prominent place in the addresses delivered and papers read was given to the importance of well sustained and systematic evangelistic effort.

The report presented by the Executive showed that there are in Scotland 200 Y.M.C.A.'s and Fellowship Unions, being an increase of twenty-nine over the previous year. The reported membership is over 20,000, showing an increase of 3000 since the last annual meeting.

Mr. Hind Smith, Exeter Hall, attended as a deputation from the English National Council. At the first meeting Mr. George Williams, of St. Paul's Churchyard, London, sent a telegraphic message greeting the delegates in the name of the English brethren.

GREENOCK.

The sixth Christian Conference took place in the Temperance Institute here on Saturday, Sept. 15. The meetings were very largely attended, many strangers being present from the neighbouring towns and villages. Mr. H. F. Bowker presided.

The subject of Conference was "Waiting on God," and was opened up by the Rev. E. H. Hopkins in a very clear and interesting manner. Rev. Dr. Elder Cumming spoke on Psa. lxii. 5: "My soul, wait thou only upon God, for my expectation is from Him," laying stress on the necessity for "time," "submission," "watchfulness," "service," and "expectation." Mr. William Sloan, Rev. John M. Sloan, and Mr. Bowker closed the two hours allotted to the subject by some good thoughts on consecration, rest, keeping, and freedom from the dominion and tyranny of former sins. Mr. Richard Hill thereafter gave a very stirring address to Christian workers, exhorting them by Scripture and example to zeal, readiness, carefulness, preparedness, and fruitfulness in work for God.

After tea the Conference resumed to hear reports of Christian work from Skelmorlie, Glasgow, Maryhill, Gibraltar and Malta, Motherwell, Port Glasgow, Renfrew, and Paisley. These were of a most cheering and stimulating character. The closing address was given by Rev. E. H. Hopkins, from Rom. xii. 1, 2, and the whole Conference was felt to be a very gracious time, and many thus "waiting on God" have, we trust, renewed their strength, while chastened and humbled, yet "strong in the Lord and in the power of his might."

DUNDEE.

FIRST DAY.

The meetings of this Conference began on September 18, in the Kinnaird Hall. The general subject this year for all the meetings was "The Holy Spirit and his Work." Provost Moncur introduced the subject, and spoke particularly of the work of the Spirit as the great Christian Instructor. He said this subject was one not only of the highest importance, but one which they did well to confer on at the present time, when the Holy Spirit's work was being denied or ignored or misunderstood. After noticing the prominent place given in the New Testament to the work of the Spirit, and our Lord's promise of his coming, he remarked that culture, education, and other elevating influences were not to be despised; but while these might tend to civilise, there was only one power that could Christianise and regenerate, and that was the Holy Spirit by the Gospel of Jesus Christ. If the great need of the world at present was the Holy Spirit, the same might be said of the Church. It was a favourite complaint with many that the pulpit had lost its power. The cause was that the Gospel was not preached with the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven. They had in some pulpits no Gospel, and therefore no possibility of spiritual power; in others, the Gospel was preached orthodoxily enough, but in word only, not in power and in the demonstration of the Holy Ghost. Thereafter Rev. William Grant, Edinburgh, spoke on the Spirit's work in giving assurance and comfort; and Rev. Benjamin Martin, Leslie, on "Spiritual Communion and Service."

The afternoon meeting was conversational. The subject was—"Being Filled with the Spirit." It was spoken to by Revs. J. Hudson Taylor, of China; Mr. Reid, M'Cheyne Church; John Macpherson; Malcolm White, of Blairgowrie; Andrew Inglis; Mr. Forsaith, of Sydney, New South Wales; William Grant, of Edinburgh; and Gavin Anderson. Thereafter a meeting specially for prayer for children and young people was held.

In the evening, to an eager and interested audience, Rev. W. R. Nicol, Kelso, spoke very impressively on "The Love of the Spirit," showing that this was a compassionate, a patient, and a sensitive love. Mr. George Muller, of Bristol, delivered an evangelistic address on Enoch's walk with God, and Rev. William Grant, Edinburgh, gave the concluding address of the evening on the Gospel law of liberty.

SECOND DAY.

At the second day's meetings the subject for consideration was "The work of the Holy Spirit in the Church." At eleven o'clock the chair was taken by Rev. Dr. Murray Mitchell, who addressed the meeting on the effect of the Spirit's work on the purity, progress, and joy of the Church of Christ. Mr. George Muller, of Bristol, spoke on the Spirit of God as the spring of life, power, and blessing in the services of the Church; Rev. J. Campbell, of Kirkcaldy, on the work of the Spirit in enabling the Church to be a blessing to the world and a benefit to men.

At two o'clock a conversational meeting was held. The subject for consideration was, "Signs and causes of deadness in the Churches, and how it may be removed." Rev. Mr. Tulloch, of Dundee, spoke of the signs of deadness, viz., prayerlessness, formalism, worldliness; then of the causes of it—unconverted ministers and unconverted membership, lack of systematic study of the Word of God, the want of loving oversight of the members of the Church, lax discipline, and disunion of Christians. He concluded with suggesting as remedies a conviction of the evil felt by the Church, earnest desire for revival, confession of sin and forsaking it, and consecration by the Spirit. Rev. Gavin Anderson, Dr. Baxter, Mr. Falconer, Mr. Owers, Mr. Inglis, Mr. Anderson, Aberdeen, and some others took part. Rev. J. Wilson summed up the conversation, after which a short meeting for prayer for the young was held.

In the evening the hall was densely filled with an intensely interested audience. Rev. Dr. Fleming Stevenson, of Dublin, delivered a powerful address on "The Pentecostal Church: a Model." In gifts and graces the Church came into the world like Adam, in manhood, in its prime. Pentecost is only the beginning of a great epoch, a great history—the history of the Church. To-day belongs to it as much as the upper room and the tongues of fire. If ever it should seem to us like a Paradise Lost, we must remember that it can be a Paradise regained. There are two boundaries of the life of Jesus Christ—the Incarnation and the Resurrection. The Incarnation is the triumph of his love; the resurrection, of his power. There are two boundaries of the Church—Pentecost and the Millennium. The triumph of his power, its majesty, even of its love, is yet to come. The source from which it draws its life is high above us in heavenly places, among the everlasting hills of God, and who can tell how high the stream may rise? The conditions of Pentecost are the conditions still. There is the same Spirit, the same Word, the same Presence of the Lord. It is our test, our standard, our model. If we wish for Christian thought to be more elevated, consistent, spiritual, and potential; for more devoutness and intensity in worship: more trust and rest in prayer; for more fellowship that will be abiding, unity like that for which Christ prayed, service that will be complete in its consecration, a holy energy of faith and love that will subdue the world, a march of the Church across the fields of heathen thought and heathen life, we will do well to turn to those first days and find the secret there.

The early Christians went straight to the Word. They were marked by a profound and simple reverence for its truths, a reverence that was accompanied by a spirit of eager inquiry. In this doubting and hesitating age we want that passionate loyalty to the Bible. In the worship of that time what joy in prayer, what boldness and reality, what simple, heavenly thoughts. When our hearts are full of Christ we shall not mourn over unfilled churches. In their life they seized the root-idea of fellowship. In their work they caught the spirit of it directly from Christ. They realised the great mission of the Church to go out and teach all nations.

Rev. J. Campbell, of Kirkcaldy, followed with an earnest address; and Mr. Hudson Taylor, of the China Inland Mission, spoke of the work there, and cited cases of conversion through the reading of the Gospels.

THIRD DAY.

Mr. Balfour, Edinburgh, in the morning addressed the meeting on the subject for the day, "The work of the Holy Spirit in the World." He was succeeded by Dr. Fleming Stevenson, of Dublin, on "The Gospel as the grand instrument of the Holy Spirit in the work of convincing men of sin, and converting them to the Lord;" and Mr. J. Hudson Taylor, of the China Inland Mission, gave instances of the power of the Spirit in bringing men to the Lord among the Chinese.

At two o'clock the missionary meeting of the Conference was held. Mr. Hudson Taylor described the progress of Christian Missions in that land, and illustrated his remarks by means of a large map of the country. He reported wonderful success of late years in the evangelisation of the land, and said that among all classes of the native communities there were those who were both leading Christian lives themselves and propagating Christianity among their fellow-countrymen.

Dr. Murray Mitchell, from India, told of the progress of the Gospel in Japan and in India, and especially he described the wretched condition of the women of India, and the happy work for their elevation and salvation undertaken by the women of this country, and called zenana work—i.e., in the homes of the females, which are now quite open to English education and Christian influences. Rev. D. M'Kichan, Free Church missionary, Bombay, spoke of encouraging Christian work in Western India. Dr. Fleming Stevenson concluded the meeting with a short address on the benefit of Christian Missions.

In the evening the Hall was densely crowded with an audience deeply interested in the addresses delivered. Rev. Mr. M'Kichan, Bombay, spoke of the power of the Gospel to bring salvation to the heathen in India, and urged his hearers in this land also to make sure of their own interest in its saving provisions. Thereafter Rev. Mr. Kennedy, Perth, and Mr. James Balfour gave evangelistic addresses. The whole series of Conference meetings have been highly appreciated by a very large number of the citizens of Dundee.

LADIES' MEETINGS AT PERTH.

An evangelistic meeting for women was held on Monday evening, the 10th, when Mrs. Gibson gave an address on Rom. vi. 23. Miss Maitland presided at the tea-meeting on Tuesday, at which Miss Poulton gave some account of the working of the British Syrian Schools. In Tyre, where the population has doubled during the last three years, 300 are attending the schools for boys, girls, and the blind. There is great need for a new school there, the old one having fallen. The centre of the work is at Beyrout, where there is a large Training Institution. The girls here are thoroughly prepared for work, learn habits of self-control, as well as many useful lessons.

Madame Rodriguez told of her work at Figueras, in the north of Spain. The great difficulty is the persecution of those who confess arist. One man was murdered simply for pplying evergreens for Christmas decorations. he people rose in such indignation at this, that e priest was obliged to leave, and at the eetings which followed, the widow of the mur-red man was the first convert. It was long fore the people would come out and confess arist. One night Pastor Rodriguez preached Daniel iii., and urged them to do this. At e close thirty-seven came and said they were illing to confess. Three of these were turned t of employment and excommunicated. The ork is carried on in eight schools, two Sunday-hools, and two halls for preaching. Of 6,000,000 inhabitants in Spain, only 4,000,000 n read. There are sixty-three villages round out Figueras, in some of which the pastor and s brothers have meetings and distribute gospels, acts, and cards with texts. A Strangers' Rest the Port of Rosas is much required.

Miss Florence Campbell gave an interesting ccount of her work among railway-men in ondon in connection with Mildmay. This work nsists principally of services at Liverpool-reet and other stations, with prayer-meetings nd occasional tea-meetings. The women are eached as well as the men. In several cases usband and wife have been brought in together. here has been so much blessing that many of he ungodly are now afraid to come to the eetings; others are kept away by fear of man. Much prayer is needed for this work.

Miss Mackay, of the Free Church Mission, at gpore, gave some account of the Zenana ork there, in which she has been engaged ve years. The women enjoy hearing hymns ng, and the reading of simple books, such as Peep of Day."

Miss Mudie, from Montrose, gave a most teresting account of the recent awakening at erryden. This is the fourth revival since 859, and it is said to have been the deepest nd most widespread of all. Some of the ord's praying people were growing discouraged ecause the blessing was so long in coming, but hen it did come in such fulness, it took them y surprise. They were surprised, too, at the eason—the beginning of the herring-fishery, he busiest time in the year. They had some-mes asked for blessing in the bright summer ays, but the former revivals had come during he winter months, when the people were at ome and nothing to do. They had been sur-rised, further, at the instrumentality used. At he close of a Blue Ribbon meeting, in January, here was a little prayer-meeting. Those per-ons hardly knew who else was there, but they ll realised the Lord's presence in a way they ad never felt before. After this came the great wakening; those who had families had every ember brought in. All were ready for the rst call to work. One lady is now working ith Miss Bilborough at Marchmont.

Mrs. Malcolm, of Burnfoot, presided at the a-meeting on Wednesday. After prayer had een offered by Mrs. Barbour, letters were read om Mrs. Gordon, of Parkhill, and from Lady ebright inviting those who had known Miss eamish, to contribute to the Memorial Building t Spa.

Miss Campbell gave a short account of work mong soldiers carried on by the late Mrs. Daniells, her daughter, and others, work which ften illustrates the truth of the saying, "One oweth and another reapeth."

Miss Puilt told of Miss de Broen's work in Paris. She asked for prayer, sympathy, and orkers. Miss de Broen is very anxious to build new Medical Mission room. The iron tent ow used for that purpose is required for a school.

Mrs. McWilliam said a few words about work one in Aberdeenshire. Miss Lloyd spoke of ork among prisoners, and would be glad of help om young ladies willing to write letters to risoners; 15,000 letters were sent out last hristmas. Her address is Nine Elms Mission, Vandsworth, London, S.W.

On Thursday afternoon there was a meeting f the secretaries and referees of the Scotch Branch of the Y.W.C.A. Mrs. Malcolm pre-ded, and said a few words on Christ feeding he five thousand. She suggested that great are was needed in visiting members who are in ervice, to avoid all appearance of interfering and unsettling servants in their places. As a Christian Association our chief interest should be in the spiritual welfare of our members. Mrs. Malcolm thanked the various branches who had sent contributions of work for her sale on behalf of the Y.W.C.A. More than £30 had been raised by this effort. There had been a proposal to change the time of the Week of Prayer for Women, but it was found best to keep to the second week of February for prayer, while special evangelistic meetings might be arranged for the beginning of winter, or any other suitable time.

Miss Murray Gaetshon gave in the report for the past year, and read a letter from Mrs. Gordon about the "Union de Prières pour les jeunes filles" in Switzerland. Mrs. Cupples gave in her report of the Servants' Registry in Edinburgh, and several secretaries gave short accounts of what was going on in their various branches.

At a meeting in connection with the Christian Women's Education Union on Friday afternoon, Miss Cavendish said a few words on 1 Thes. v. 8, "For an helmet the hope of salvation," dwelling specially on the need of having the head protected by this hope at the present time. Two colleges have grown out of this Union, Miss Maynard's College for those who are anxious to prosecute their studies after leaving school, and the Training Institution for Foreign Missions. Miss Cavendish was glad to find that the work had made satisfactory progress in Scotland. She read a letter from the Countess of Aberdeen accepting the office of President of the Scotch Branch of the C.W.E.U.

Miss Lloyd gave a short account of the work done by the Training Institute, and urged all to do the thing that lay nearest to them, instead of wasting their time in waiting for some greater thing to do.

QUEEN'S ROOMS, GLASGOW.

(Concluded from our last.)

One of the most acceptable speakers at the Conference was Rev. W. Haslam. His forcible, if sometimes quaint methods of expression, and his practical home-thrusts, seemed to be greatly enjoyed. One of his addresses was founded on the healing of the palsied man who was commanded by Christ to take up his bed and go to his house. God knows how many there are, who have hands but cannot work, and feet but cannot walk. Why is it that Gospel work is hindered? It is not that God's arm is shortened, or that He is unwilling to gather in a harvest of souls. It is not that the Word of God is bound, and has not the same power that it used to have. No. We see it everywhere, that wherever believers who have been in a palsied state are aroused and begin to work, the work of God in the salvation of others begins. I go to many places to preach and I find that where the believers are in such a palsied condition it is very little use speaking to sinners till the saints are stirred up. Then the way is open, the Gospel has free course, God's Word is glorified, and sinners are saved. I am perfectly sure if souls were revived here to-night, if palsied souls were delivered from their palsy, we should see God glorified in a way we never did before. That multitude that would not make way for the poor palsied man to get into the presence of Jesus, stood on one side amazed when they saw him carrying his bed. They glorified God, and said they had never seen it on that fashion. Thank God, palsied souls in these days are being saved from their palsy; believers are being awakened to see not only the possibilities of faith, but they are finding out how easy everything is when the love of Christ constrains us. All God's biddings are enablings, and the stopping-places of nature are the starting-places of grace. God says to us believers, as He said to Mary and Martha, "If thou wouldest only believe thou shouldest see the glory of God." Do we want to see the glory of God? Are we praying for it? God is praying to us, waiting for us; it is our unbelief that is standing in the way.

Mr. Haslam proceeded to expound the words of the Apostle in Phil. ii. 12, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." Of course we all know that Salvation is not by works, but by faith. But some believers seem to think that they must do works in order to secure sanctification. In writing to the Galatians Paul denounces that very idea: "Having begun in the spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh?" If a very angel from heaven were to preach such a Gospel as that, let him be accursed. But God having given to us such a great salvation, means us to use it; to exercise ourselves in bearing such a testimony to this salvation as will make it profitable to others. That is what Paul means by this passage. Mr. Haslam told a story of a country gentleman to whom a friend of his had paid a visit, and who had amassed great riches through the discovery of a valuable iron-mine on his property. His father had remained a poor man, because he did not know of this mineral wealth of which he was the possessor. How many believers there are who have a rich mine, but never break it open, and never work it out. They have the Bible, but they never study it, in order to find out their spiritual riches; so it is of no profit to others, and brings no glory to God. We can never tell what good we may do, if we are living to magnify and glorify God, forgetting all about ourselves in the desire to see others blessed. There are so many of us who are always getting something for ourselves. Of such the Apostle would say: "Ye are carnal. Ye are babies. Ye want milk when ye have need of strong meat." Jesus said, "My meat and my drink is to do the will of Him that sent Me." Is our meat and drink to do God's will, or are we always craving for teaching, teaching? There are many who only want a little more teaching; they have a great deal of teaching, and they enjoy it very much. Oh, I cannot bear to hear people talk about "enjoying it very much." If you will but give out what you get, then the Lord will enjoy you. God has saved you for this purpose, and He will be disappointed if you do not make this salvation profitable to others, and, therefore, glorifying to Himself.

Mr. Haslam gave another address, on believers being

GOD'S WORKMANSHIP

"Created in Christ Jesus into good works which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." People often ask us how they may devote themselves to God's service. Let them go to God and ask Him. We do not know what God created you for, but if you have truly given yourselves to Him, He will set you to work. Rest in God does not mean inactivity. There is plenty of work for all, and God has prepared every one of us unto some good work. Let us go to Him for directions, and then let us do it, no matter what it is. He will never bid us do anything without enabling us to do it. Yield yourselves to Him as those who are alive from the dead; you may be sure He will launch you out into fruitful service.

In one of his thoughtful addresses, Rev. Hubert Brooke, of Liverpool, read a lesson to the Christians of to-day, from the law propounded in Exodus xxi., as to the freeing of Hebrew servants at the end of six years. He compared the service during this period to the life of a believer who has not entered into full spiritual liberty. The boring of the ear of the Hebrew servant in the presence of the judges—a symbol of perpetual service—was made to typify the wholly consecrated child of God. The Hebrew who took this step would have no further trouble or anxiety about meeting the daily needs of himself and his family, and was in no danger of falling once again into the hands of some ruthless creditor. So the believer who lays all on God's altar is assured of all sufficient grace and strength for an overcoming life of service.

On another occasion Mr. BROOKE spoke from David's question to the people, "Who then is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord?" Applying these words to the spiritual life, he showed how the real conflict is waged in the region of the will. God can only accept a freewill offering; there must be no constraint. Having thus given ourselves gladly to God, we can then devote all our bodily and mental powers and all our possessions to the service of the Great Master Builder, who is rearing for Himself an holy temple in which he may dwell. As the people of Israel rejoiced when they offered what was required, "with a perfect heart willingly to the Lord," so the truly consecrated believer will find in his service the fullest happiness. As "David, the King, also rejoiced with great joy," so is there joy in the presence of the angels of God over the willing service that we render to Him.

Mr. H. F. BOWKER, who presided throughout the four days' conference, confined his remarks chiefly to brief words of application at the close of each meeting. Sometimes he rehearsed the main points of the addresses given, and illustrated them by incidents from personal observation or experience. At other times he took up some question that had been sent him. On the afternoon of the last day he said that many people had difficulties as to the question of SIN IN THE BELIEVER.

He thought there was a side to this question which, if properly looked at, would very much help to banish controversy. He had never met with any person who, after close questioning, believed he was not liable to sin. At the same time everybody agreed that the toleration of any known evil was inconsistent with the Christian profession. All sin is to be hated and abhorred as a thing most loathsome to the obedient child of God and dishonouring to Him. Let us then believe that we and sin have been separated by a great act of separation, and therefore it is a thing that we have for ever done with. On the other hand, we shall not find that sin has done with us. We shall not cease to be tempted, either by the world, the flesh in its varied forms, or the devil. But so long as we abide in Christ He has undertaken to keep us from sinning—from doing the things that are contrary to his mind and will. At an early stage of the conference, Mr. Bowker read a question that had been sent in, asking how one could prevent wandering thoughts in prayer, and the entrance of evil thoughts into the mind. His reply, in substance, was that in prayer, if we really had specific desires to bring to God, and if our hearts were constrained by his mighty love to us in Christ, we should so concentrate our thoughts that they would not wander. As to evil thoughts that come to us at any time, we must go with them immediately to Christ for deliverance.

At the close of the evening addresses short after-meetings were held, when those present were encouraged and admonished by some definite and decided step to give or re-consecrate themselves to God and his service. It is believed that not a few did so. A monthly meeting is to be held in Glasgow for considering this question of the deepening of the spiritual life; an annual conference is also proposed to be held, probably in November of each year.

PROFESSOR DRUMMOND'S NEW BOOK.—Many of our readers may be glad to know that the chapter of Mr. Henry Drummond's book entitled "Degeneration," which appeared in our columns some weeks ago, can be had in pamphlet form at the Orphan Printing Press, Leominster. Price 1d.

SICILY.—The work done by Methodists at Palermo is developing. Thanks to the liberality of an English Christian who visited this city, an evangelist is come to join his efforts to those of Pastor Fera. This new worker is simple and zealous; he succeeds especially in domiciliary visits and among the people. He has begun prayer-meetings in five private houses, and a great blessing accompanies the labours of the pastor and of the evangelist.—L'Evangéliste.

"THE NEW ABOLITIONISTS" AT THE HAGUE.

(BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONER.)

IT has been pleasant to meet here so many Christian workers from various countries of Europe, than whom none feel a deeper interest in the subject which has brought this International Congress together. The searing of the public conscience, and the corruption of the individual life which is brought about by the official licensing and regulation of houses devoted to the practice of a deadly sin, are amongst the greatest obstacles which Continental Christians have to contend with in their evangelistic work. Christian hearts, moreover, are stirred at the thought that in these licensed bastilles of impurity thousands of wretched girls are shut up, locked up (as recent revelations have proved) beyond the reach of all good influences and the message of redeeming love. Is it any wonder, therefore, that Continental evangelical Christians are amongst the foremost of those who have gathered round the standard of the British and Continental Federation for the Abolition of the State Regulation of Vice, under whose auspices this Congress has been called?

On Sunday, the 16th inst., the day before the opening of the Congress, it was referred to in at least two of the Hague churches. In the morning, in the great Dutch church known as the Klooster Kirk, Pastor Pierson, equally celebrated in Holland as a preacher and philanthropist, made pointed allusion to the objects of the Federation, nothing deterred by the presence of the King. In the same church in the evening an extra service was held, at which religious addresses on social purity were delivered by M. Pierson and other famed Dutch preachers. In the French Church the minister spoke of the labours of Mrs. Josephine E. Butler, so well known in connection with the new Abolitionist movement, as a striking illustration of self-sacrificing love. In the afternoon of Sunday a number of members of the Society of Friends from Great Britain, who had come as delegates from various associations and committees to the Congress, assembled with other delegates for a meeting for worship after the manner of that religious society, when the feeling of all hearts found expression in fervent prayer to God for his blessing on the deliberations of the week.

FIRST DAY.

On Monday morning at half-past nine o'clock, the proceedings commenced unofficially with a prayer-meeting, which has been continued every morning. These meetings have been occasions of much refreshing, and it has been touching to listen to the fervent utterances, as in different languages, one after another, they ascended to the God and Father of all, whose ear is ever open to the cry of the soul, no matter in what language it is spoken. Although there was a diversity of tongues, there was no Babel. All hearts were one in prayer, as God's children are one family throughout the wide world.

The formal opening of the Congress took place at about half-past ten on Monday morning, at the large hall of the Arts and Sciences, under the presidency of M. Emile de Laveleye, the celebrated Professor and political economist, who is also, by the way, a member of the Protestant Missionary Church of Belgium. As a parenthesis, it may here be mentioned that he is not the only member of that Church who is present. It is also worthily represented by Pastor Nicolet, of Liege, Baron Prisse, and by M. Jules Pagny, of Saventhem, who three years since bravely aided Mr. George Gillett and Mr. Alfred S. Dyer in their efforts to rescue betrayed English girls from licensed dens of infamy in Brussels—a storming of the institutions of vice which subsequently led to the appointment of a Committee of the House of Lords to investigate the horrible traffic in English girls by which such dens are supplied with their victims.

After the Committee of the various sections had been appointed at the morning sitting, and other formal business had been transacted, the Congress adjourned and re-assembled in the afternoon at three o'clock in the Treves Zaal, the Council Chamber of the Dutch Parliament, which one of the ministers of State had kindly placed at the disposal of the Federation for that sitting. Two hours before (at one o'clock) the King had opened the Dutch Parliament in person in the same chamber, so that it had only just been vacated by the legislators of Holland when the New Abolitionists entered, by whom it was quite filled. The scene was an animated and picturesque one. The Treves Zaal itself is a profusely-decorated room, with sculptured and painted ceiling, one side looking out upon a miniature lake called the Vijver, while other sides are covered with great paintings by celebrated Dutch artists.

Baron Schimmelpenninck, the President of the Dutch Committee of Reception, welcomed the Federation delegates to the Court capital of Holland. M. de Laveleye, in an eloquent and convincing speech, exposed the fallacy of the ungodly doctrine of the necessity of vice, upon which the institution of legalised immorality is founded, and declared that the State, in undertaking to regulate instead of to suppress vice, makes itself an accomplice in its commission.

Pastor Pierson drew some eloquent comparisons between events in Dutch history and the progress of the New Abolitionist war.

Mrs. Josephine Butler, who was loudly applauded on ascending the tribune, spoke of the lessons of the past year's work in Great Britain. The passing of the resolution of the House of Commons of April 20th, showed the importance of submitting this subject to the decision of the representatives of the people, and not to commissions and specialists. She said that commissions were useful where facts had to be collected and examined, but it was an absurdity to appoint a commission to decide a matter of first principles. The indirect effect of the Abolitionist movement in Great Britain had been to produce a revival on all subjects relating to social purity. Women had been forced, not to leave, but to go beyond rescue work, with which they formerly exclusively occupied themselves, by the audacity of the attempt on the part of men to give a legal sanction to vice, and to the desecration of womanhood. The audacity of that attempt had led women to espouse, as jurists in the highest sense, the cause of their fallen sisters, to insist upon the sacred principle of personal right, to protest against the treatment of women as things or chattels, and to maintain the value of the individual soul, which Christ taught when He gave his life for even the most degraded. At the close of Mrs. Butler's address, the meeting terminated with a few words by M. de Laveleye as president.

In the evening the Mayor of the Hague courteously received the delegates at his mansion. The gathering was of a social character, and constituted a pleasant ending to the first day's proceedings.

SECOND AND THIRD DAYS.

On Tuesday morning the sittings of the Congress were resumed in the hall of the Arts and Sciences, when M. Aimé Humbert, the Swiss Professor and ex-diplomatist, but now general-in-chief of the New Abolitionist forces on the Continent, gave a comprehensive and interesting account of the work of the Federation during the last twelve months. In the afternoon the Congress was occupied with the report of its International Commission on Legislation. In the evening a large public meeting was held for the purpose of explaining and enforcing the principles of the Federation.

The announcement made on Wednesday morning by Professor Stuart, of Cambridge, that the Trades' Union Congress sitting at Nottingham had on Saturday passed a resolution calling upon our Government to complete the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts, was received with many signs of gratification. Professor Stuart then gave a résumé of the position of the movement in Great Britain, and stated that there are 250 members of the House of Commons pledged to the repeal of these Acts. He read a letter from the Right Hon. James Stansfeld, M.P., enforcing the necessity of strenuous effort to secure the repeal of this legislation in the next session of Parliament.

Canon Butler, of Winchester, read a paper on the sympathetic action of the religious bodies of Great Britain in relation to the object of the New Abolitionist movement. He referred to the large and influential Christian Convention held in London in January last, and touchingly alluded to the late Canon Battersby as one who took a prominent part in the proceedings on that occasion. Speaking of Nonconformist opinion and action, Canon Butler quoted the declaration of the Premier that "the Nonconformist bodies are united on this subject, and stand like a wall of stone." It was also mentioned that the late Wesleyan Œcumenical Council unequivocably condemned the degrading system of tolerated and regulated vice.

Later in the day Mr. George Grey Butler read a sadly instructive paper on the way licensed vice was introduced into the British Colony of Hong Kong, where it still exists, and into other of our Colonies.

Professor Stuart mentioned a communication which had been received from the London Committee for the Suppression of the Foreign Traffic in English Girls, and the efforts which that Committee and others have put forth, as yet unavailingly, to secure further legal protection for girls. Gratifying letters of sympathy with the object of the Congress were read from Mr. and Mrs. R. W. McAll, of Paris, and from evangelical Italian churches.

At the close of the general sitting in the afternoon, a meeting of women was held, at which Madame Humbert presided, and Madame Nicolet, of Leige; Mdlle. Sandoz, of Lausanne; Madame Andersson-Meijerhelm, of Stockholm; Mrs. Josephine E. Butler, and other ladies, spoke on the subject of the Congress as it affects women, and their duty in regard to it. Many Dutch ladies of position were present.

An interesting extra-official meeting was held in the evening, at the request of some members of the Congress, on the subject of Total Abstinence. Pastor Van Hoogstraten presided, and admirably translated into Dutch the English speeches of Miss Grey, of Antwerp, who carries on there a brave work among sailors and others; Mr. Aaron M. Powell, of New York; Mr. Thomas Pease, of Bristol; and Miss Stephens, of Bridport.

Between the official sittings of the Congress on Wednesday and Thursday, deputations, introduced by Count Hogendorp, waited by appointment upon the Ministers of Justice and the Interior, by whom they were courteously received.

FOURTH AND FIFTH DAYS.

On Thursday morning, Mr. Aaron Powell delivered a powerful address, principally upon the evil influence upon American thought of the European method of regulating the social evil, which encouraged the advocacy of a similar system in the large cities of the United States.

Pastor Hirsch and Madame de Morsier spoke on the struggle against licensed vice in Paris, the former reading a letter from Pastor Fallot, and closing his remarks with a terrible picture of the degradation and misery of large numbers of the poorer classes of that city.

In the afternoon M. Jules Pagny, the Countess de Precorbin, and Signor Nathan gave accounts of Federation work in Belgium, Spain, and Italy, respectively. Then followed reports of works of charity and beneficence carried on by members of the Federation, chief among which is the International Society of the Friends of Young Girls, which gives introductions to benovolent ladies to girls removing from one Continental town to another in the pursuit of their livelihood, and generally advises and watches over the inexperienced and friendless.

A large and sympathetic Dutch Christian Conference was held in the evening; and at the same hour a public meeting for men only, at which the Chief of the Hague Police declared that thirteen years' experience had convinced him that the system of regulated vice is hygienically a failure.

An address by Pastor Nicolet, characterised by the finest moral tone, opened the proceedings on Friday morning; and M. Henri Minod, of Neuchâtel, read a paper (which it was afterwards decided to print in five languages) in which, on hygienic, legal, and moral grounds, the system of regulated vice was considered and condemned. Dr. Westerberg, Swedish delegate, told the Congress of Abolitionist efforts in Sweden, and of the monstrous proposals of certain doctors in his country, whose propositions are an instructive indication of the awful abrogation of moral sense which may result from the acceptance of the hopeless and hateful doctrine of the necessity of indulgence in sin. Madame Andersson-Merjerhelm, another Swedish delegate, and directoress of a Home for friendless girls at Stockholm, gave further particulars of the state of the Abolitionist movement in her country, and added a lively description of her work among friendless girls, in which she is supported by the sympathy of many noble ladies, including the Queen of Sweden.

The work of the Danish section of the Federation was spoken of in the afternoon by M. Holck, who was followed by Pastor Pierson, on the position of the movement in Holland and Austria. While this sitting of the Congress was in progress a meeting of ladies was held, to take steps to form a branch for Holland of the International Society of the Friends of Young Girls. In the evening there was a large meeting of a religious character, at which M. Lacheret, the French Pastor at the Hague, presided.

On Saturday the resolutions embodying the conclusions of the Congress and the principles of the Federation, and touching all aspects of the subject, were brought in and voted. The Hague friends were heartily thanked for their hospitality. The Congress concluded with expressions of earnest desire for the prosperity of the cause of purity in Holland and throughout the world. Hitherto every year has shown important stages of progress. The leaders of the different regiments of this great army now return to their respective countries, to engage in further conflicts and to win further victories in the faith and under the sacred banner of the Cross.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Wilson have been holding a week's Mission at the village of Flackwell Heath; very great good has been done.

Elgin, N.B.—An encouraging series of Gospel services have been held here, chiefly conducted by Mr. J. M. Scroggie. On one occasion Mr. Grattan Guinness was present, and made an earnest appeal to young men to give themselves to the work of foreign Missions.

Glasgow.—Mr. Edwards, of London, who has been labouring in the tent on the green with great success, is now conducting a series of evangelistic meetings in Martyrs' Free Church. On Friday week, at a testimony meeting, eight men rose, and told what the Lord had done for them.

Carluke, N.B.—This town has been visited with a gracious revival. Mr. Spencer Walton, of the Church Parochial Mission Society, was with us from the 6th till the 17th inst., conducting Bible readings in the afternoons, and evangelistic services in the evenings. From the very beginning, the Lord manifested Himself savingly. W. D. M.

Norway.—Rev. Robert Howie, of Govan, who has been spending a few weeks in Norway and Sweden, bears testimony to the great work which is being done there. At one of the meetings at which Mr. Howie was present, there was scarcely a single individual in the audience who was not sobbing aloud. Many of them travelled sixty miles to hear the Gospel preached.

Rhyl.—During the first fortnight in September Services for children and young people were held upon the beach by W. F. Dowle Jones, of the "Children's Special Service Mission." Although late in the season, there were many large gatherings; on Sunday afternoons fully 400 must have been present. A quiet but real work for God was done amongst the children in playtime as well as during the services. Many resident friends, and others, showed great interest and sympathy with the work.

Whitehaven.—Mr. Henry Thorne has completed a most satisfactory ten days' Mission at this place. The interest deepened night after night, not a few young men and others being led into the light. A branch of the Y.M.C.A. has been formed. Things look hopeful. Will your readers pray for us. A. N.

Dundee.—At the Y.M.C.A. Hall here, Mr. Oscar Owers, of the London Evangelisation Society, has been giving a series of Bible readings. They have been much blessed to Christians. At one of these, when a thank-offering was taken for the Society, a lady took off her watch, chain, and finger ring, and put them into the plate as an acknowledgment of blessing received.

Soldiers in London.—On the 11th instant about forty non-commissioned officers and privates of the Guards accepted an invitation to tea at 327, Vauxhall-bridge-road, kindly given by Mr. and Miss Fry, of Dublin. Earnest Gospel addresses were given by various brethren. A week later a meeting of a similar character was held. During the past eighteen months two meetings have been held each week, and it is intended to commence a Sunday meeting.

Penzance.—Services for children have been held on the beach here for a fortnight, by Mr. Hankinson and Mr. Seyler, of the Special Service Mission. Many outsiders have been attracted, and it is hoped have shared in the blessing. Mr. Spiers is now at Penzance, though somewhat exhausted with his labours at New Quay. Prayer is desired for his restoration to full health, and for a further blessing on the work at Penzance.

The South Coast.—Mr. Philip Harrington (The Cottage, Fishergate, near Brighton) and a brother have lately begun evangelistic work at two adjoining villages, Southern Cross and Upper Portslade. The meetings have been held up till now in private rooms, but it is greatly desired to erect Mission halls in both places, and Mr. Harrington appeals for help towards this object. He desires us also to say that he would be glad to meet with some earnest Christian brother who could pay his own way, and assist him in the Gospel work.

Otley, Yorkshire.—On Sunday week a goodly sight was to be seen in the Buttermarket at Otley, the Wesleyan, Primitive, New Connexion Methodists, Mission Hall, and Salvation Army workers uniting in a grand mass open-air meeting, preaching Christ to many hundred people. Gospel work is going on here in a Mission-room holding some 800 people, which is filled on Sunday with working people, mill and foundry hands. The Salvation Army here has done and is doing a real solid work; many drunkards have, by the grace of God, been reclaimed, and are savingly converted unto God.

John M. MacAuliffe.

Eastbourne.—During the past seven weeks services have been held here in connection with the "Children's Special Service Mission" by Rev. W. S. Standen, assisted by Messrs. W. E. Peters, S. D. Waddy, Esq., Q.C., M.P., and John Macgregor, Rev. Walter Horne, and Major Owen Hay. Great numbers have cause to thank the Lord for blessing received during these services. Often as many as 600 have been present at the morning service on the beach; when the weather was unfavourable for out-door services they were held in St. Paul's Church. Day by day there has been testimony on every side to the real work of God in the hearts of old and young. A Prayer-meeting for adults was held each morning previous to the service on the beach. These were very well attended, and were greatly blessed to the stirring up and refreshing of many. The short addresses on the Christian life given by Mr. Standen were also very helpful.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For much blessing received at Mr. Spencer Walton's recent Mission services at Carluke.

PRAYER.—That a suitable person may be sent to a parish in the South of England as a helper and worker. That the Lord's work there and in the two next parishes may greatly increase.——That a sister-in-law and her three children and governess may all be brought to the Lord.——That the Lord would remove all difficulties to the establishment of a Y.M.C.A. at Camberwell.——For the conversion of my brother and grandfather.——For my husband's and my youngest son's conversion.——For blessing on services at Heybridge by evangelists from Surrey-street, Strand.——For blessing on a Mission to be held in Alresford, Hants, from October 7 to 14, conducted by John B. Bain.——For Mrs. Ziemann, who is dangerously ill.

MISS MACPHERSON'S NEW CANADIAN HOME.

AT the workers' meeting at the House of Industry, on the 19th inst., Mr. Merry, who had just returned from Canada, read a letter from Miss Macpherson, in which she says: "We have been kept low by a visitation of typhoid-fever in our little cottage at Galt. At intervals cases occurred, causing our two medical men to search for the cause. The result of their council led us to watch for a good place to remove the Home at once, and a house situated upon a hill, instead of in a valley, was opened to us. After much waiting upon God, we decided to sell the Galt Home, and purchase one in the town of Stratford, Ontario. A small running stream through the property will aid us in drainage, and the locality will open up a fresh field, still more central for our hundreds of children growing up around. This will delay my return till October.

"Most gratefully do we record our gratitude for God's goodness in supplying every need of the work. For this removal we ask the prayers of all fellow-helpers. My sister (Mrs. Merry) and her helpers, are very worn, as no hospital nurse could be procured; but we are humbled at the Lord's mercy in sparing all the lives of the children. We have no debt in any of the homes, and we are more than ever encouraged to go forward, watching for souls. My spare hours and thoughts are being spent in going over histories and reports to find how many of the children, and especially the young girls, have died, married, and are doing well for themselves, or are under the Home control. At this season of sickness and removal, expenses are heavy; if prayer is offered our Father, who knoweth the need of his children, will supply."

Mr. Merry supplemented this letter by saying that there were three reasons why they had come to the decision to remove: (1) The sickness of the boys; (2) the medical opinion that it might possibly occur again on account of the defective drainage and the close proximity of the farm buildings; and (3) the amount of labour and anxiety entailed in the cultivation of the farm, which has become a hindrance rather than a help, as the boys are sought after as soon as they arrive at Galt. The new home is in every way well suited for the boys, and the owner was glad for it to be used for such a purpose. It is expected that the sale of Galt, when a customer is found, will almost, if not quite, pay for the new house at Stratford.

Dr. MCKILLIAM gave an address on "Gideon" at this meeting, dwelling on the condition of Israel, and the way in which God interposed to deliver and bless his people by the hand of his servant. The necessity of being in a right state of soul, and ready and willing to do anything the Lord may give us to do, were dwelt upon at some length. Two things are of great importance to successful service, viz., prayerful and constant study of the Word of God, and sympathy with the work in which we are engaged.

Mission Appeals.

BRISTOL.—Rev. John Butcher, Eastville, Bristol, appeals for help to pay off a debt of £2380. in connection with the Primitive Methodist Chapel and Schoolrooms, in Newfoundland-road, Bristol. He asks for shilling contributions, which will be gratefully acknowledged.

MISSION HALL, DEREHAM, NORFOLK.—There is an outstanding debt of over £100 on this Hall, which the friends are very anxious to clear off. The congregation is poor, and cannot do it themselves. Help will be gladly received by Rev. WILLIAM FREEMAN, East Dereham.

WEST GOULBURN, N. S. WALES.—Canon Soares, who has laboured in this colony for twenty-eight years, makes an urgent appeal for £2000 for the erection of places of worship and schools at West Goulburn. He says the district is "without a church or school of any kind." His appeal is heartily endorsed by Bishops Goulburn and Ryle. He has received £500 of the amount. Contributions may be sent to him at 17, Arundel-gardens, Kensington-park, London, W.

Letters to the Editor.

A CAUTION.

DEAR SIR,—A circular being sent out by Mr. A. R. Cruzado, of the "Evangelical Church of the Martyrs," at Valladolid, appealing for funds, it is right to state that friends who have for years contributed in aid of Mr. Cruzado, as pastor of that church, have felt themselves under the painful necessity, for the present, of withholding further assistance. They cannot recommend Mr. Cruzado's appeal.—Yours sincerely, SAM. SOUTHALL.

Leeds, Sept. 22.

COUNT DI CAMPELLO.

SIR,—I am sure THE CHRISTIAN will not refuse the defence of an absent friend who cannot read your paper. I speak of Count di Campello, of whom you made mention last week. And, as I am acquainted with him in Rome and elsewhere, I speak of what I know to be facts.

Campello never entered any particular Protestant sect or communion, as he has never been anything else but an Old Catholic. He was, however, thankful to use the Methodist church in Rome, which was kindly placed at his disposal, wherein to promulgate his manifesto against the Papal Church. Not distinguishing between the diverse sects which compose Protestantism, he felt then, as he feels now, that in his Protest against the errors of Rome, he ranged himself in that general sense with all Protestants, but not in any particular or denominational manner. In a doctrinal or ecclesiastical point of view, he finds himself, as do all Old Catholics, in near relation to the Anglican Church; but, as he is an Italian, he has no intention, and never had, of uniting with that Church, which is a national one. And, if he desires a religious reform for his country on the same principles as that Church—and we believe it is the only one possible—is it a reason why English Christians of other communions should condemn, rather than help him in his difficult and noble task?

And now let me say, as I have lived much in Rome, that one of the greatest hindrances on the part of Catholics there, as elsewhere, to accept any Protestant form of religion is the divisions, quarrels, and hatred among them, of which your correspondent of last week bears evidence. If Catholics prefer a corrupt unity to unchristian warfare, where is the blame? Let us all be careful not to claim for ourselves nor our Churches that infallibility which we refuse the Bishop of Rome! In these troubled times, Christians do not, and perhaps cannot, see alike on secondary things; but they can, if they will, agree to disagree with respect, courtesy, helpfulness, and charity, without which all our work is vain.—I am, dear CHRISTIAN, yours very truly in the charity of our common Lord and Saviour, "AN OLD CATHOLIC."

Berne, Sept. 3.

MISSION TO KAFFIRS.—The report of the Mission at Rock Fountain, Ixopo, Natal, by Mr. Elbert S. Clarke, shows that he and his devoted wife are successfully prosecuting their labours in the Gospel and school. A good share of the needed support for the Mission comes from the farming operations. Mrs. Fothergill, Claremont, Darlington, is the English treasurer.

NORWICH CONFERENCE OF THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—The Council of the Evangelical Alliance have accepted a cordial invitation to hold the Autumnal Conference in the City of Norwich, from the 16th to the 18th October. The programme seems to be one of special interest, and includes, among other subjects, "The Religious Indifference Existing Among Various Classes," "The Divine Authority of the Holy Scriptures," "The Public Ministry of the Word of God," "The Influence of Martin Luther upon the Protestant Reformation," and the "Present Condition and Needs of the Reformation Churches." Amongst those who have been secured to give addresses are Lord Polwarth, the Rev. Dr. Oswald Dykes, the Rev. Dr. John Stoughton, the Rev. Dr. Sinclair Paterson, the Rev. Prebendary Anderson, the Rev. Dr. L. B. White, Rev. Dr. Murray Mitchell, and Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. The Sessions will consist of morning, afternoon, and evening meetings, and all will be open to the public. A programme of the proceedings, and all further information, may be obtained from the Secretaries of the Alliance, 7, Adam-street, Adelphi, W.C.

"The Voices of the Children."

Dear Readers of "The Christian,"

Heavy expenses incurred (£3,000) in emigrating during the year over 300 Poor Boys and Girls have quite exhausted our Treasury, so that our Bank account is even now overdrawn.

Meanwhile, Twelve Hundred Little Ones needing FOOD, SHELTER, AND CLOTHING, must remain in the "Homes" during the Holidays.

The next 9 or 10 weeks will therefore be a period of great burden-bearing and much anxiety to those on whom the direct responsibilities lie. But

Are there not many of the Lord's Stewards who will regard this sober statement of facts as a call to Service?

Surely the enjoyments of life are enhanced to those who remember the necessities of the children of our streets.

Any gifts, however small, will be gratefully acknowledged by our Treasurer, Wm. Fowler, Esq., M.P., or by

Yours very faithfully, in Christ's Service,

Among His Little Ones,

T. J. BARNARDO.

25 (Late I), Chatham Place, Paragon Road, Hackney, E.

Beloved Friends,

You have so kindly helped me in my work from the commencement, that I can only again repeat I feel sure you still are interested in it, and now, with other dear friends of a later period, will sympathise when I tell you that death has entered our household for the first time, and taken from our midst a truly grateful and thankful aged one. I must pay this tribute to the memory of "Lettice Buckmaster," because she gave me so much joy in my work. But apart from all else besides, she left behind the assurance that she was going home to God. Some years ago, Mrs. Buckmaster fell from a chair and injured her left breast, which, sad to say, caused a cancer to form—that most terrible disease to which the human frame is subject. She suffered intensely, but I never heard a murmur escape her lips. In this record I am compelled to be brief, but when reading it, dear friends, I know you will realise to the full the preciousness of Matt. xxv. 40.

During this time of grave and solemn responsibility "the barrel of meal has wasted not," and I feel sure NOW I have only to remind the Lord's Stewards for the supply of present needed help.

Sept. 7, 1883.

SCRIPTURE TEXTS.

Published by MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings; and may be had of any Bookseller.

From the late AGNES ELIZABETH JONES, Lady Superintendent of Nurses at the Liverpool Workhouse.

"The Lady Superintendent of Nurses begs to acknowledge the receipt of the parcels of Texts as ordered. She more and more feels their value. The patients lying in their beds can read the words—the print is so distinct.

"As she is going to undertake the charge of several hundred more patients, she wishes to give other Wards the advantage of these Texts on the wall."

In very large type, printed in blue ink, size 31 in. by 20 in., 70 different Texts, 3d. each.
Mounted on canvas, varnished, and with eyelet holes, 9d. each.
Mounted on rollers and varnished, 1s. 6d. each.

LIST OF THE TEXTS

1. "Choose you this day whom ye will serve.'
2. "The wages of sin is death."
2.* "The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."
3. "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out."
4. "Repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance."
5. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die."
6. "In whom we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins."
7. "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God."
8. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."
9. "The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon Him; to all that call upon Him in truth."
10. "Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world."
11. "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost."
12. "The Lord is good to all; and His tender mercies are over all His works."
13. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge; but fools despise wisdom and instruction."
14. "Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered."
15. "When we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly."
16. "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus."
17. "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."
18. "Now in Christ Jesus ye, who sometime were far off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ."
19. "Seek ye the Lord while He may be found; call ye upon Him while He is near."
20. "Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the Just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God."
21. "Herein is love: not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins."
22. "God commendeth His love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us."
23. "As by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so, by the obedience of One, shall many be made righteous."
24. "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing."
26. "The just shall live by faith."
31. "As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God."
32. "The blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin."
33. "Through this Man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins."
34. "Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by Thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation."
35. "God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through Him might be saved."
36. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life."
37. "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."
38. "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."
39. "God so loved the world, that He gave His only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."
40. "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by Me."
42. "Let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus."
43. "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."
44. "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."
45. "Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not."
46. "He shall gather the lambs with His arm, and carry them in His bosom."
47. "Children, obey your parents in all things: for this is well-pleasing unto the Lord."
48. "I love them that love Me; and those that seek Me early shall find Me."
51. "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth."
52. "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him."
53. "Casting all your care upon Him; for He careth for you."
54. "The Eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms."
55. "He hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."
56. "I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content."
57. "As thy days so shall thy strength be."
58. "In all their afflictions He was afflicted."
59. "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth."
60. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."
61. "Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God."
62. "He is despised and rejected of men; a Man of Sorrows and acquainted with grief."
63. "He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities."
64. "The chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with His stripes we are healed."
65. "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way."
66. "The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquities of us all."
67. "Look unto Me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth."
68. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters."
69. "If any man thirst, let him come unto Me, and drink."
70. "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shall believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved."
71. "It is the blood that maketh atonement for the soul."

The eight following are in Extra Large Type.

25. "Jesus only."
27. "Now."
28. "God is love."
29. "Behold, He cometh."
30. "Have faith in God."
41. "Prepare to meet thy God."
49. "Thou God seest me."
50. "Be ye kind one to another."

Nos. 45 to 51 inclusive are specially suited for Children.

CASE OF "GREAT SUFFERING FOR TWELVE YEARS."

This patient's name is MRS. WILLIAM KNIGHT, OVERY COTTAGE, ECCLES, ATTLEBOROUGH, Norfolk.

She first applied to me in October, 1862. She says:—"I have been a subject of great suffering for twelve years, with cough and distressing breathing." Among other symptoms which had supervened were great weakness and a critical exhausting diarrhœa.

She continued under my treatment altogether for nearly six months, and by so doing was restored to health.

As an outcome of gratitude she has just written me as follows, in a letter dated August 1, 1883:—"I must bear my testimony to the good effect of your medicine. During my twelve years of suffering I have had various medical treatment, and taken a great deal of various advertised medicines, but disease continued to rage upon me, and I felt your treatment was my last resource. By the end of March I felt better able to attend to my domestic affairs than I had done for years. Under God's blessing, I owe my present existence to your means.

"I find your medicine also the best for removing coughs from children, and hope always to keep it in my house.

"I pray that your life may be long spared for the benefit of suffering humanity, and that it may be said of you, 'Inasmuch as ye did it to these (My suffering ones) ye did it unto Me.'

"You can make what use of this you please."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT

In London, where wealth, luxury, and pleasure abound, sin also abounds; hence the crying need for the proclamation of repentance in our streets.

This year successful Meetings have been held in several large Provincial and Seaport Towns, and many poor young women have been reclaimed.

The Committee are now arranging a series of Meetings in all the principal parts of the Metropolis, and they hope to carry the message of "repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ," to every outcast woman in London, by Meetings and Street Mission Work.

Will Twenty-four Christians contribute £5 each to meet the expense of missioning Twenty-four Districts, and provide Tea, &c., for a Meeting?

Christian Friends desirous of co-operating by contributing towards the expenses of a Meeting (or helping by prayer), are invited to communicate with Mr. J. L. CHRISTIEN, Organising Secretary, at the Office. Donations may be sent to MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., or to

C. WILSON McCREE,
Financial Secretary.

The Life of GEORGE WHITEFIELD.

By J. R. ANDREWS,

Author of "The Life of Oliver Cromwell to the Death of Charles I."

Superior Edition in large type, for Presentation, cloth, bevelled boards (with Portrait), price 5s.

"Whitefield was not a framer of discipline, not a leader of a sect, not a founder of societies, not a ruler of men, but pre-eminently a winner of souls. Would that such preachers were multiplied in the present day! We thank Mr. Andrews for this seasonable addition to our religious biography. No young preacher or student should be without it. But it possesses an interest far beyond any special class, and deserves a wide and general circulation."—Methodist Recorder.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

Supported by Voluntary Contributions.

President—

The Right Hon. the EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.G.

Established 1822, for the purpose of employing humble Christian men, well versed in the Scriptures, to visit from house to house throughout the country, and visit all denominations. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required. The work is carried on in a spirit of love.

Subscriptions or Donations will be thankfully received by the Secretary, Capt. KEARNEY WHITE, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin; or at 9, Paternoster-row, London.

The Earl of Shaftesbury says in his last letter to the Secretary:—Many thanks for your kind letter, and many thanks to Almighty God for the good intelligence you give me about your Scripture Readers in Ireland. I wish I could more effectively assist you. Your letter is the best thing that I have seen or heard from Ireland.

I enclose my donation, and only wish it was more.—Yours, SHAFTESBURY

N.B.—Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not as "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

BROOKS' MACHINE COTTONS

THE HYGIENIC VALUE OF MAGNETISM AS A MEANS OF INVIGORATION.

It has often been the custom of historians to designate any notable eras of the world's history according to the characteristics of each period. Sometimes the epithet has well expressed the condition of bygone times. Thus we have "The Golden Age," "The Age of Chivalry," "The Iron Age," "The Dark Ages," &c., &c. But, if the record of the past is carefully studied, it will be found that there were other distinctive features, not quite so evident at the first glance, but which affected the well-being of the people in a greater degree, and which, with equal truth and appropriateness, might have expressed their leading characteristics. Foremost amongst such features are the particulars relating to the health condition of the people. If this feature were examined, it would be found that each age had been marked by some peculiar weakness or epidemic disease, the result of habits or customs, training or ideas prevailing at that time; and also by the established methods of treatment, embodying the theories of its physicians. There were the charms and incantations of the ancients; the excessive drugging, bleeding, and blistering of more recent times; there are the antagonistic practices of allopath and homœopath at the present, and many others which it would be needless to enumerate; for it is not our intention to consider in detail the various types of disease peculiar to past ages. We shall only notice one feature of the present; and for this purpose we need only ask any physician what the majority of his patients are suffering from; he will reply, nervous debility. Take up any daily paper; you will find a large portion of it advertising various remedies for nervous debility. Ask why the father heaves a sigh, and the mother's eye becomes dim with tears, as they notice the languid movements of some beloved child, just blooming into manhood or womanhood, and the same cry of debility will be heard, while exhaustion and failing health are every day more apparent. Ask schoolmasters and heads of colleges what has become of some of their brightest pupils who a short time since bade fair to make a great name; the same answer will be returned: "They broke down, nervous power being exhausted." In the families of the rich and titled, the same cloud obscures the brightness of the domestic circle, one or more suffering from weakness and debility.

Many affections are classed as incurable because the sphere of action claimed for medicine does not extend beyond the symptoms of disease, and the sufferers become reconciled to a recurrence of the attacks. It is the impetus given to the vital energies by Magnetic treatment which controls the cause of our ailments, and not only relieves, but removes many so-called incurable affections; and from this point of view it cannot be difficult to see how cure becomes possible by this means.

In proof of this, we submit for consideration the unsolicited statements which appear weekly in this column.

From Mr. W. WITHERS, Harby, Lincoln.

"I have been intending to write you for some time past respectiug the beneficial effect of your treatment in my wife's case: so marked has this been, that she has, since adopting it, enjoyed better health than ever she did, and the improvement is so manifest that she is, so to speak, quite another individual.

"I have recommended it to numbers of delicate persons, some of whom have accepted your advice with considerable benefit; and as I think it only right that other sufferers should be encouraged to avail themselves of this means, you are at liberty to use this statement as you please."

Letters commendatory of Mr. Garratt's treatment by Magneto-Electricity have been received from hundreds of persons in all classes of society. A private list of 850 names as referees can be had on application. Consultation free, personally, or by letter. B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

The Christian.

A Reformation Hymn.*

By Dr. HORATIUS BONAR.

FOR the Dayspring of the nations,
Of the kingdoms wide and far;
For the rising over Europe
Of the bright and morning star:
For the blaze of heavenly sunshine,
For the hues of glorious day,
Coming up behind the shadows
Of the ages long and grey:
Blessed be God, our God, alone,
Our God, the Everlasting One,
Who spake the word and it was done!

For the broken chains of Europe,
For the prison-doors unbarred,
For the freedom of her peoples,
By the freedom-giving Word:
For the battle bravely foughten
With the powers of hellish nigh',
For the scattering of the darkness,
For the victory of light:
Blessed be God, our God, alone,
Our God, the Everlasting One,
Who spake the word and it was done!

For the ended sleep of Europe,
For the rousing of her sons,
For the shivering of her idols,
For the ruin of their thrones:
For the shout of joyous wonder
As she looks around and sees
The fair flag of living freedom
Floating far upon the breeze:
Blessed be God, our God, alone,
Our God, the Everlasting One,
Who spake the word and it was done!

For the rainbow-beaming promise
Of our Europe's better birth,
For the thunder-song of gladness
O'er a liberated earth;
For the Book of peace unfolded,
Lifted up, and set on high;
For the torch of truth re-lighted,
Nevermore to dim or die:
Blessed be God, our God, alone,
Our God, the Everlasting One,
Who spake the word and it was done!

For the franchise of the conscience,
For the inner man unchained,
For the intellect ennobled,
And the soul's high birthright gained:
For the keys of heaven recovered
From the robber-hands of Rome,
For the kingdom's open gateway,
And the sinner's welcome home:
Blessed be God, our God, alone,
Our God, the Everlasting One,
Who spake the word and it was done!

For the flight of ancient spectres,
That had shaded with their gloom,
Both the castle and the cottage,
Both the cradle and the tomb;
For the hope of holy triumphs,
In the eras yet to be;
For the pledge to captive millions,
Of release and jubilee:
Blessed be God, our God, alone,
Our God, the Everlasting One,
Who spake the word and it was done!

For the watchword of the prophets,
That "the just shall live by faith,"
For the Church's ancient symbol,
Of the life that comes thro' death;
For the standard of Apostles,
Raised aloft and full unfurled,
Glad deliverance proclaiming,
To a crushed and trampled world:
Blessed be God, our God, alone,
Our God, the Everlasting One,
Who spake the word and it was done!

For the martyr's song of triumph,
On the wheel, or scorching pyre,
For his strength of meek endurance,
On the rack, or torturing fire;
For the noble witness-bearing
To the Christ the Lamb of God,
To the one unchanging priesthood,
To the one atoning blood:
Blessed be God, our God, alone,
Our God, the Everlasting One,
Who spake the word and it was done!

For the brave protest of Europe,
'Gainst the iron rod of Rome,
'Gainst the old Italian spoiler,
'Gainst the wolf of Christendom:
For our Europe's bold confession,
Of the one true faith and Lord,
For the Church's bondage broken,
And her ancient rights restored:
Blessed be God, our God, alone,
Our God, the Everlasting One,
Who spake the word and it was done!

For the everlasting Gospel,
Which in splendour has gone forth,
Like a torch upon the mountains,
Of a re-illumined earth;
For the temple flung wide open,
At whose gates the goodly train
Of the nations had been knocking,
But in vain, so long, in vain:
Blessed be God, our God, alone,
Our God, the Everlasting One,
Who spake the word and it was done!

THE GOSPEL OF TEMPERANCE.

By Rev. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

WHAT amazes and shocks me is to see the wine-bottle where it is as flagrantly out of place as a bonfire would be on the floor of a powder-mill. No intoxicant has any business to be on the table of a family which contains any boys, or on the table of any miscellaneous social party, or in the cupboard of any professional man, or anywhere else, in short, except possibly in the hands of a very discreet and careful physician. Every bottle that contains alcohol contains a serpent. The serpent in Eden was not a more perfect embodiment of deceit. A bottle of Bourbon or of Burgundy will deceive the very elect. I am constantly called to labour for the reformation of persons who began with the most honest resolutions to drink moderately; but their glasses insensibly enlarged and deepened until they became literally a pit of damnation!

Some of the hardest cases I encounter are of those whose names are enrolled on church registers. In yonder lecture-room I have heard a man pray most pathetically for deliverance from the tempter, and yet he has been tracked to a drinking saloon on his way home from the prayer-meeting! More than once he has been the subject of most loving personal efforts (once or twice of necessary church discipline), and still does he cry out in agony from the bites of the serpent which he deliberately put into his own bosom when he was a young man. He never whines about being "a poor unfortunate victim," &c. &c.; he squarely admits that he is a heinous sinner against God and his own soul. But what shall be said of those Christian people who, from thoughtlessness or from the tyranny of fashion, will set wine-bottles where they will produce just such conflagrations! In my honest judgment, Pat O'Raf ferty, the grog-seller, will have no heavier account to answer for in the "great day" than will those reputable and professedly Christian people who place bottled serpents on their hospitable table for the temptation and poisoning of their guests. Half the drunkards in the land had one or more partners at the outset. God's Word solemnly commands, "Be ye not partaker of other men's sins." How much worse to be their tempter!

The one momentous truth that must be instilled into the minds and consciences of the young is, that nobody can safely tamper with an intoxicating beverage. On the bed-rock of entire abstinence alone are they safe. I am willing to confess on this public page that I would no more dare to tamper with a wine-bottle than I would dare to thrust a fireband into one of the pews of my church edifice. The venerable president of my college told me how often in his student days he used to listen to the eloquent sermons of Dr. ——; but those very sermons were delivered under the inspiration of the wine-cup! The excuse was, "I can preach better with the help of a stimulant." He delivered a discourse once on the sufferings of our Lord that melted his auditory to tears; but his nerves were all on fire with port wine while he was preaching! How this brilliant minister of Christ fell at last into open intemperance, and how bitterly he repented, and how he reformed and was reinstated, is still remembered by a few aged people. His temporary fall is a warning, trumpet-tongued, to all of us not to look upon a cup that "stingeth like a serpent."

The only Gospel of Temperance I have yet learned, or which I dare to preach, is—let it alone; it is a deceiver; it hath power to cast both body and soul into hell. This is the principle to teach to the rising generation.

In forwarding to us the above paper, the much-esteemed author writes the following brief epistle, which we think we ought not to withhold from our readers. We very heartily reciprocate his brotherly greetings:—

Lafayette Avenue Church,
Brooklyn, U.S.A., Sept. 18.

BELOVED FRIENDS,—Amid the piles of religious journals that reach me, your admirable CHRISTIAN is always most welcome, fertilising, and soul-profiting. It always puts me in good "trim" for sermon-studying.

I take the liberty of enclosing to you a brief paper on Total Abstinence, which is "going the round" of the Press here, and may be of service in your columns. I also enclose one of my newspaper articles just issued in tract-form.* I rejoice that God is kindly blessing some of my many contributions to the Press—written amid the labours of a large parish.

I spent an evening lately with our eloquent friend Mr. Joseph Cook, who is preparing fresh "broadsides" in behalf of evangelical truth. While not concurring in all his utterances ("call no man Rabbi"), yet the whole trend and drift of his powerful addresses are in the right direction; he is sound to the core on the vital doctrines of our glorious Gospel. How glad we were to see Brothers W. Hind Smith and Matthew Hodder! We shall soon send you our—and the Lord's—Moody for a new campaign. We need him sorely in America; so you must make the most of him in dear old England.

With fraternal love, yours,

THEODORE L. CUYLER.

THE LOOKS OF JESUS.

By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D., Manchester.

"And He looked round about to see her that had done this thing."—Mark v. 32.

THIS Gospel of Mark is full of little touches that speak an eye-witness who had the gift of noting and reproducing vividly small details which make a scene live before us. Very often the Evangelist tells us of our Lord's looks, the gleam of pity and melting tenderness, the grave rebuke, the lofty authority that shone in them. We may well believe that on earth as in heaven, "His eyes were as a flame of fire," burning with clear light of knowledge and pure flame of love. These looks had pierced the soul and lived for ever in the memory of the eye-witness, whoever he was, who was the informant of Mark. My present purpose is to gather them together, and by their help to think of Him whose meek, patient eye is "still upon them that fear Him," beholding our needs and our sins.

Taking the instances in the order of their occurrence, they are these: "He looked round on the Pharisees with anger, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts" (iii. 5). He looked on his disciples and said, "Behold my mother and my brethren" (iii. 32). He looked round about to see who had touched the hem of his garment (v. 32). He turned and looked on his disciples before rebuking Peter (viii. 33). He looked lovingly on the young questioner asking what he should do to obtain eternal life (x. 21), and in the same context he looked round about to his disciples after the youth had gone away sorrowful, and enforced the solemn lesson of his lips with the light of his eye (x. 23, 27). Lastly, he looked round about on all things in the temple on the day of his triumphal entry into Jerusalem (xi. 11).

(1) The welcoming look of love and pity to those who seek Him.

Two of the recorded instances fall into their place here. The one is this of our text, of the woman who came behind Christ to touch his robe, and be healed: the other is that of the young ruler.

Take that first instance of the woman, wasted with disease, timid with the timidity of her sex, of her long sickness, of her many disappointments. She steals through the crowd that rudely presses on this miracle-working Rabbi, and manages somehow to stretch out a wasted arm through some gap in the barrier of people about Him, and with the pallid, trembling finger to touch the edge of his robe. The cure comes at once. It was all she wanted, but not all that He would give her. Therefore He turns and lets his eye fall upon her. That draws her to Him. It told her that she had not been too bold. It told her that she had not surreptitiously stolen healing, but that He had knowingly given it, and that his loving pity went with it. So it confirmed the gift, and, what was far more, it revealed the Giver. She had thought to bear away a secret boon, unknown to all but herself. She gets, instead, an open blessing, with the Giver's heart in it.

The look that rested on her, like sunshine on some plant that had long pined and grown blanched in the shade, revealed Christ's knowledge, sympathy, and loving power. And, in all these respects, it is a revelation of the Christ for all time, and for every seeking, timid soul in all the crowd. Can my poor, feeble hand find a cranny anywhere through which it may reach the robe? What am I in all this great universe blazing with stars, and crowded with creatures who hang on Him, that I should be able to secure personal contact with Him?

The multitude—innumerable companies from every corner of space—press upon Him and throng Him, and I, out here on the verge of the crowd—how can I get at Him? How can my little thin cry live and be distinguishable amid that mighty storm of praise that thunders round his throne? We may silence all such hesitancies of faith, for He who knew the difference between the light touch of the hand that sought healing and the jostling of the curious crowd, bends on us the same eye, a God's in its perfect knowledge, a man's in the dewy sympathy which shines in it. However imperfect may be our thoughts of his blessing, their incompleteness will not hinder our reception of his gift in the measure of our faith, and the very bestowment will teach us worthier conceptions of Him, and hearten us for bolder approaches to his grace. He still looks on trembling suppliants, though they may know their own sickness much better than they understand Him, and still his look draws us to his feet by its omniscience, pity, and assurance of help.

The other case is very different. Instead of the invalid woman, a young man, in the full flush of his strength, rich, needing no material blessing. Pure in life, and righteous according to even a high standard of morality, he yet feels that he needs something. Having real and strong desires after "eternal life," he comes to Christ to try whether this new Teacher could say anything that would help him to the assured inward peace and spontaneous goodness which he longed for, and had not found in all the round of punctilious obedience to unloved commandments. As he kneels there before Jesus, in his eager haste, with sincere and high aspirations stamped on his young, ingenuous face, Christ's eyes turn on him, and that wonderful word stands written; "Jesus, beholding him, loved him."

He reads him through and through, knowing all the imperfection of his desires after goodness and eternal life, and yet loving him with more than a brother's love. The sympathy does not blind Jesus to the limitations and shallowness of the young man's aspirations, but the clear knowledge of these does not harden the gaze into indifference, nor check the springing tenderness in the Saviour's heart. And the Master's words, though they might sound cold, and did embody a hard requirement, are beautifully represented in the story as the expression of that love. He cared for the youth too much to deceive him with smooth things. The truest kindness was to put all his eagerness to the test at once. We can reverently imagine with what a look Christ watched his retreating figure; and we may hope that though he went away then, the memory of that glance of love, and of those kind, faithful words, sooner or later drew him back to his Saviour.

Is not all this, too, an everlasting revelation of our Lord's attitude? We may be sure that He looks on many a heart—on many a young heart—glowing with noble wishes and half understood longings, and that his love reaches every one who, groping for the light, asks Him what to do to inherit eternal life. His great charity hopeth all things, and does not turn away from longings because they are too weak to lift the soul above all the weights of sense and the world. Rather He would deepen them and strengthen them, and his eternal requirements addressed to feeble wills are not meant to quench the smoking flax, but to kindle it to decisive consecration and self-surrender. The loving look interprets the severe words. If once we meet it full, and our hearts yield to the heart that is seen in it, the cords that bind us snap, and it is no more hard to count all things but loss, and to give up ourselves, that we may follow Him. The sad, feeble, and weary, who may be half despairingly seeking for alleviation to outward ills, and the young and strong and ardent whose souls are fed with high desires, have but little comprehension of one another, but Christ knows them both, and loves them both, and would draw them both to Himself.

(To be concluded in our next.)

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

IT has been remarked by one of the daily papers that the Eastern Question occupies the attention of England from time to time as circumstances force it upon her, but that it is never out of the mind of Russia. Many amongst us are asking, "What, in a nutshell, is the Eastern Question?" To this Mrs. Grattan Guinness, in one of the interesting soirées at Hulme Cliff College during the vacation, replied that the Eastern Question, which is the great crux of politics, is what to do with the Mohammedan Turk without putting Europe in a blaze? For Constantinople is the finest geographical position in Europe, and only the mutual jealousy of the European Powers permits the Turk to remain there. But God will bring about the solution of this difficulty in his own time.

Again, it is asked, why is the departure of the Turks from Europe, and their return to the land whence they came, identified with the drying up of the Euphrates foretold in Rev. xvi.? The answer is that the Ottoman Turks, of whom Othman was the chief, were originally a wandering tribe in the country of the Euphrates, and their irruption into Europe is represented in the vision of the sixth trumpet (Rev. ix. 13—21), as consequent upon the loosing of the four angels which were bound in that great river. The vision of the sixth vial (Rev. xvi.) describes the subsidence of this overwhelming flood as the drying up of the Euphrates. (For a similar prophecy of the invasion of the land of Immanuel by Assyria as the overflowing of the same river see Isa. viii. 5—8, and its fulfilment xxxvi., xxxvii.)

The drying up of the Euphrates is proceeding rapidly. About 1800 Turkey began to wane, and has steadily declined, especially since 1820. When it is no longer able to keep its heel upon Jerusalem, the way of the Kings of the East (the Jews) to their own land will have been prepared. Then they shall look upon Him whom they pierced. Then, like Saul of Tarsus, they will ask, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" and like him they will become the ministers of their God to the nations and to the isles afar off, that have not heard his fame nor seen his glory, and they shall declare his glory among the Gentiles.

The loss of Egypt to Turkey indicates a further extensive retrocession of the mystic Euphrates, and this, together with many another sign of the end, calls loudly to the Church and to Israel to "Lift up your heads for your redemption draweth nigh."

THE MASTER'S WORK:

WHAT IT IS, AND HOW TO DO IT.

By the Author of "He is Risen," &c.

(Concluded from our issue of Sept. 20.)

HAVING looked at what the Master's work is, let us now glance at

II.—HOW TO DO IT.

First, then, we are to be labourers together with God (1 Cor. iii. 9). Think for one moment of that "Together with." Three lights seem to gleam out from those words. (a) They reveal to us the honour to which we are called by being labourers together with God. (b) They show that we must not trust to our own unaided strength. We cannot labour alone, our sufficiency is of God (2 Cor. iii. 5). (c) We are not to work our own works in our own way, it must be his work, and in his way, with Him! Our will must not run counter to his will.

"All unseen the Master walketh
By the toiling servant's side;
Comfortable words He speaketh,
While his hands uphold and guide."

What a source of strength lies in these words "together with." The task may be difficult, the strain long, but we are not alone; our work is his, and we work with Him; He is sufficient for all things, and his grace is sufficient for us (2 Cor. xii. 9).

Secondly, we must do it willingly. Having given up our own will to his, we must not perform his work as a task, but do all things without murmurings (Phil. ii. 14). Perhaps we want to do a certain work, or we want to do it in the way we think would be best, but God says "No." Shall we grumble and grudgingly perform his work because He shows us the right thing and the right way to do it? It will not be his work if we do; He must be served with a perfect heart and with a willing mind (1 Chron. xxviii. 9).

God places willingness before obedience in Isa. i. 19, as if to show his children that a forced obedience is no obedience at all. A reluctant service is odious. When the Temple was built, the people with perfect heart offered willingly to the Lord (1 Chron. xxix. 9). Shall we not do the same? Much of our work is spoiled by being performed unwillingly. Oh, let us henceforth, by the help of God, consecrate all distasteful duties to Him whom we serve (Acts xxvii. 23), by accepting them from Him as his appointed task for us, and by performing them all with a willing heart.

Thirdly, we must do our work heartily, i.e., with all the energy, and in the full exercise of all the talent we possess. There is an old adage, that what is worth doing at all, is worth doing well. If this be true of even worldly duty before the heart is given to God—before we are desirous of consecrating all our work to the Lord, how much more true is it when applied to that new desire. "Whatsoever" we do must be done "heartily" as to the Lord (Col. iii. 23).

Thoroughness in our daily duties will teach us a lesson of efficiency, and if in small matters we learn to be thorough and efficient, we are likely to be so in greater undertakings.

"I slept and dreamt that Life was beauty,
I woke and found that Life was duty;
Was the dream, then, a shadowy lie?
Toil on sad heart courageously,
And thou shalt find thy dream to be
A noon-day light and truth to thee."

Yes, the duties that are performed as to the Lord, under the light of his love, will bring down upon us the approval of Him who came to consecrate our common tasks, and to turn them into sources of happiness and blessing to ourselves and to others.

Fourthly, all must be done in singleness of heart (Col. iii. 22), and with all humility of mind (Acts xx. 49). Let us cast all thought of the world's approval out of our heart, and look only at what our work appears in the eyes of God. Let us not do our work partly for the world and partly for God, but with an earnest desire for his glory, and a real longing to show forth the praises of Him who hath called us (1 Pet. ii. 9). Not in a spirit of pride, but with that true modesty which is the single heart in exercise; the quiet unobtrusiveness with which our Great Example went about doing good, and ministering to the wants of others; the gentle retiring manner with which He withdrew Himself from the crowd, who would have made Him king by force, and the submissiveness which made Him wait so patiently the Father's set time for the accomplishment of his life work.

Fifthly, our work must be "a course of daily obedience." Let us not imagine that an occasional fitful service is acceptable to God; let us not think that one deed performed with a single eye to his glory, and the next for the world, is true service. No, our servitude must be constant, unceasing, thorough. We do not consider the man or the boy who serves us at uncertain intervals of time only as our own servant. Neither does our heavenly Master recognise us as his own servants if we serve the world a little here and a little there, and give the residue to Him. If we would serve Him hereafter (Rev. xxii. 3), we must serve Him always here. In the new Jerusalem his servants shall serve Him (ib.), but they must learn to do it first on earth. Oh, let us enter into his service fully, heartily, entirely. Leaving every other master, let us take Him as our own, our only Master, giving ourselves up to his service. Let us go joyously forward in the daily course of obedience which is the brightest and best of lives to live here, and an earnest of the perfect and sinless service in our home above.

Next time we are puzzled as to the nature of the Master's work, let us think upon the plain instruction He has given us concerning it in his Word. He has ordained that we should walk in good works (Eph. ii. 10); it is his will; but we must remember that we shall most completely and fully do these works when we are content to follow simply in the path He has arranged for us in his providence; not trying to go out of the way to choose our own work, but by taking up our daily duties one by one, as He places them in our way, discharging them faithfully and prayerfully under the guidance of his Holy Spirit.

I have not here spoken of work for the Master in the harvest field, but purposely confined the subject to the consideration of his work as set forth in our daily home life, for the simple reason that we often fail to regard such tasks as fall to the lot of most of us, as real, decided work for God. We are so apt to forget that if He gives us homely duties, we may perform them for Him in as true a spirit of consecrated service as if we went forth as missionaries or as evangelists. Whatever our station or circumstances in life, whatever our duties or calling may be, there, depend upon it, is an opportunity, a scope (for the present at any rate), for consecrated, hearty service for God. If in our own little sphere, we do all to his glory, we shall be best fitting and preparing ourselves, by the grace of God, to carry that spirit into our outer work for Him, and in like manner to glorify Him whereto He may call us.

This paper must be closed with a true illustration of the practical nature of the service which we, as Christians, should remember is a true test of the reality of our profession; an illustration which may suggest many hints as to the sphere in which we may first prove our sincerity and our love for the Master.

During the time that a Mission was held in one of our large towns, a woman came to the Mission clergyman and said, "Sir, I want to do something for Jesus, and I don't know what I can do." "Then Satan has blinded your eyes," he replied, "that you cannot see, for there are duties for everyone, something that we can do for Jesus." He asked a few questions, and found that the woman lived with her poor bed-ridden mother. She was fretful, and mother and daughter had frequent quarrels and broils. He thought a few moments, then opened the Bible and read these words, "I was an hungered, and ye gave Me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave Me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took Me in: naked, and ye clothed Me: I was sick, and ye visited Me: I was in prison, and ye came unto Me." "You have Christ at home," he said; then turning the leaf he read, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me." "Nurse that poor sick mother for Christ."

Before the close of the Mission, the daughter came again and said, "Mother wants to see you." The missioner visited the woman, and when he came to her bedside, she took hold of his hand with her right hand, and with the left she pointed up towards heaven and solemnly said, "I wanted you to hear me thank God for the comfort I have received through you and her" (pointing to her daughter). This was true conversion. It brought forth fruit in the home life. Our Master's work commenced in his humble home at Nazareth. Let us go and do likewise.

AN EAST END SCANDAL.—About a thousand ratepayers and inhabitants of Mile End, in the East of London, including nearly all the clergy and nonconformist ministers in the neighbourhood, have signed a memorial to the licensing magistrates, asking them to refuse to renew the licence of Lusby's Music Hall, Mile End, on the ground that the "establishment in question has become a nightly resort of prostitutes, and that scenes of tumult and disorder frequently occur in the streets on the termination of the entertainments there given, to the great annoyance of the peaceable inhabitants and to the detriment of the neighbourhood." Such being the case the memorialists are performing a public duty, and they may justly look to the magistrates to perform theirs by refusing the authorisation of a licence to such a notorious resort.—The Sentinel.

Glasgow Addresses.

By Pastor THEODORE MONOD, of Paris.

III.—Who Teacheth like Him?

"THE wisdom of this world is foolishness with God. For it is written: He taketh the wise in their own craftiness." Where are the words here quoted? In the book of Job; therefore we may feel that we are fully authorised by the example of the Apostle in taking a text from the book of Job, without inquiring closely to whom the words are attributed. It was Eliphaz the Temanite who said, "He disappoints the devices of the crafty, so that their hands cannot perform their enterprise." This is the more striking because we read at the end of the book, "The Lord said to Eliphaz, the Temanite: My wrath is kindled against thee, and thy two friends; for ye have not spoken of Me the thing that is right, as my servant Job hath." This shows that the Bible is not like any other book. The Apostle takes one of those words, and simply says, "It is written."

From the same portion of the Scriptures—not from Eliphaz, but from Elihu—I would borrow my text, "Who teacheth like Him?" (Job xxxvi. 22.)

Our chief object in meeting here is to be useful to one another—by helping each other to come to a decision in our spiritual life. It may be said that each one of us has to come to some decision; that is to say, there is a further step to take. God is ever putting us to the test. We are ever on trial in one shape or another. There is always a further blessing to be got; and it is always to be got in the very same way—by believing the promises of God and obeying his commands. I have no doubt that there are many sitting on these benches who know a great deal more about the deep things of God, and about God Himself, than any of us on this platform; but we give what we have. On the other hand, how can we meet the need of the advanced Christian, of the middle-aged Christian, and of the young Christian, by one teaching? It seems impossible. All that we can do is to lay down some general principles from the Word of God and to say: "This is the path." And then, after all, each one has to place himself under the direct and personal teaching of God. You may hear the very best human teachers of Divine things and yet not be truly, deeply, efficiently taught.

"Who teacheth like Him?"—that is, God himself. We must learn to turn from all other teachers, even those we most respect and love; we must do as the disciples of John the Baptist did: they left him and followed Jesus. And John was pleased; for the object of his ministry was—that he should decrease and Christ should increase. When the disciples heard his testimony to Christ, they at once left him and followed his Master. Likewise, as regards those decisions that we have to come to, we must get beyond the mere province of wishing, of admiring, or admitting that we ought to do such and such a thing; we have to do it. In order to come to that point, we need God's teaching, and no other teaching will answer. After we have heard the truth expounded in such meetings as these, let us remember that we need to shut ourselves up with God, and to ask of Him that He Himself should teach us.

What do we require of a teacher? First of all, of course, a knowledge of the thing he has to teach. I need not say that all knowledge belongs to God. He is truth itself—the living Truth. It would hardly be sufficient to say that God knows the truth: He is the Truth. All truth belongs to Him, and by giving us his mind He gives us truth, gives us reality, shows us things as they are. We may see them in a more or less distorted fashion. We see them very imperfectly, but God sees them as they are. He shows us the truth about Himself, first of all, and then the truth about ourselves, which we are not ready to perceive, and are unwilling at first to admit.

Further, a teacher must not only have knowledge of the truth in itself, but he must know exactly what his pupil requires. Here again, God not only knows the truth, but He knows what particular truth we need to learn at such and such a time. We are often greatly mistaken on the point. Here is one who thinks, perhaps, that what he needs is to go further into the consideration of the inner life, of the power of the Spirit, and so on. It may be that what he just needs is to learn the A B C of the Christian life; that he has never felt his sinfulness, that he has never trusted the Saviour in a true and living way. If so, of course that is the first lesson for him to learn.

There are others who may be wishing for great things, who may be longing for progress in holiness. And surely they ought to be. In fact it is a great mistake to consider any degree of holiness as a "privilege;" it is simply our duty. "Be ye holy, for I am holy." But we may persuade ourselves that all that we need to make further progress in holiness is a little more light, a little more teaching. "We are perfectly willing, but we do not quite understand," we say. The fact is, we do understand quite as much as we need to understand, but we are not willing and we are deluding ourselves. We would like to have—excuse the word, it is the only one that comes to me—a certain feather to put in our cap that we would call "holiness;" something very beautiful that people might look upon and admire us for. Ah, God is not going to give us that. Holiness means conformity to Christ. It means being emptied of one's self, becoming weak, becoming foolish, in order to have no strength and no wisdom but his. It means seeing where we are; and, apart from Christ, we are nowhere. We have nothing at all but Him. It means, as we have been singing—oh, that singing! have we really meant what we sang?—"Anywhere"—was it not, "Everywhere He leads me I will follow on"? Are you sure of that? Are you ready to follow Him anywhere, everywhere? That is a great thing—to follow Him whatever it may cost you, before those who are not in sympathy with you, though perhaps you have to leave your present situation for Christ's sake, though He sends you far away, or gives you some very humble, unknown, obscure work to do. Are you ready to follow Him then? There are many who think the lesson they need is a lesson in holiness, when the fact is they need to be sincere—to be true. Do not pretend you want what you do not want.

A few weeks ago at Mildmay I told a very simple little story; as it seemed to be helpful to some, I will give it to you. It was about a child I know, the son of one of my relatives. He had a bad habit that children often have—he was a little bit of a boy—that of sucking his thumb. Well, he was told he must give it up, and one evening in his prayer he was heard to say: "O God, bless Edward, and make him give up sucking his thumb." That was a very good prayer. But, after a pause, he went on: "O God! don't bless him, because he is going to suck his thumb all the same." I think there is a world of practical teaching in that. The little fellow was more candid than we often are, and he understood that it was no use asking God to do a thing for him when he was determined it should not be done. I fear that in more important matters a great many are just like that little boy. We ask God to deliver us from this or that, when all the time there is a voice (although it does not express itself in the prayer) saying: "I shall go on all the same."

Now, then, let God teach us. He will show us where we are exactly, and what we need. He will impart to us this knowledge. Many have knowledge who do not know how to impart it to others; they make very poor teachers. Indeed, they ought not to be teachers at all. But God is able and willing to impart the needful knowledge to us.

Again, a good teacher is one who has sympathy for the learner. All teachers have not got that, and it is perhaps the greatest power in a teacher. The Great Teacher says: "Learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly in heart." He is a loving Teacher, a kind, gentle Teacher. And if He has to teach us many a lesson that will humble us and break us down, He will do it in such a way that we shall feel all the time that He does it in love. Do not be afraid of that Teacher. He knows you perfectly, better by far than you know yourself; He knows precisely the lesson you need, and He is able to make you learn it.

He will teach you by his Word. He will show you the meaning of that Word. He will make your hearts burn within you as He opens to you the Scriptures. He will, as it were, hold up the Word against the light, so that you shall understand it.

He will teach you by his Spirit, appropriating the Word to you. In reading the Acts of the Apostles see how the Holy Spirit directs the Church, how He directs believers, how the promise of Christ is fulfilled, that He leadeth forth his sheep and goeth before them. Thus will He teach you by his Spirit. He shall speak to you in your inmost heart as well as by his Word.

He shall teach you by his Providence. In the book of Job it is especially his Providence that is pointed out. "Who teacheth like Him?" When God sends you lessons, whatever they are, it is to teach you of his love. When He sends troubles and trials it is that He may teach you—that He may wean you from worldly things and draw you to Himself, that He may make you stronger to glorify Himself in you, that He may make further light to shine in the darkness that may be round about you. Let Him only be your Teacher. Without Him no Providence can teach us. His Word does not teach us without Him. It must be God Himself through his Providence, God Himself through his Word: then we shall be taught indeed.

Further, and finally, the teaching of God is practical teaching. It is not meant simply to enlighten our minds, and lodge some truth in our memories. It is meant to act upon our will and alter our lives. No human teacher can do that, but God can teach in such a way that He leads us to do the thing that is taught. He can not only make you understand it, but desire it, and love it, and obey it. Oh! what a Teacher is that. On this subject of giving ourselves to God, or, in the words of the Apostle, yielding ourselves to God, there is no teaching which can lead us to the point, which can make us do it if we have never done it, or continue to do it if we have begun, but the teaching of God Himself. It was "through the Eternal Spirit" that Christ offered Himself up to God—so we are told. And we shall never offer ourselves up to God effectually except by the Spirit of God. He must come and take possession. He must receive us as we are. We cannot make ourselves ready. We must ever say, in the words of the hymn :—

"No preparation can I make,
My best resolves I only break;
Oh, save me, for thine own name's sake,
And take me as I am."

But, taking us as we are, He does not leave us as we are. The Great Teacher takes his pupils into fellowship, into partnership with Himself. Then He shows us the truth, not only from the outside, as it were, but from the inside. "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him." He takes us into his home and into his heart. He gives us more of his truth as we are able to bear it. He shows us more of his love, and uses us more in his service. It would be a great and glorious fruit of these meetings if each one of us said to himself now, "I will go to that Teacher. I do not always understand the others. I cannot always put this and that together. I cannot find a form of words that will exactly suit me, and express the Christian life. But there is One who does understand me, who knows me, who will give me the truth in the shape that is adapted to my mind, to my experience, to my education. I will take Him for my Teacher."

I remember reading a letter from one who had attended such meetings as these, and a passage in it read somewhat as follows: "Now I have got home after a few weeks. I enjoyed the meetings; I got some good in them. But I get much more good now directly from God. I find that the teaching of God—the teaching from his Word and from experience—is so much more adapted to me than the teaching we got in the meetings. Because," he went on to say, "in these meetings there seemed to be a kind of iron rule laid down. It was all good and true, but it did not seem to fit me exactly—it seemed to me stiff and hard. But now God's hand is upon me, and God's hand adapts itself to me. He does not press too hard. His hand is light. His hand is tender. He knows just how much I can understand, and bear, and do. He gives me light and grace. All that was said at the meetings was true enough, but it is far better to have it straight from Him."

That is what we need. Begin right now, to-day, and go to that Teacher, the One great Teacher, who will never depart. He will lead us further and further on in his truth, as it is said by the beloved apostle: "The anointing which ye have received of Him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you; but as the same anointing teacheth you in all things, and is truth, and is no lie, even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in Him."

A GOOD WORK.—Miss Ellen E. Sowerbutt, 34, Warner-street, New Kent-road, S.E., writes to us to say that she is endeavouring to care for the young neglected girls in the neighbourhood. She is single-handed, however, and would greatly appreciate the personal help and co-operation of some other workers.

DESTITUTE EMIGRANTS.—A party of the third-class emigrants from the wrecked ship St. Leonards lately arrived at the Emigrants' Christian Home, Blackwall. They have lost everything, but in answer to a letter to the daily papers have been most kindly supplied with clothing for the present. Those in charge at the Home have, however, been asked to open a subscription in behalf of these emigrants and the crew to supply them afresh with new kits. Messrs. Shaw, Saville and Co. have promised £50, and other friends have also contributed. Any sums may be sent to Mr. E. Trotter, 5, Montague-square, W.; or to Mr. Wilkie, manager, Emigrants' Christian Home, Blackwall, E.

THE QUEER CLASS.

By M. E. WINSLOW

MISS PERCIE LANGTREE certainly could not rejoice in the most attractive class in B——— Sunday-school. She would have greatly preferred to be at the head of that Bible-class of sweet young ladies, looking in their fresh, bright costumes like a very parterre of spring flowers. Even the "big boys'" class had attractions, its members, though restless and a little mischievous, being full of intelligence and life, and of decidedly inquiring minds. For Percie, who was scarcely more than a girl herself, liked pretty things and bright things, and had once been greatly entertained when acting as a "supply," at the naïve answer of one of these boys, who in reply to the printed question, "What is a seraph?" said, "Some kind of an insect, I suppose, 'cause they've got six wings."

But both these classes had good teachers, who were not at all willing to exchange them for the queer scholars whom the superintendent offered Percie, telling her as he did so that if we really desire to do good and serve the Lord, we must be willing to take such work as He brings to our hands, and not covet other people's work any more than we would their possessions. So, with resolute will, but considerable heart-sinking, the young girl sat down that bright Sunday morning in front of her class.

Its members were named Lee-Chee and Wan-Tan; they had long nails, narrow black eyes, and pig-tails, and were attired in blue blouses, and wide shoes turned up in front. Do you wonder that the other scholars called this the "queer class"? Percie found that they literally knew nothing except enough "pigeon English" to understand her talk when she spoke in monosyllables, and repeated the same thing a great many times. She was obliged to commence at the rudiments, and, almost grown-up men though they were, to go over and over that most tedious of all instruction, "A, B, C." Also she was forced to instruct each one separately, for the one never appeared to listen when she spoke to the other, and the other apparently went to sleep while she was addressing the first. It was very discouraging work, for though both scholars were regular in attendance, and perfectly docile—so far as to repeat verbatim every word she said to them without variation of a letter or syllable, they never showed a sign of intelligence, never originated an idea, nor to all appearance advanced beyond the condition of an echo. The one exception to this statement was the avidity with which they united in the hymns, an exception, by the way, hardly appreciated by Percie, who had a remarkably fine musical ear and cultivated taste.

Matters went on in this way for nearly two years, and only the girl's combined pluck and principle held her true to her two queer scholars. At length there came a Sunday on which Lee-Chee did not make his appearance, and Wan-Tan, on being questioned, said, "Sick, very sick, die soon, come and see, he say;" and in answer to this monosyllabic appeal, that afternoon the young teacher took her way, with some trepidation, to the temporary home of her sick pupil. She had taken the precaution to secure the escort of her big cousin, else perhaps she might not have ventured to pass through the sights and scenes of the "Chinese Quarter." We shall not attempt to describe them, but follow at once to the narrow bed in the stifling room where Lee-Chee lay stricken unto death. Perfect cleanliness marked the boy's person and the immediate surroundings, and this approximation to godliness would have spoken significantly to the experienced in such scenes. He appeared to be in a stupor, or at least his eyes were closed, and he seemed to take no cognisance of outside things. It was an attitude with which his young teacher was very familiar, and a sense of hopelessness came over her as she gazed. But she might have spared the thought, for as she approached the bed, accompanied by Wan-Tan, the sick boy looked up suddenly, with a light in his eyes which she had never seen there before.

"No hear," he said, in faint, apologetic accents, "Lee-Chee talke, talke to Jesus. Jesus good, no want cash; Jesus say, 'I wash you'; Jesus make all clean; Jesus say, 'Come up.' Lee-Chee no want Josh, Jesus big enough; sing, missy, sing."

Percie had taken the cold hand in hers, and felt a rush of almost motherly affection for the strange-looking sick boy; she was almost choked with emotion, but she bravely made the effort, and soon her clear voice rang through the room in the touching words of the "Ninety and Nine." Surely the Master had been off on the mountains to bring back this strange, lonely sheep.

The dying boy listened with rapt attention, and there was a dead silence all over the crowded room. When this hymn was finished Percie sang another, and closed with "Jesus loves me." This was within Wan-Tan's powers, so he joined in heartily, and once Lee-Chee's faint voice was heard distinctly to say, "This I knowy." When it was over, that change was upon the sallow features which even Percie's inexperience could read. The boy drew her toward him, and whispered, "Missy good, missy tell Lee-Chee about Jesus,"—and the lips were still for ever.

"Oh, Duncan," said Percie, as the big cousin, fearful of the effects of the excitement, hurried her from the room, "how would the Lord ever have found his sheep if I had refused to take the 'queer class'?"

MR. T. E. MURPHY IN LIMERICK.

SINCE April last this young evangelist has been holding Gospel Temperance meetings in the north of Ireland with great success. About one hundred thousand persons have put on the Blue Ribbon, it is computed, since he came to Ireland. He commenced a series of services in the south in the City of Limerick on Monday week. Meetings for prayer were held each day in the Young Men's Christian Association Hall. The ministers and members of the several churches were present, and entered heartily into the work.

One and all seemed to feel that Temperance work could only be carried on rightly in a spirit of prayer. The requests for prayer at these meetings clearly indicated that there are many Christian homes on which the dark shadow of the drink curse rests. The public meetings were held in the Methodist churches and Protestant halls respectively. No neutral place could be obtained in which to hold the meetings, but this did not prevent many Roman Catholics from attending and donning the Blue Ribbon. The greatest order prevailed at each meeting.

Mr. Murphy spoke with much earnestness, point, and power. His illustrations were apt and telling. Many wept tears of joy as well as sorrow at the good tidings which he brought them. More than one thousand persons put on the Blue Ribbon during the Mission. Some of the leading citizens took part in it. Mr. Seymour Hare led an efficient choir. Mr. Murphy was the guest of Mr. Hanna whilst in Limerick.

THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION.

By Rev. WILLIAM GUEST, F.G.S.

IN sending you a few notes of the meetings of the British Association just held at Southport, my first utterance must be one of thankfulness to Him who moves all things for his own glory, in which is involved the progress and blessedness of the human race. Doubtless there have been exceptions to the reasons for congratulation. To these I must afterwards advert. The predominant feeling, however, among Christian men at the close of the meetings has been one of grateful surprise.

The churches of the place did all they could to give a right direction to religious thought on the Sunday which intervened during the week of the Association. There was a goodly array of special preachers among Episcopalians and Nonconformists. While these services have been referred to in the daily papers, mention does not seem to have been made of a devotional meeting held on the Sunday afternoon. This was summoned by a private invitation, signed by six members of the Association, four of these being distinguished Fellows of the Royal Society. The members of the Association also largely composed the meeting, and among them I noticed three Presidents of Sections. A Vice-President, also Dr. Gladstone (the chemist) and Professor E. Hull (the geologist), took part in the engagements.

Here may I say that it is a cause of the deepest satisfaction that the next meeting of the Association is to be held in a city where Principal Dawson, who at the meetings has won for himself high honour, has his place of influence. He delivered a brief address at this devotional meeting, which will not soon be forgotten by those who heard it in that large assembly. Three points were emphasized: (a) that men of science might be expected to affirm the unity which is to be found between the works and Word of God; (b) to attach themselves to the essentials of Christianity, rather than to minor differences; and (c) to realise that they could only do these things by the systematic, careful, and reverent study of the Sacred writings. The address was singularly appropriate to the occasion. The reading of the Scriptures was a prominent part of the meeting, and its evangelical nature was specially remarkable. I could not avoid the reflection that if we are to have a new theology, and a Bible without a revelation, these attempted changes will not proceed from a learned laity.

But truly the contrast from a Christian point of view between the meetings of the British Association this year and what they were a quarter of a century ago, has been most marked and significant. Maybe, Christians have been less suspicious, but it may also be that science has been more scientific in its modesty. Certainly the prevailing tone this year among the oldest and greatest scientists has been admirable. Among such eminent men there has been none of the former dogmatism; not an approach to those sneers at Christian beliefs which were once heard; no claim set up for science beyond that of being the handmaid of truth; while a ready acknowledgment has been made of the erroneous conclusions into which science, in some instances, has fallen. In the Geological Section the most devout Christian heard not a syllable to pain him. I bear this witness after careful attendance. It was the same, I have been told, in the Chemical and Geographical Sections, where pronounced Christian men presided. Professor W. C. Williamson, who was in the Chair of the Geological Section, did all that could have been done by the foremost knowledge, and a fine spirit, to give this department such an interest to Christian men. I cannot forbear quoting the wise caution with which this eminent scientist closed his opening address:—

"Though far from wishing to check the construction of any legitimate hypothesis calculated to aid scientific inquiry, I would remind every too ambitious student that there is a haste that retards rather than promotes progress, that arouses opposition rather than produces conviction, and that injures the cause of science by discrediting its advocates."

If, in reference to hypotheses, this caution was held to be needful, how much more must this have been the case in regard to theories!

I have said there were exceptions. It is not pleasant to advert to these. This sketch, however, would not be an impartial one if it omitted such a reference. There is reason to fear that in the domain of science there are the cautious followers of truth, and the special pleaders for foregone conclusions. The method pursued by the latter in the late meetings was twofold. There were strongly worded dogmatic assertions on matters which are no more at present than in process of inquiry. For example, we were told by the President of the Biological Section that "the Darwinian theory of the origin of species by natural selection is firmly established." Young men must be on their guard against these positive statements. There are many men of the highest scientific greatness who maintain that that theory is not proven; that it is not at present shown to be sufficient to account for the formation of new species; that it is attended by palæontologic difficulties which no skill or research has been able to remove; and a leading geologist does not hesitate to say that the "evolutionist doctrine might be taken, but for the mental vigour now witnessed, as an indication that the human mind has fallen into its dotage, and mistakes for science the imaginations that were the dreams of its youth." Some of us are incompetent to decide as to the truth or falsehood of this theory, but we have a right to protest against the assertion that it is "firmly established," and to affirm that it is not scientific to ignore after this manner counter opinions.

In relation to man, never could language be more inappropriate than to say that the theory of development by natural selection has been "firmly" established. Although evolutionists have the advantage that man's appearance on earth has, by many modern geologists, been brought enormously forward, and placed in post-glacial times, nevertheless one of the greatest naturalists of Europe affirms, and no refutation is attempted, that not a fossil vestige of any ancestor of man is to be found in any part of the world. I am not saying whether the theory be true or otherwise, but I would warn against the influence of assumptions. If a jury in a great trial should convict a man, in spite of an acknowledged and total flaw at the very summit of the evidence, they would outrage the moral sense of the world.

A second method is equally objectionable. A Christian advocate of eminence would select as his opponent the most able of sceptical writers. What would be thought of Canon Liddon, if in St. Paul's, he set forth at length, for the purpose of refutation, the opinions of an incompetent and utterly obscure infidel? It is painful to make the supposition. Yet this thing was done by Mr. Pengelly in his opening address to the Department of Anthropology. A pamphlet was quoted of a writer who absurdly speaks of Dr. Carpenter as occupying the chair of the Royal Academy, and another quotation occupying half a page of the address, was taken from a "religious" journal, as it was sneeringly said to be, but which assuredly has never been heard of by the bulk of Christian people. These unknown writers were undoubtedly quoted as representatives of those who doubt the long human antiquity which some claim. Very easy was it to hold a powerful and learned party up to ridicule by such a method, but it cannot be easy to defend its fairness or propriety.

The like thing was done by Professor Ray Lankester. Who, we should like to ask, are those who brand a geologist as a blasphemer, a zoologist as a monomaniac, a physiologist as a monster of cruelty, and a botanist as a pedant? Who are they who affirm that the pursuit of science produces arrogance, irreverence, vanity, and the ambition of personal glorification? There may in England be a dozen persons making pretensions to culture who speak of scientific investigators after such a fashion, but can the fear be kept down that there was a purpose in taking obscure persons as the representatives of men who repudiate such charges? Why should the views of persons of no authority be quoted in a presidential address except it were to awaken a prejudice against other men, and to cover a wider condemnation?

At this stage, then, of scientific inquiry, Christian men must bear in mind that there is a minority of really learned scientists whose opinions are not shared by a larger number of philosophers of equal mark and eminence. Young men must be on their guard against the representations, the dogmatism, and the animus, of this smaller party. We must test whither certain opinions tend and what is their aim. Christianity is treated as a superstition by men who choose to remain in profound ignorance of the Scriptures, of Christian literature, and of the opinions of leading Christian advocates; and, on their part, to do away with Christianity is to set aside our English Sabbaths, our accountability to God, and our Christian morality. Yes; this is the grave issue to which some would bring us; and Christian professors, who approvingly quote these men, are closing their eyes to the serious denials which are intended. On the other hand, we must emphasize the fact that there is a large, and I think an increasing, number of the foremost and most distinguished men of science, who see no contradition between the works and Word of God; who disclaim the unverified assumptions and conjectures that have been menacing the Christian faith; who believe in the unity of nature, and that it forms, under the guidance and control of God, one grand order and continuous whole; but who are also believers in the unshaken truths of the incarnation and infinitely precious teachings of the Son of God.

The "vague mistrust and undefined unbelief" of our age, which has been darkening the atmosphere about us, and robbing so many lives of moral vigour, do not proceed from the true bearing of science upon our age. Its magnificent unfoldings are progressing to fill the world with incalculable beneficent influences, and to throw floods of light on the complex, minute, and infinite wonders of creation. Prevailing mistrust and unbelief arise largely from assertions which are unverified, but allowed, nevertheless, to pass as truth. Never in the history of the ages had Christian believers less occasion to be troubled or shaken in mind, and never were all things more certainly tending to that blessed, long-waited for, and triumphant consummation when God SHALL BE ALL IN ALL.

For the Young.

EAST-END BABIES.

WE extract, as in former years, the very interesting portion of Mrs. Hilton's report that refers to the children under her care in the Crèche at Stepney. We hope many of our young readers will send to 12, Stepney-causeway, London, E., for a copy of the pretty little book itself. Anyhow, they will surely do what they can to help on, and get their parents to help on, this work that is such a blessing to "God's little ones" in the East End.

LIZZIE.

"One day a man came, well recommended by his employers, asking me to take Lizzie, a little girl three and a-half years old. His wife had deserted him; but he said he was able and willing to pay for the child. I saw that he was far advanced in consumption, but seeing the urgency of the case I took the little one. The poor father brought two half-crowns, but he was unable to pay many visits as he got rapidly worse. We sent him blankets and every comfort, as he was living in a small room in a coffee-house, with no one to attend to him. He was so highly valued by his master and men, that they allowed him to believe he earned the few shillings they kindly gave him. He still hoped and believed that he would get well and take Lizzie to live in the country. He was tenderly attached to her, and one day when speaking of her as a dear loving child, he said, 'Oh yes, Ma'am, she is the angel of my life.' In speaking of his wife, who was living a sinful life, he said, "She left us on a Sunday night, and was calling out a vile song when little Lizzie's voice rose sweet and clear, 'Oh think of the Home over there;' her mother ran back to kiss her before she left, and since then I have heard nothing of her."

"We received Lizzie in July, and she appeared thoroughly healthy until the beginning of October, when she complained of earache; this proved to be inflammation of the inner ear, and for ten days her sufferings were intense. I sent a cab for her father, and it was most pathetic to see him sit beside Lizzie's bed, trying vainly to soothe the poor child, and talking to her still of the house in the country and the pretty things he would buy her when she got well. I said 'Yes! the dear Lord is about to take little Lizzie into the beautiful Home that she used to sing about.' He was very much distressed, but said 'The Lord knows best.' The dear child lived a few days, but in such agony that we were all thankful when the end came. Our medical officer reported that an abscess had formed in the centre of the brain.

"In a few days the father also died, and I trust that he has realised the joy that is unspeakable and the peace that passeth knowledge; and that he is now in the presence of the Lord 'to go no more out for ever.'

"Yes! though the land be 'very far' away,
A step, a moment, ends the toil for thee;
Then, changing grief for gladness, night for day,
Thine eyes shall see."

WILLIE.

"One little boy named Willie has been with us nine months; he is three and a-half years old. He lost one of his legs when only eighteen months old through an accident on a tramway car. He was brought to us from a hospital, where he had been nursed for a wound in his head, inflicted by his father, who threw a knife across the room at his wife and it struck the child instead. Some ladies pay for him, as they are anxious to keep him from his parents, who would exhibit him in public-houses. Willie is very happy with us, and can now walk famously with his crutches.

"We have lately received two little children from a woman whose husband deserted her, leaving her with eight children; also twin girls of a mother who had attempted suicide because she despaired of being able to provide food for her six little ones: the latter case was recommended by a Bible-woman.

HARRY.

"Another new inmate is a little boy named Harry, whose mother had deserted her home, leaving her husband with eight children, of whom Harry is the youngest; his father most earnestly pleaded for his admission, saying he could take care of all the rest, but the baby he could not manage; for although nearly two years of age, he was unable to stand or walk, having been much neglected.

"Our medical officer pronounced him very delicate, and we feared to receive him into the London Home; but I was so struck by the look of suffering on the little face I resolved to send him to Feltham, where he is thriving beautifully, and, although he has only been there a few weeks, the good food and much needed care have so improved him that he can walk quite nicely.

DOLLY.

"We have had an unusual amount of nursing in the Home this year, causing us weeks of anxiety and pain. Last year all who read our Report and all who visited the Home were interested in 'Dolly,' the baby who was found in the passage one dark night in October. How we all loved the little waif, and rejoiced in thinking that she was 'our very own,' as the children expressed it. They used to argue thus: "God sent Dolly here; He didn't give her to any mother." She was the first to be thought of; the sweetest flowers, the prettiest toys, were awarded to her by common consent, and had not nurse been wise as well as kind, Dolly might have been spoiled. Dolly was small for her age, but was growing nicely, and was just beginning to walk and talk, when she was taken from us.

"One day in winter nurse asked that the doctor might be sent for, as Dolly was poorly. In a few hours she became very ill, and almost before we realised the danger she was past hope. This household pet was sadly missed by every one; nurse did her best to make the children understand where Dolly had gone, and if asked, 'Where is Dolly?' they would at once answer, 'In heaven.' 'Why did she go?' 'Because,' they would say, 'Jesus wanted her.'

"Only one week of weary pains,
With sufferings oppressed;
And now—the Sabbath that remains,
God's everlasting rest.

"Only one dark and wintry time,
With chill and gloomy hours;
And now—the 'everlasting spring,'
The 'never-withering flowers.'"

"All the other children in our Home are growing and improving in every way. Rose (who used to be called 'Baby Rose') is able to read and work nicely; Amber, Kitty, and Linda, are all becoming very useful.

BLUE RIBBON LIZZIE.

"We have a dear little girl named Lizzie, about five years old, but very small for her age. Her father drank very heavily, and Lizzie has heard of the 'Blue Ribbon,' and seems quite to comprehend what it means, so she is always anxious to have a piece, and looks at everyone who comes into the house to see if they wear the badge. The matron has a very small terrier, and one day Lizzie gravely tied a piece of blue ribbon on his collar, exhorting him to stand firm and be true."

TRIPS AND TOURING.

A FEW months ago many of us were settling our summer plans for touring on the Continent, or for visiting our friends nearer home; taking what we call our holiday, often a needed rest from the responsibilities of home life, or from long, steady work for those who need a helping hand. And now we are again enjoying our snug homes, telling stories of mountain-climbing, of gondola or yacht pleasures, or "talking up" news of distant loved ones. All the while we are planning for ourselves fresh pleasures and fresh work.

May I remind those lively tourists and hearty workers, of a class to whom summer brings no change and no rest, in many cases even an increase in suffering, from the close, exhausting atmosphere, which drives so many of us out of London. I allude to the 20,000 shop-girls and work-women employed in the neighbourhood of St. Paul's. Many of them are so poor, that when at last they cannot stand or walk, they are just carried away to die in a hospital, or some wretched dwelling, for they have had to work on till all power of rallying is gone. And yet these very girls might be saved by a tenth part of the rest and comfort of our summer trips.

In the face of these facts, some young ladies of my acquaintance have lately established, for these young workwomen when ill, a cottage home on the outskirts of Epping Forest, where the delicious, bracing air seems to give a new life. The first donation they received was two shillings, and the next was two shillings; since then kind friends have sent some pounds, others food or furniture. The account of this little scheme being sent to me, I was delighted with its simplicity combined with such incalculable usefulness; for the poor fainting and disheartened patients who are taken in, are comforted, cheered, and set up altogether, body and mind, by good nursing and loving care.

Already thirty-four patients have enjoyed this cosy "convalescent home;" they became much brighter and stronger in a few days, and appear eager for the daily Bible reading and prayer. It is only a trifle that most of us can give, when the claims are so numerous, but it will be a real pleasure to me to receive anything, from a shilling upwards, to add to my own small donation. The young ladies are greatly wanting more funds. Particulars will be sent wherever it is desired. SOPHIA MAY.

Bruce Grove, Tottenham, N.

BIRMINGHAM.—Mrs. Wilson, All Saints' Rectory, Birmingham, writes to us to say that an effort is being made to equip a band of 150 tract distributors in the large and populous parish of All Saints. She asks for suitable tracts and help towards the necessary expenses.

TOTLAND BAY, ISLE OF WIGHT.—Rev. C. H. Grundy, on a recent Sunday, held an interesting service for children in the open-air at this watering-place, at which he gave an address to the children; he made a collection in aid of Totland Church, which amounted to £4 13s. 5d. This was supplemented by an evening collection in the church.

HASLAR HOSPITAL.—Mrs. Cheals, of Brockham Vicarage, Bletchworth, writes to us that during a recent visit to this hospital she was struck by the absence of illustrated wall tracts and interesting reading for the inmates of the wards. She has permission of the chaplain to send a supply of these, and earnestly asks the help of our readers in making this provision for the comfort of these afflicted brethren. What she requires is attractive Gospel publications, coloured and illustrated wall tracts, text cards, Gospel portions, and some large type New Testaments.

Notes and Comments.

AMONG those whose addresses, &c., grace our pages this week, are such well-known authors as Dr. Horatius Bonar, Edinburgh; Rev. Theodore Cuyler, Brooklyn; Rev. Dr. Maclaren, Manchester; Pastor Theodore Monod, Paris; Rev. Wm. Guest, Tunbridge Wells; Rev. Charles H. Spurgeon; Dr. Monro Gibson; Mrs. Josephine Butler, and Mr. Gordon Forlong. We think our readers will agree with us that such a varied combination of Christian talent in one issue of a weekly newspaper is somewhat rare.

Before these lines are read by the public, Mr. Moody, Mr. Sankey, Major Whittle, and Mrs. and Mr. McGranahan will be on the Atlantic en route for Ireland, where the evangelistic campaign will be opened (D.V.) on 10th inst. We hope to furnish full and special accounts of the meetings. May we suggest to our readers that this would be a favourable opportunity for them to commend the paper to others? In our next issue we will give some account of the important Christian Convention at Chicago over which Mr. Moody presided.

Intending emigrants to Canada should take heed to the warning of Rev. T. W. Fyles, Emigration Chaplain at Quebec, against men offering to obtain employment for them on payment of so much money. Much imposition is practised by such means, Mr. Fyles says, and Rev. T. Bridger, of Liverpool, endorses his statement:—

"I have before me a prospectus and a form of contract, issued by a so-called Colonisation Company, the object of which appears to be to induce young men of means, industrious habits, and good character, to hand over 100 dollars for the privilege of working on a farm for five dollars per month, and such board as a Canadian peasant is content with. Any good and useful man coming to Canada in the early part of the year is sure of a welcome, and before winter he will have been able to establish himself. There is no need for a money payment from him to anyone to assure either a welcome or a home; the promise of honest work for honest pay will call forth the one and the fulfilment of the promise will secure the other."

The pernicious practice of opium smoking and eating is said to be greatly gaining ground in our own country. Parliamentary returns and medical writers alike testify to the increasing use of the drug among ourselves. The use of narcotics of various kinds is becoming a crying evil, and calls for the attention of Temperance Reformers, who may find their efforts in relation to drink greatly neutralised by this seductive snare. There is great need to give warning on all sides against the growing habit of resorting to the frequent use of morphia, laudanum, chloral, and similar narcotic preparations, which have a fearfully enslaving power over those who use them.

Dr. Hellmuth, late Bishop of Huron, has been appointed Assistant Bishop of Ripon, and commenced his official work on Sunday last in the Cathedral of that city. Dr. Hellmuth is engaged upon a work soon to be published by Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton, which promises to be of immense value to Bible students. It is a literal translation and critical analysis of the Old Testament in its original languages. The specimen pages we have seen indicate thoroughness of treatment and completeness of information which will make the book altogether unique.

Mr. and Mrs. Muller sailed on Wednesday, September 26, from Gravesend, in the P. and O. ss. Siam for Madras. Mr. Muller was seventy-eight years of age on the 27th ult.

Many of our readers must have followed with an ever-growing wonder and interest, the itinerant journeys undertaken by this venerable servant of God during the past eight years. To all such we commend the perusal of the volume recently published by Messrs. Nisbet & Co., Preaching Tours and Missionary Labours of George Muller. It is a matter-of-fact record, from the journals kept by his companion and helpmeet Mrs. Muller, of her husband's abundant labours in the Gospel throughout the British Isles, the Continent of Europe, Egypt, Palestine, Syria, Canada, and the United States. The very simplicity of the story enables us the better to understand the vastness of the services that Mr. Muller has rendered to the churches during these years. An added interest is given to the narrative by frequent references to the peculiar characteristics of the places and peoples visited. The whole reads like a second volume of the Acts of the Apostles. Many will welcome the most excellent portrait of Mr. Muller, which is here given to the world for the first time.

The following brief extract is full of suggestiveness to Christian workers in this busy age:—

"Some of the readers of this narrative may possibly feel inclined to say: 'With so much travelling from place to place, so many public meetings, and such continual intercourse with strangers, how does Mr. Muller find time to attend to his own spiritual welfare?' The reply to such inquiries is this: Through the goodness of the Lord he is a man given to the reading of the Scriptures and prayer. Whether travelling or at rest, a day never passes without his devoting as much time as possible to the diligent, prayerful study of the Word of God. Besides reading the Scriptures regularly together early in the morning, in the course of the day, whenever there is time, my husband employs it in studying the Bible, in meditation, and in prayer. He waits habitually upon God, and thus it is that, day by day, his spiritual strength and vigour are renewed. This opportunity is taken, however, of commending him earnestly to the prayers of the Lord's people, whether he may be known or unknown to them personally."

We feel sure that many will gladly respond to this request, all the more that Mr. Muller has again set out on a tour of visitation among the churches.

The Rock has put forth a strong plea for the establishment of Sunday-schools for the upper classes. It remarks:—

"Just as Government has secured a better education for the children of the working classes than is enjoyed by the class socially above them, so the children of the upper classes, as a rule, are left outside of the spiritual benefits that those below them enjoy in Sunday-schools established and largely maintained by these very upper classes."

The result is that among well-to-do children there is often found a lamentable ignorance of the Scriptures, the knowledge of which alone can make wise unto salvation. The efforts of the Children's Special Service Mission are partially directed to meet this want, but if a general movement could be initiated for providing in all our churches special classes for the instruction of such children, it would be of incalculable benefit. Many Christians with large rooms at their disposal might find a rich reward in forming classes at their own houses for the Sunday afternoon, while many parents would be thankful to have their children brought under such direct spiritual influence.

We are glad to hear of the safe arrival in Jerusalem of Rev. H. Freidlaender, missionary to the Jews. We trust those friends in this country who were moved by his earnest addresses will not forget him as he resumes his missionary labours among his own people.

Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, in one of his sermons, recently held up our beloved Sovereign to the admiration of his hearers as a peacemaker. He said that when the relations between England and America were greatly strained, as they were some few years ago, despatches for the States Government were presented to her by her Ministers. When she had read them, she caused some sentences to be omitted and others toned down, so that the American Minister was able to accept them without loss of dignity or sacrifice of principle, and thus war was averted. The fact is well worthy of being brought to light, for a royal peacemaker is a far nobler type of monarch than a royal warrior, conqueror though he be.

Le Christianisme au XIX. Siècle speaks of a serious dearth of ministers in the French Reformed Church, and recommends the vacant churches to call in to their aid lay help. "Those churches must be in a sad condition that do not contain a single layman who can pray in public or preside over the worship in the absence of the pastor." The Intérieure Evangélique has more than once visited vacant churches, and its agents have always been well received.

Now that emigration is so prominent a theme, and so urgently recommended by many in every sphere, anything in the way of reliable testimony concerning its advantages or otherwise is of importance. Rev. P. Bailhache, a well-known Baptist minister, who is now home from Australia on a visit to his old friends, spoke at a meeting of the Church he formerly presided over at Hammersmith last week. Having been six times round New Zealand, and having visited all the principal ports of Australia, his opinion is entitled to consideration. He said:—

"As to emigration, if they were doing well at home, he would advise them to remain at home. There were advantages in England and advantages in Australia: but, on weighing both, he gave the preference to the old country. But if they had strength, ability, and genius, which meant infinite perseverance, there were great openings for them on the other side of the globe. Working men were not hindered by the weather, as was often the case in England, and a carpenter could earn 13s. a day. Provisions were cheaper than here, and greater social freedom was enjoyed."

Referring to spiritual matters in the Australian Colonies, Mr. Bailhache said, "Religiously, they were not doing so well as they were four years ago." This fact he accounted for by the withdrawal of energy from the churches and regular methods of Christian work, through new and obnoxious agencies which had been introduced, causing feverishness and restlessness among the people, and general demoralisation of Church life. It is, however, for the Church, both at home and abroad, to provide means for awakening and directing the energies of Christian workers among themselves, so that outside agencies may be less needful. If the churches are inert, as too many of them are, and are content to let the outside world alone, they ought not to complain if others come to the front, and set the example of earnest and incessant effort on behalf of the spiritual welfare of those around them.

"The Christian weakness of pity." Such is the phrase employed by a contemporary in commenting on Professor Lankester's address at the British Association. It is getting to be the fashion in many circles to treat compassion as a weakness, and to speak of stoical views of life as a virtue. Of the two evils, Stoicism and Epicureanism, if we would choose the least, it must not be the former. The milk of human kindness is a moral nutrition that the world can well imbibe more of than has yet been provided. If science is to make pity for animals, and concern for human comfort and well-being, a sign of weakness, then its mission is not one in harmony either with human nature or with Him who called that nature into being.

"Thou, O Lord, art a God full of compassion," is one of the most sublime and delightful revelations of the Divine character to be found in the sacred volume. Were it not so, the state of our world would indeed be hopeless, and man must soon be reduced to despair. The manifestation of God in Christ is full of testimony to the truth of this conception of the Divine Being. Jesus Christ was no hard, cold stoical utilitarian. He felt for human woe, relieved all kinds of distress, and mingled tenderness even with his sternest rebukes. What it is very fashionable nowadays to call "the weakness of pity," is in Christ's system of truth a main element of moral strength. "Be pitiful," is one of his inspired precepts. "Be ye therefore merciful as your Father also is merciful," is another.

Freethought is often pleaded for as being associated inseparably with the cause of universal liberty; and yet no form of belief has proved itself more intolerant and ready to tyrannise. The French Revolution is a standing monument to the truth of this as to the past, while the action of the Swiss authorities of late, urged on and sustained as it has been by agnostic influence, furnishes more modern proof. To imprison Salvationists for what they call "the religious poison" of their creed, is according to them a State duty; but to imprison men for circulating blasphemous caricatures and atheistic libels is an offence against the rights and liberties of men.

A correspondent calls attention to the many Sabbath strollers to be met with in town and country, particularly in London—multitudes who have no idea of attending public worship, and who are utterly careless about spiritual things. The need of earnest effort on their behalf cannot be questioned; indeed few fields offer a wider range for Christian exertion than may be found in this. Our correspondent wishes there were more tracts written specially adapted for this work, pithy, pointed, and attractive. He also suggests that Christian tradesmen, in much frequented thoroughfares, might display in their shop-windows on the Lord's day texts of Scripture, pictures, and Gospel stories, calculated to attract the notice of passers-by.

We learn with much regret of the death on Saturday last, after a brief illness, of Dr. Begg, of Edinburgh, a well-known leader in the Free Church of Scotland. He belonged to what is known as the old school of theology, and as the champion of orthodox principles will be greatly missed. Perhaps he might have yielded more to the spirit of the times in relation to non-essential points of controversy, without loss of fidelity to truth; but he will long be remembered and honoured as a true servant of Christ—one who was "valiant for the truth."

The cause of Christian philanthropy in the Eastern Counties has lost a warm supporter and friend in the death of Mr. Frederic Alexander, of Ipswich, one of the well-known banking firm of Alexanders, Gurney & Co. He was a member of the Society of Friends, and a hearty sympathiser with all good works having for their aim the spiritual and social welfare of men. He was held in high respect and esteem by all who knew him, and will be missed and wanted by many to whom he has proved a benefactor and friend.

An eminent author and Church of England divine has also passed away, Rev. Dr. Stebbing. He, too, was long connected with the Eastern Counties, having been born at Yarmouth, and early associated with Dr. Valpy in the Grammar-school at Norwich. He was for many years Chaplain to the University College Hospital, and although a copious author, is spoken of as having been a devoted pastor among the poor of his own parish. He was the first working editor of The Athenæum, and had personally known Sir Walter Scott, Southey, Campbell, Lister, Jenner, and a host of other literary celebrities. He was altogether a remarkable man. Although in his 85th year, he preached in London so recently as May last. He was warmly attached to evangelical principles, and exerted great influence in their promulgation.

It is strange how quietly many can permit error to assert itself, as though it was of no great moment whether truth was maintained or not. This it is which gives the causes of error so much encouragement, and which lessens the power of the Church to withstand its advance. The following characteristic and valuable words of Mr. Spurgeon on this subject deserve to be graven on every believer's memory:—

"The undisputed excellence of a charitable spirit has become a snare to many amiable minds. Mistaking tolerance of persons for indulgence of error, they have ceased to reprobate false opinions. It is thought by some men unkind to charge others with unscriptural views, and they shudder at the forcible language which earnest believers hurl at the deceivers of modern times. Paul's anathema pronounced against the men or angels who should preach another gospel grates upon their ears; the holy wrath of Jesus himself against Scribes and Pharisees is only allowed by them, but never appreciated. If in stray moments they rise to the dignity of defenders of the faith, they attack their antagonist in the style of Dr. Pye Smith's letters to Belsham, the famous Socinian, which Andrew Fuller thus sternly criticised:—'That was not the way Paul addressed heretics; He did not say to Elymas, My dear sir, pardon my apprehensions, but I fear you are under some serious mistake. No, his words were thunder and fire—O full of all subtlety and mischief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord?'"

Probably the following quotations from Prof. Tyndall's utterances on Evolution, taken from The Popular Science Monthly, will surprise some of those who have hastily accepted the theory, and based assumptions upon it. At any rate they are worth special notice at this time, when the doctrine is so much in vogue with many:—

"Evolution belongs to the dim twilight of conjecture, and the certainty of experimental inquiry is here shut out. . . . Those who hold the doctrine of Evolution are by no means ignorant of the uncertainty of their data, and they only yield to it a provisional assent. . . . Long antecedent to his advice I did exactly what Prof. Virchow recommends, showing myself as careful as he could be, not to claim for a scientific doctrine a certainty which did not belong to it. . . . I agree with him that the proofs of it are wanting. I hold with Virchow that the failures of proof have been lamentable, that the doctrine of spontaneous generation is utterly discredited."

Mr. William Greene, of Ipswich, and Rev. Dr. Bullinger, of the Trinitarian Bible Society, are now on their way to Spain, in order to promote, in that dark land, the circulation of the Scriptures.

A correspondent sends to us this welcome information:—"The London Road Car Company, being persuaded that a day of rest is needful for both man and beast, has decreed that no cars belonging to them shall be run on Sundays."

The meetings of the Baptist Union are in full session this week, a very large number of delegates being present from all parts of the country. We hope next week to note the proceedings, which seem to be of special interest and importance to the churches.

It seems that Mr. Gladstone has not been the first to render Newton's hymn, "Hark, my soul, it is the Lord," into Italian, after all. In 1857 there was published at Turin a little book entitled, "Inni Christiani," intended to furnish the Christians of Italy with devotional hymns for use in public and private. It was the work of Count Tasca, an ardent Italian patriot, who included this choice song in his collection (minus the last verse), together with other translations of English hymns. Mr. Gladstone's is said to be a much more accurate rendering of the original words, Count Tasca having allowed himself greater freedom in translation.

In a recent letter to The Times Rev. J. Guinness Rogers has admirably put the spirit and manner in which Christians should regard the unhappy circumstances connected with the treatment by France of Mr. Shaw at Madagascar. It is in critical seasons like that through which the London Missionary Society has just been passing that the virtues of Christian forbearance and self-control can best be exhibited. Mr. Rogers says:—

"We have acted on the principle that 'in quiet ness and confidence is our strength,' and we shall I have no question, continue to act upon it still That Mr. Shaw will receive the redress to which he is entitled, as a British citizen, there can be no doubt. More we should not ask, and we feel that even that will not be hastened by recourse to angry denunciation. Nothing, indeed, could be more contrary to our sense of what is due to our Society, to our country, to the peace of the world, and, above all, to our religion, than to indulge in language which, by irritating the feelings of the French Government and the French nation, might embitter the relations between the two peoples, embarrass both Governments, and increase the sufficiently serious difficulties of the hour. Such a procedure would be utterly unworthy of a great Christian Society, which, while bound by loyalty to its Master to exhibit a magnanimous temper, can also never forget that for its own work the first and highest of all interests is peace."

The Directors of the London Missionary Society are in every way to be congratulated on the success of their meeting at Exeter Hall to welcome Mr. Shaw and his fellow-workers. The explanation given of the strange treatment of their missionary by the French was, as to its spirit, admirably temperate and clear, and reflects the highest credit on Mr. Shaw, on whom the injustice and cruelty of French officials has inflicted no small personal hardship. A testimony concerning the practical value of Mission work has rarely been given equal in force and sober fact to that borne by both Mr. Cousins and Mr. Shaw on Thursday night. The events they related, sad as they are, in their effects in retarding progress in the island, have, nevertheless, a bright side, for they set forth in strong relief, from many points of view, the beauty and power of the religion of Christ.

CHRISTIAN WOMEN IN COUNCIL.

[BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

THE fourth annual session of the Christian Women's Union commenced on Tuesday last week at Clifton under favourable auspices. The opening meeting for prayer was well attended; the pervading spirit was of that character which the Lord delights to bless—the spirit of "none of self, and all of Thee."

Mrs. Meredith prefaced her presidential address at the first sitting with a brief sketch of the origin of the Christian Women's Union. It was suggested to the minds of herself and Miss Cavendish by some gatherings of Christian women which they had attended in the United States of America, at which great blessing was manifested. They were anxious that similar good should accrue to the scattered women workers of Great Britain. The gatherings already held had justified the existence of the Christian Women's Union. It had served to dissipate prejudices and bring into fellowship those who were working in different spheres. They had received many testimonies on this point of the good which had resulted from former Conferences, and particularly from that of last year at Brighton, where unity had been promoted, and an active branch of th Union formed.

In the absence of Miss Nugent, the writer, Miss Cavendish read an admirable paper, entitled "A Missionary Call to the Young," founded on various incidents in the Gospels where Christ used the words, "Bring them unto Me." First, the boy with the dumb spirit which the disciples could not cast out, recorded in Mark ix. Christ can accept nothing at our hands till we have brought our worst, our sins, our own selves, to be saved from the power as well as the penalty of sin. This point settled first will save much failure. Our wills must be brought to Him and exchanged for his will; that does not mean loss of will. Secondly, the five loaves and two fishes brought unto Christ, typical of our resources and ability to feed unnumbered heathen, passed through his hands can become enough for all. Then came a practical appeal to girls and young women to face the question, and listen for the voice of the Lord. That voice heard and the point settled between their souls and the Lord, some might respond at once, but others might have to wait many years before the way was opened for the desire of their hearts to be fulfilled. But they could live towards it and learn towards it. Let them count their qualifications: how many loaves have ye? Loaves and fishes are both needed—the loaves, training and culture; fishes, that spirit of loving earnestness not outwardly gained. The writer concluded by an appeal to mothers not to hinder their best and brightest daughters from the service of the King. "He is worthy for whom ye should do this."

Mrs. Meredith said, in the present pressure of work, with open doors and call for labourers on every hand, none who could go should be kept back. Home-work should be second to the calls of Christ for workers in foreign fields.

Mrs. Fisher, of London, said she would like to mention a lesson that had been brought home to her own mind recently in connection with the feeding of the five thousand by Christ. It was this: Jesus took the loaves, took the whole responsibility of feeding so many; the disciples had only to distribute it from his hands.

Mrs. Clerk, a returned medical missionary, spoke of a practical way by which Christian families could keep up an interest in Missions by having a certain evening periodically set apart for reading reports of missionary work. In one family, where this course had been pursued, much good had resulted. A young man who had come for a short period as tutor had been led to offer himself for the work; then a governess; and now one of the sons is preparing for the same field of labour.

Miss Cavendish said that a practical way of helping foreign workers was to send them good literature and newspapers.

The afternoon sitting was divided into four sectional meetings. The Mission section was continued from the morning, under the presidency of Mrs. Savile. Mrs. Fielden Thorp, Mrs. Aukland and Mrs. Casson took part in that devoted to Temperance. In the moral questions section a discussion was conducted by Mrs. Meredith, in which it was elicited that an excellent rescue and preventive organisation exists in Bristol, including a small hospital and a home for laundry workers. Miss Cavendish gave an address to schoolgirls in the rooms of the Y.W.C.A., at the same hour.

Miss Mason presided at the evening meeting, and gave a few suggestive thoughts on 1 Cor. ii. 9—13, comparing the state of the natural man to the mineral kingdom in the material world; it is unconscious of life, and yet becomes incorporated into vegetable life by feeding the roots of plants. The natural man could only comprehend spiritual things by a revelation from God. God says, "if any man will hear my voice, we will come and sup with him, and make our abode with him." To such the command is to preach the Gospel to every creature. Your bit of the world lies just round about you; go out farther if God calls you.

Mrs. Fisher gave a very interesting account of her work among the cigar workers and other toiling sisters in the City of London. Cigar making is unhealthy work, many of the factories are closed during the dinner-hour, and the streets swarm with the girls, who have mostly no other resource. She deeply longed to open some room where they might have shelter and hear the Word of life, and in answer to prayer a room was offered in the premises of the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street. She commenced with three girls, one of whom was early converted to God, and became a great influence for good in her own workroom. Step by step the work has grown. Now they have, on two separate premises, accommodation for dining 1000 girls daily, where they can buy cheap and wholesome food. In the new building in Jewin-street they have a home where girls can lodge. Many ladies are engaged with her in visiting the workrooms: eighty to a hundred warehouses are open to them. Three Bible women are employed, and a large Letter Mission carried on.

Miss Bontein spoke in a touching manner of the power of littles, as illustrated in the Ashley Mission at Bethnal-green. A mothers' meeting, commenced with fifteen women some years ago, formed the nucleus. That mothers' meeting now numbers 300, and only one of the first fifteen remains, twelve having gone to the abode of the ransomed above. Twelve other meetings have grown from that commencement. Night classes of men from seventeen to seventy years of age are held; the Gospel teaching has been blessed to many souls. One instance was cited of the conversion of a card-player, who has been now four years an earnest working Christian. Classes are also held among a sadly degraded set of factory girls; there are cases in which the good seed has taken root and some are now Sunday-school teachers. At the earnest entreaty of some members of the Force, a policeman's Bible-class has been recently commenced; it now numbers thirty-five, and there has been three decided conversions already. One whose beat is in the neighbourhood of Whitechapel has commenced a helpful work among the poor lost girls whom he finds in the streets at night, and he has sent many to Homes.

Miss Skinner, of Bath, gave an account of the Letter Mission, in which she finds a sphere of labour. Many of the letters have been translated into other languages, and 1000 copies of one have been circulated in Arabic. Mrs. M. Baxter concluded the meeting with a short evangelistic address, which was based on the account of the influence of the Holy Spirit upon the early disciples as recorded in Acts iv., when great grace fell upon them all. Comparing Christians of the present day with this standard, how far they fall short of this great grace, and how much more power they would have by a full surrender to God.

Wednesday morning was devoted to educational subjects. Mrs. Fyffe commenced by reading a paper on "The advantage to girls of the study of the New Testament in the original Greek." In that language God first made known the New Covenant. Much of the spirit and life was inevitably lost by translation. All the various shades of meaning could not be expressed in English. Mrs. Fyffe cited instances of this, and succeeded in deeply interesting her auditors. She advocated learning Greek, verse by verse, straight from the New Testament as a helpful method of searching the Scriptures, digging below the surface. After detailing the method in which the study was to be pursued, she concluded with a not unneeded word of warning that this be not looked upon as a literary and intellectual treat, or like the scribe of olden days, who studied in the letter without the spirit, but in humble dependence on the Lord Himself.

Mrs. Meredith hoped that next year some lady would come forward to give an equally stimulating paper on the study of Hebrew, the oldest language of all, in which God first made known his mind to man. An interesting discussion followed. Miss L. M. Moor added her testimony to the last words of Mrs. Fyffe, as to the aid to devotional reading obtainable from the study of Greek, to be able to drink in, for instance, all the added richness of the ideas of Romans vii., viii., ix. Mrs. Clerk said it would be well for girls to be encouraged to learn any language for which they had opportunity. As a girl of sixteen, she had studied Arabic, and on a recent visit to Algiers, had found she could recall it with little difficulty, and had thus been able to translate some Hindostanee tracts into Arabic, which had been of great use among the natives. Mrs. Fyffe had found the knowledge of Greek a great tie between herself and her boys; its study would also form a bond of union between sister and brother. Miss Winscombe added her experience of the helpful interest gained in the study of the New Testament in Anglo-Saxon, the first written tongue of our forefathers, in which Christ is always spoken of as the "healer," and the Apostles as "learning lights."

Next came a paper from Miss K. Tristram, on "The Practical Results of Higher Education," from which we glean a few thoughts. The minds of women were generally allowed to possess the characteristics of uncertainty, vagueness, and want of accuracy. This was the result of mistraining. Preparation and education were as much needed for woman's sphere as for man's. It was less important that this should be comprehensive, than that each branch of study should be perfectly mastered. Education for women beyond the old lines is still looked on with suspicion by some, but consecrated intellect has in all ages been used of God. We have Moses and Paul, as well as the Gallilean fishermen. Women need educational training, to study first principles, that they may be ready with a chain of right reasoning to justify their right intuitions. In girls' schools, great progress has recently been made. Unless Christian women enter the lists to become teachers now higher education is prevailing, the work will be left to those who are not Christians, and unbelief will hold its ground while the secular teaching is in advance of the religious. This thoughtful paper was concluded by an account of the new college for young women at Hampstead, conducted by Miss Maynard.

In the Educational Section on Wednesday afternoon the first subject taken up was the use and abuse of poetry and fiction. Miss Lloyd said there was a certain unwillingness to enter into the subject on account of its being a vexed question. But the power to write fiction was a gift from God, and He gives no wrong gift. Miss Lloyd deprecated the habit of reading novels in which vice is held up as a virtue, and sins are made interesting. After a few words on the need of fiction to some people, and the harm of it to others, according to the imaginativeness of their minds, she suggested as a question for the "Christian Women's Union," whether they could not encourage a different class of reading.

Miss Cavendish thought that we should read fiction in the same proportion as we should take sugar in our food. Mrs. Saville testified to the usefulness of good story books, and traced her own first desires to be of any use to others to the reading in early life of "Ministering Children." A note sent to the platform from a lady in the room asked if we should not follow our Lord's example who taught by parable. Miss Lloyd objected to a comparison between the parables of Sacred Writ and stories of the present day. Miss Winscome and Miss Barnard also took part in the discussion.

"The Higher Education of Women" was the next subject under consideration. Miss Cavendish said there was a mistaken idea that a girl's education should be finished with school life. The brain was strongest and most active between the ages of eighteen and twenty-two.

Miss K. Tristram gave some useful information concerning the correspondence classes of the Christian Women's Education Union. Any subject is taught, but half an hour every day must be devoted to the study of the Scriptures. Miss Cavendish, in a few further remarks, spoke of the positive duty of Christians to devote all their powers to the Lord, not only their souls and bodies, but their minds, next to spiritual nature comes intellect. Mrs. Lance spoke of the necessity of moral teaching. Young people get knowledge, and the question is, In what manner shall they get it? This moral guidance is a duty too much shirked by teachers. Miss Warner, from America, spoke of the moral influence of women; the quiet discountenance of a laugh, or a look, will often stop an unseemly word.

(To be concluded in our next.)

SALISBURY CONFERENCE.

THE Conference at Salisbury, annually convened by Rev. Edgar N. Thwaites, was held last week, and was better attended and proved more interesting than ever. The subjects were in the main well treated of. Those in the mornings were given by Lord Mount Temple, Rev. J. J. Luce, and Mr. Field, on "Faith." Mr. George Holland, Rev. Lee Pitcairn, Messrs. R. C. Morgan and J. Hudson Taylor, on "Hope;" Rev. C. E. Unwin and Mr. George Holland, on "Love."

The evening subjects were the past, present, and future Resurrections, dwelt upon by Revs. J. J. Luce, J. H. Taylor, F. Baldey, W. Frith, E. N. Thwaites, and J. Wilkinson. The doctrinal and practical aspect of the resurrections were dwelt upon at length by the various speakers.

In the afternoon profitable Bible-readings were given by Rev. J. J. Luce. Dr. Barnardo also gave an account of his work among the waifs and strays in London; Mr. Hudson Taylor spoke of the work of the China Inland Mission; and Rev. J. Wilkinson the work of the Lord among the Jews.

The conversations at the dinner-table, and especially the réunions for tea at the house of the hospitable convener, were, as usual, among the most enjoyable portions of the three days' proceedings. Mr. Thwaites does good service to his brethren, and to the Church through them, by the instruction and fellowship enhanced by these meetings.

Among the practical results was the gift of five rings as a thankoffering to the Lord; one lady and gentleman gave all their jewellery, and two others offered themselves for the China Mission field.

MR. CHARLES COOK has been holding services at Clophill, where there is great need of earnest testimony for the truth of the Gospel. The Fair has just been held; it was visited by Rev. S. J. Compton and his wife, and another clergyman, who also went to the publichouses. The meetings were well attended, and there were evident signs of blessing.

AMONG THE HOP PICKERS.

[BY OUR OWN REPORTER.]

OUR readers are reminded from year to year of the great need of Gospel effort among the tens of thousands who flock from the metropolis and other cities and towns into Kent, Sussex, Surrey, and Hants, for what is known as "hopping." Many have helped the Lord's servants who give themselves to this work, to go into the gardens with bundles of books and tracts, hold Gospel meetings, and give free teas where necessary.

With the object of seeing for ourselves what is done by these workers, we made our way one morning last week to the village of Ivy Hatch, between Sevenoaks and Maidstone, where we found Mr. George Gillingham, who for ten years past has thrown himself heart and soul into singing and preaching the Gospel to the "hoppers." Within five miles of this centre there would be at least ten thousand pickers. To reach them all is no easy task; to be able to turn their jocose remarks to good account, and to their own confusion, needs the wisdom of the serpent and the harmlessness of the dove.

THE GARDENS.

We sallied forth early after breakfast into gardens where there was work enough for the morning. Taking our stand by the bin, and commencing to pick, which opens the way for conversation, we soon begin to find out the state of the four or five persons which surround it.

"Top o' the mornin' to yer honour," says a fine London Irishwoman. "That's a good gintleman, sir," referring to Mr. Gillingham, "he's our best friend he is; we gets the pure Word o' God from him, and no back doors." Further conversation showed that this woman knew the way of salvation, though she, in common with the rest, denied the possibility of knowing Christ as a present Saviour. The Scriptures are at once referred to; a few kindly words spoken to each set, and we pass on.

The dinner-hour arrived, when the pickers formed into groups to refresh their bodies. After allowing about twenty minutes for the meal, a meeting was announced, and the majority came round to hear the singing and listen to earnest words of salvation.

"Thank ye for spaking to us, sir," said one. "Come again soon," said another.

In the afternoon we proceeded in another direction, with heaps of tracts for distribution in the gardens en route to the place where an open-air meeting was fixed for six p.m. Notwithstanding the coarse language heard here and there, Mr. Gillingham and his helpers were well received. In answer to the question, "How do you like these men coming bothering you about these things in the gardens?" "We likes it, sir," replied one. "They gentlemen tries to teach us the right way to live and die," said another. "God bless 'em," said a third.

Having reached our extreme point, the first meeting was held just as the people had got home and sat down to tea. "Gospel Bells" are sounded out from the pony trap, and the youngsters rush forward to hear the music, many joining in the singing. Short addresses are given in between the hymns, and off we drive to a second encampment, where there are at least 500 men and women "on strike." Their spirits are rough, and their expression anything but pleasant. Fearing the possibility of losing some of our things, we put everything out of sight, and commenced singing. "We've come to cheer you up a little, friends; you have plenty of difficulties," said Mr. Gillingham, and off with "Scatter Seeds of Kindness;" then a few texts and exhortations, breaking out into a hymn if confusion arises.

Thus we passed on from camp to camp, on our way home, holding no less than seven meetings, at which over a thousand heard the way of salvation, besides those who had been spoken to at their bins.

This is a sample of the way in which Mr Gillingham and his helpers labour during the hop season. Free teas are given where there seems to be absolute need; old clothing, too, opens the way to many hearts. We saw a score or more who had no shirt on, and a large number having on old and odd boots, without stockings. A knowledge of medicine, where doctors are so scarce, is a great boon, especially among the children.

Having said farewell and God-speed to the Ivy Hatch workers, Mr. J. J. Kendon, of Goudhurst, was the next brother we visited. Here as many as six earnest workers had been engaged for nearly four weeks, visiting the gardens and holding meetings night after night at the camps and in the villages. For more than twenty years Mr. Kendon has laboured among the hoppers, and year by year

THE WORK INCREASES.

The number within reach of the workers with him is probably not less than 20,000.

The same details could be given in reference to this district only with a considerable enlargement. At one village a meeting was held every Sunday and Wednesday, which not only brought together many of the hop-pickers but also the villagers. Here a van was brought out by the people themselves, lamps and harmonium lent, and seats for the old people, from seven to eight hundred rallying round to hear the Gospel sung and preached.

The same thing can be said of every place in this district visited by these evangelists. Now and then cases of real conversion turn up, but it is impossible to estimate the result of successive years' labours: eternity alone can reveal that. The free teas in the Goudhurst district have brought hundreds under the sound of the Gospel, though the workers themselves do not advocate too much of this kind of work, as the people earn fair pay generally; nevertheless, one here and there in turn has had good effect. Clothing is a greater necessity as a rule. Not only do we find work being done on a large scale, as at Ivy Hatch, Goudhurst, and Alton, but many private Christian farmers engage a City missionary for their own and neighbouring farms. Doubtless many more could do this; the expense is not much, and it would be a change for many a London worker and brace him up for his winter's work.

We do not advocate the growth of hops, but seeing they are grown, by Christian farmers too, we plead that the workers we have named and many more unnamed, because unknown, may be enabled yet more effectually to carry the Gospel to the pickers. At Pembury a City missionary has laboured for a number of years under the auspices of a resident Christian gentleman. A large number of strangers visit this neighbourhood. Meetings have been held at the camps and in the village. It was our privilege to attend one meeting at which over two hundred listened to the Gospel and afterwards adjourned to a schoolroom for a sort of after-meeting.

Mr. Jay, of the Country Towns Mission, has also been labouring in the neighbourhood of Tunbridge Wells, where he has been well received. The Gospel preached was listened to by the Irish, and it is hoped with good effect.

Mr. D. G. Skipp has spent several weeks among the pickers in East Kent, where he has had much encouragement, and been able to give away many tracts sent him by our readers.

MILITIAMEN AT WARWICK.—A correspondent writes to us of an effort she and others have made among the militiamen gathered here for training. Classes were formed for reading, writing, arithmetic, singing, and Scripture study. A savings bank was opened, and refreshments provided. On Sundays a large Bible-class was held, at which many of the men attended; the results have been very gratifying. Those of our readers who are desirous of learning further details might communicate with Miss Maria G. Collins, Trevor, Warwick.

NOTES FROM NEW ZEALAND.

By GORDON FORLONG.

CHRISTIAN work in New Zealand ought to interest British Christians greatly. New Zealand is, humanly speaking, a young giant likely to influence other lands yet. Great Britain has sent to those Islands vigorous, bold shoots, and circumstances have nourished her children well here.

Men have often gone over to America, merely as tourists, to judge regarding emigration, and tens of thousands of hasty and rash emigrants have gone to America. But those who have come to New Zealand had to make up their minds for a longer and more serious migration, and my impression is that New Zealand, although it has few emigrants as compared with America, has a steadier and abler class, on the whole, and more thoughtful men.

It has fallen to my lot to see as much of the two Islands as most men in a few years, and holding public meetings in both Islands I ought to know in a general way the state of the public. Five or six years ago these Islands were in a very dead, careless state. Intemperance had reigned and public-houses were the most flourishing establishments. Tracts were freely read in because few books or papers could be found, but Sunday was often the day of "Cards" or "Pig Hunting." Men have told me that even a few miles only from a town they did not know Sunday from any other day, not even a form of religion was observed. One who had as a boy been in the congregation of Dr. Winslow told me he considered he was "rather religious" because he did not pig-hunt on Sunday.

One or two large stations had Christian men over them and stood out as lights in the darkness. A few ministers were evidently earnest, good men, but they saw no revivals, and were very weak and desponding; alas! also I must record what public opinion reported, that many preachers of different denominations who had back-slidden at home, or become intemperate, were sent out here to recover their characters; but practically to damage and destroy Christianity, and ruin the souls of others.

THE MAORIS

had a great work done among them fifteen years ago, and many old Maoris still alive tell of these good days, but the most earnest workers among them now tell me that the young Maoris are a careless, drinking class of men, and alas! every northern township proclaims the same. A form of godliness is maintained by some of them, but a young earnest Maori is a miracle; their preachers very seldom live among them, only appearing in the "pah" on Sunday. The early missionaries lived among them often, and day by day visited their families. Reading prayers to them, and delivering lectures on Sunday, often produces a good return in collections, as they are sometimes wealthy, but not conversions. I hear of no good work among them anywhere. The son of a Maori chief, an educated, able young man, appeared at the Salvation Army meetings in Auckland, took decided ground, and is likely to be a good witness; I believe the Salvation Army style would do a great work among the Maoris if the preachers spoke Maori.

MRS. HAMPSON

has done a great deal of good in these islands. I first saw her in Liverpool, I believe; she was then in connection with Mr. Reginald Radcliffe's meetings, and I have no doubt that our Brother Radcliffe's preaching prepared her for her present work. She is one of the most useful public workers; she is full of truth, speaks fluently and naturally, and as she has buried ten or twelve children, she has gone through fires that have given her grace to be humble and yet very bold. She has preached in Auckland, Wellington, Waganwi, Oamaru, Christchurch, Dunedin, and Invercargill, and all the churches were provoked by her to greater zeal and love. She generally had three or four ministers on the platform with her.

THE SALVATION ARMY

appeared in Dunedin a few months ago, and was narrowly watched and criticised by Dunedin's Scotch population. Many questioned some of the rules and regulations of General Booth, and the system of borrowing money at home, and various other points. The earnest Christians determined, however, to try the new preachers upon their own merits, apart from their system, and "Captain" Pollard, "Captain" Burfoot, and his excellent wife, were well received at once. It was felt by almost all earnest Christians that these excellent workers were, in fact, hot, zealous Wesleyans, under a new name only, ardent in love, bold to win souls, jealous in walk and conversation, and I for one soon felt that in my exhausted state (having kept up the theatre services for nine months) they were the very preachers to take up the theatre work. They not only kept up their own "Temperance Hotel," but they over-crowded the theatre as well, and I saw some of my own hearers brought down to the Cross of Christ quickly and effectually. One young "teacher" said, "They caused me to decide at once. But where am I to go for food now?" he said. A very good question, but sowers are not often reapers. Why should we complain that the sower is not a reaper? God will draft his stock into feeding pastures in due time. Bless God for sowers, and pray for pastors.

The Salvation Army is provoking every church in Dunedin to work, and a population of about 40,000, with suburbs, gives them room enough. They say very quaint things often, but so did Rowland Hill, and their most extravagant actions are not equal to what I have seen James Turner do and say; yet he was owned to the salvation of thousands. They are very young in years, and sometimes mistake the flesh for the Spirit, and intersperse jests with solemn appeals. But they are natural, truthful, prayerful, and simple. They are winning hundreds of the young (even after large deductions), and laying violent hands on the worst characters and plucking very ugly brands out of the fire. Some of us who care very little about the Salvation Army love and admire these dear young workers, and God is giving them many seals to their ministry.

held high mass in Dunedin some years ago, but various causes have tended to lessen its influence, and Christian meetings have been so lively and numerous that deistical meetings have sunk down. They are obliged to charge at the doors when they hold a meeting; the charity of Freethinkers is not to be trusted to pay for expenses as they go out. On the other hand, the theatre which I held for nine months paid its own expenses at the door.

DRAWING-ROOM MEETINGS

also Mrs. Forlong held occasionally, and we believe good was done in them.

Now we have left the South Island after an almost three years' sojourn there, and returned to our former residence in Rangatikei. I am glad to hear that Sir William Fox, who has been the Premier of New Zealand two or three times, takes Sunday meetings occasionally, and preaches a clear Gospel in Rangatikei, where his own property lies.

SYMPATHY AND CO-OPERATION.

IN a recent episcopal charge delivered at Cavan, Ireland, the Bishop of Kilmore gave the following excellent advice to his fellow-workers; his wise words deserve to be considered and acted out by Christian ministers everywhere:—

"The unity we must aim at in our pastoral work is not that of absolute similarity of organization, but the all-pervading spirit of devotion to the service of God and of our brethren, that, despite diversities of operation, knows how to take advantage of every opportunity to adapt itself to each varying sphere of duty, and by the constant cultivation of a temper of consideration for and forbearance towards the feelings of others, to obtain that real influence over their minds which alone can make us truly useful as their guides and teachers. To win men to our views by force of argument only is always difficult—it is well-nigh impossible when that argument, from whatever cause, becomes tinged with personal irritation. The traveller wraps his cloak more closely round him at the breath of the angry north winds; he bares his heart to the sunshine of sympathy; and nowhere is this more true than in the work of the ministry. The man who does real good in his parish is not always the cleverest organizer, or most striking preacher. It is he who, while steadfast as a rock for the doctrine of God his Saviour, knows how to adorn it by true humility and self-control; in whose tongue is the law of kindness, and in his heart that greater gift of charity, to be coveted the most earnestly, because without it all others remain barren and unfruitful.

"With unreasonable and foolish men we must, from time to time, expect to meet, but even against them the servant of the Lord must not strive with the weapons of natural indignation, perilously easy to use, and so fatal to all chance of future usefulness. The patience, gentleness, and meekness of the Apostolic injunction, are weapons of a higher warfare, and on them only rest the blissful hope that God will so use our teaching as to give unto those who oppose themselves repentance unto the acknowledgment of the truth and recovery from the toils of the devil.

"At the same time it is not to be forgotten that this spirit of charity on our side is but one part of the great bond of peace that should secure the unity of the Church. We must look for the other strand in the hearty co-operation of the laity in all our work of faith, and labour of love, not merely by the gift of their substance, but by their aid and advice in every effort for the good of man and glory of God. To obtain this co-operation is a most important part of our duty, and where it is neglected or discouraged the work of the Church is most imperfectly carried out. We all—clergy and laity—are alike the servants of God, and equally bound to consecrate to him our energies and our lives. To every one of us comes the voice out of his Throne—"Praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear Him, both small and great." And whenever the blessed time arrives that we shall obey it with one accord and one mind, it will be to announce in triumphant chorus that the Lord God omnipotent reigneth, and the kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ. Until then let us each in his own sphere of duty strive to hasten this glorious consummation, and to work together as Christ's faithful members, for his body's sake, which is the Church, the eye directing the hands, and the head choosing straight paths for the feet, until we all come, in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE EVANGELISTS.—On Friday, the 28th September, the anniversary of this association was held, Mr. C. H. Spurgeon presiding. It was stated that 3697 services had been held during the year. The evangelists had laboured in England and Ireland with many encouraging signs. Mr. Spurgeon, in his usual hearty style, strongly enforced the need of continuing to preach Jesus Christ and Him only.

GOD'S WORK IN FINLAND.

READERS of The Christian who remember Mr. Grattan Guinness's papers on Finland, a year ago, will rejoice to hear how abundantly God has blessed the work then done in this town (Ekenäs) and the surrounding country. With one or two exceptions, all the converts, numbering some two or three hundred, have remained steadfast in their profession, have grown in grace and knowledge of the Lord, and been themselves used in winning other souls for Christ. A few facts may serve to illustrate the depth and extent of the movement.

While a year ago drunkenness, with all its attendant evils, flourished unchecked, it has been acknowledged even by the world, how marvellously this has decreased in one short twelvemonth. A Total Abstinence Society was formed, which slowly but steadily has made its influence felt.

A year ago the children, particularly of the poor, had no one to care for them. Now a sister, assisted by other ladies, has gathered them to her own house to a Sunday-school. The attendance has been so good that her rooms have been quite filled; the parents, although not themselves believers, being glad to send their little ones to her school. Another lady began a school for adults, some of whose letters to me last winter surprised and delighted my English friends, who could hardly believe such progress possible, as none of them could even write their name four months before. For want of suitable premises many intending scholars have been turned away. The need of a separate schoolhouse is often felt.

Besides the above efforts, all sprung into existence within a year, we have a Dorcas Society, which has proved of great advantage and benefit, and a "Sankey" Choir, under the efficient training of a lady convert, who has already enriched our slender store of Sacred Song by some fine translations of the best-known pieces in Songs and Solos.

Some of the converts have had meetings in their own houses, expounding the Scriptures; have made journeys to sick and infirm; while some enthusiasts clubbed together to print tracts for free distribution.

There is thus abundant reason for praise and thanks, though to one conversant with things in this country, such notes must always be mingled with fervent prayer that God would send forth more labourers into his beautiful harvest-field, Finland. The country is stretching her arms towards heaven, crying, "Come over and help us." Considering this, I proposed at a meeting of Christians last week, at a place down among our fishing population, amidst whom I had been labouring, that we should unite to found a Mission for Evangelising Finland, supporting labourers in the Gospel as our means would permit. This proposal met with cordial and earnest support, and in twenty minutes the friends present (fishermen and peasants, with their families) had subscribed among themselves, in annual contributions, over 200 marks (£8) towards the Mission Fund. About £80 will be wanted to sustain one missionary, and when this sum is guaranteed the work will commence. We invite our British and other fellow-Christians to join us, both in praise for the great things already gone, and in prayer that God would smile yet more abundantly on our efforts. Any brotherly help towards the supporting of missionaries will be thankfully received.—Yours in the service of Christ, Waldemar Lönnbeck.

Ekenäs, Finland, Sept.

In a most interesting letter, written a short time previously from Skåldö, Ekenäs, Finland, to Mr. Radcliffe, of Liverpool, Mr. Lönnbeck says:—

"This is one of the largest islands of the many hundred lying between Ekenäs and the Gulf of Finland, distant from town about ten miles, and reached partly on foot and partly by boat. The house where I am staying is one of several near the centre of the island, forming a "by" or hamlet. The farmhouses are of somewhat primitive construction, dense fir and pine forests round about, and more or less complete clearings here and there to allow the tiller of the soil to pursue his ancient and indispensable industry. Although no river sweeps the valley, yet there is no lack of water; I have only to raise my eyes from the paper to see before me, at no very great distance, two beautiful sheets of water, seemingly two charming lakes, but really only the crystal waters of the Gulf, flanked on either side, and bordered by some lovely islands; while from this side a wild headland, densely covered with fir and pine, dashes boldly out into the sea, dividing it as it were into two separate waters. Opposite this settlement, on the other side the valley, detached farmhouses peep out from cluster of birch and pine.

"It was my privilege to preach at this place last summer, during a two days' visit, and great has been my joy now to meet one after another who then received blessing (some at the very first hearing), and have since walked in 'newness of life.' My host, who was converted simply through reading the Bible, relates how formerly he only knew of four Christians 'here about,' but now, in this immediate neighbourhood, there are twenty who regularly attend his Sunday afternoon Bible readings. Thus his next-door neighbour, once a bitter opponent, reviling and scoffing, and his tables laden with novels, now sits at the feet of Jesus, learning meekly from Him. All the novels are cleared out and replaced by the Word of God, the far-famed Songs and Solos, and many excellent works suitable for a Christian.

"Last night I preached here again, about a hundred persons having gathered in brother B——'s spacious salle to hear the Word. The Spirit of God was manifestly working in many a heart. Their fervent thanks and eager inquiries as to when the next meeting would be, all pointed in the same direction, and make me feel that another great harvest of souls is at hand in this locality. To-day is set apart for visiting single families, on this and some neighbouring islands, some members of which are saved, and have desired to have a Bible reading under their own roof.

"On Sunday I hope to preach in the country, some twenty miles from here, at a place where last week, at the funeral of a wealthy farmer, I had a good opportunity of preaching Christ to about a hundred persons who had been invited to the funeral."

WOOD GREEN, N.—Mr. G. O. Barnes, the "Kentucky mountain evangelist," recently conducted a week of Mission services at the Gospel Hall at this place. The meetings were well attended. Mr. Barnes set forth the Gospel of the grace of God in forcible language, and with powerful effect. His particular ideas on faith-healing and sanctification are somewhat exaggerated. Miss Barnes sings the Gospel very sweetly, and is thereby a good help to her father in his work for the Lord.

OPIUM-EATING IN INDIA.—We are very much surprised to learn from the Bombay Guardian that it is customary in Western India to allow prisoners who have been addicted to the use of opium to continue its use in the public jails. In Bengal no opium whatever is allowed in the prisons, and the result is most satisfactory. None die, and many are permanently cured of the habit. To cure an opium-taking thief of his perverted appetite is tantamount to curing him of stealing, and as reforming the criminal is one leading object of imprisonment, it is more than a wonder to us that the extraordinary custom of supplying prisoners with the drug should prevail in any part of India. We strongly favour the policy of imprisoning, under mild conditions, all confirmed victims of appetites, whether drunkards, opium-takers, ganja smokers, or any others. The vice should be punished, sober people should be protected, and the victims saved. The opium dens of Calcutta should be emptied by the police, and the wretched creatures who are dozing a worthless life away amid the deadly fumes of the destroying drug, should be locked up in prison for two weeks, and then set to work for six months, after which the majority of them would return to their homes to lead quiet and respectable lives.

DR. GIBSON ON "ROCK AND SAND."

TO a fairly large and most attentive company Dr. Monro Gibson gave his introductory lecture at Aldersgate-street, on the evening of Monday week. Mr. George Williams presided, and in a few genial sentences introduced the lecturer.

Before entering on the discussion of his theme Dr. Gibson said he was delighted to be at this kind of work again. A somewhat singular circumstance had happened, which he would mention. As he left his house to come to the meeting a bulky packet was put into his hands; it had just arrived by mail. He found it contained seven or eight separate letters. An inspection of the packet revealed the fact that two families who were accustomed to attend his lectures in Chicago several years ago had moved to the State of Colorado. Having met there, they began to talk about the lectures, and agreed that they would sit down and write to him what they called "a round robin." So each person wrote a separate epistle, and the whole were enclosed in one budget; each writer expressed the earnest hope that he would go on with the same sort of work in London.

After this pleasant and suitable prelude, the Doctor proceeded to "clear the ground." We regret that we can only find room for the barest outline of his cogent and valuable address. Having remarked that the title of the course, "Rock and Sand," was of course borrowed from the famous parable of our Lord, he devoted some time to an exhortation about the importance of character-building, and the tremendous issues that hang on the way in which we build. The great secret of successful life-architecture is hearing and obeying Christ. Coming to the more immediate topic of the evening, he advanced some preliminary considerations that would have to be kept in view in dealing with this subject.

First, we must have a clear idea of the main question. It would be impossible to go over all the ground embraced by what is known as "Christianity"—a word which does not occur in the Bible at all. "The whole system of the universe" could not be discussed in these lectures; the main question is whether "God was in Christ reconciling the world to Himself." If that can be established, all else will follow. Second, there must be a clear idea of the kind of proof required. Such a subject does not admit of what is called "mathematical" demonstration. That sort of proof can only be applied in cases where we can lay down our own premises. Taking things as we find them, we must be content to reach what is known as "moral certainty." The next point is, that we are by no means bound to answer all the difficulties that may be presented. To do this would require omniscience. Let us follow this excellent maxim: Never let what you do not know disturb what you do know. If we can give a good reason for the hope that is in us, we may be well content to say about many things, "I do not know." Then we must be careful to distinguish between "links" and "strands" of evidence. The strength of a chain is its weakest link, but the strength of a rope is the strength of all its strands taken together. Because one strand may not bear the strain put upon it, that does not prove that the rope will not hold. Remember, too, that a threefold line of evidence is far more than three times the strength of a single line of evidence. Finally, in the matter of Christian evidences everything must come in its own order. We must begin at the foundation. There are three great links in the chain of Christian evidences: First, the being of God; second, the revelation of God in Christ; and last, the record of that revelation by the Holy Spirit in the Scriptures. It is in this order that the subject will be unfolded in the lectures that follow. Let us approach it in the spirit of meekness and fear, and we shall see that we have ample grounds on which to render a reason for the hope that is in us.

We would advise any of our young London readers who are not well grounded in the faith to attend these helpful lectures.

BEYOND.

THERE is a calm beyond life's fitful fever—
A deep repose, an everlasting rest;
Where white-robed angels welcome the believer
Among the blest.

There is a Refuge where earth's cares and troubles
No longer on the ransomed spirit prey,
A lasting joy, when pleasure's gilded bubbles
Have passed away.

There is a Home where all the soul's deep yearnings
And silent prayers shall be at last fulfilled,
Where strife and sorrow, murmurings and heart-burnings,
At last are stilled.

There is a Land with "milk and honey" flowing,
Where scenes of beauty meet th' enraptured view.
God's people to this promised land are going—
Will you come too?

There is a Hope to which the Christian, clinging,
Is lifted high above life's surging wave;
Finds Life in Death, and fadeless flowers springing
From the dark grave.

There is a Crown prepared for those who love Him:
The Christian sees it in the distance shine
Like a bright beacon glittering above him,
And whispers "Mine!"

There is a spotless Robe of Christ's own weaving,
Will you not wrap it round your sin-stained soul?
Poor wandering child, upon thy past life grieving,
Christ makes thee whole.

There is a Home, a Hope, a Crown in Heaven;
My God! that any should thy gift refuse:
The awful choice of Life and Death is given—
Which wilt thou choose?

Ernest Rickman.

FOREIGN JOTTINGS.

Marseilles.—Pastor Richard d'Alais has been called by the Committee of the Evangelical Popular Mission (Mr. McAll's), to take the direction of the school of evangelisation at Marseilles, and to replace M. Saillens as preacher in the popular reunions of that town.

Demerara.—A remarkable revival has taken place at George-town, Demerara, a town of 50,000 inhabitants, where there are three large Methodist chapels. Special services were held, which have resulted in the conversion of many hundreds of persons, and the reception of more than 200 new members into the Church. The churches themselves, too, have been greatly stirred up.—L'Evangéliste.

Persia.—At Lenkoran, on the Caspian Sea, there is a small congregation of Baptists consisting of about twenty. A recent communication says "the thirst for the Word of God is very great; many who were quite opposed to us are now greatly concerned for their salvation and begin to attend our meetings regularly." The writer of the above, Mr. Pawloff, in May last visited Tiflis, where in the presence of 200 spectators he baptized three newly-converted persons.—Der Wahrheitzenger.

The Freed Negroes of the States.—The schools of the Freed Negroes now count a million scholars. The blacks publish eighty journals. They furnish about two million members to the Methodist and Baptist churches alone. They possess two million acres of land in the Southern States, valued by the administration at about 120,000. The production of cotton increases annually by a million bales, which is one-third more than in the time of slavery.—L'Evangéliste.

Syria.—A recent letter from Dr. Carslaw, Lebanon, to Mr. William Ferguson, of Kinmundy, Mintlaw, Aberdeenshire, reports progress in the work there. One convert, who was formerly an energetic opposer, now desires to devote himself to the work of native evangelisation. Dr. Carslaw is anxious to give him two years' preliminary training, and appeals for help to British Christians. Mr. Ferguson will give fuller details, and receive any aid that friends may be disposed to render.

Spezia Mission, Italy.—In the delightful Gulf of Spezia, gilded by moonlight, a young convert has just borne a good testimony in baptism. "Persecuted for righteousness sake," he had to leave the home he loved. As he was departing, he embraced his father, and offered to kiss him, but in anger was immediately thrust back. The faithful son then uttered these last parting words: "Father, before you die remember the love of God in Christ Jesus." In a few days we received the following: "Father is dead." J. S. A.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN SWITZERLAND.

Address by Mrs. Josephine Butler.

AT the large and highly enthusiastic gathering in Exeter Hall last week, in connection with the imprisonment of Miss Booth, a brief but powerful address was given by Mrs. Josephine Butler; we append the greater portion of it:—

The expulsion of Miss Booth and Miss Charlesworth, which took place in February last, is absolutely illegal. It is a contravention of the Constitution of the country, and it is a breach of the treaty between England and Switzerland made in 1855. The text of the treaty tells us that every English person residing in Switzerland shall have the same liberty of action and freedom in all respects as a Swiss citizen so long as he or she does not break the laws. The same privileges are guaranteed to every Swiss living in England, and I hope that England will never behave to any Swiss evangelist as Switzerland has behaved to ours.

But there is something worse to tell you about than its mere illegality. Mr. Booth has alluded to a law which is not a law, but a bye-law of Canton regulation in Geneva. It was made about fifteen or twenty years ago, when the Jesuits became troublesome in Geneva. It was thought desirable, though it does not seem a just thing, to make a bye-law to prevent the Jesuit nuns going from house to house secretly collecting money. That law exists still on a bye-law for the Canton of Geneva. The authorities there falsified the text of the law to make an excuse for expelling Miss Booth. I have the text, and I know the whole of the circumstances. The law forbids collections being made from house to house without the sanction of the police, but the authorities of Geneva cited the law in another fashion, viz., "The law forbids public collections in public meetings without the sanction of the police." The whole thing is absolutely built upon a lie. The devil is a very stupid person. Sometimes he defeats his own ends. The Geneva authorities were requested to refer the matter to the Federal Council of Berne, the central Government of Switzerland, because to them Miss Booth had appealed.

The Federal Council, consisting of three men, who took no trouble to verify the bye-laws of the Geneva Canton, endorsed by a formal printed document the lie which the authorities of Geneva had stated—that is to say, they approved the expulsion of Miss Booth on the ground that she had broken a law against collecting money publicly. The Federal Government has now discovered that they have endorsed a falsehood, and of course are throwing back the guilt upon the authorities of Geneva, and we shall see a pretty fight amongst them soon.

"Oh! what a tangled web we weave,
When once we practice to deceive."

With regard to returning to the Canton, it was an act deliberately done. We took counsel privately with some of the best citizens of Geneva and other parts of Switzerland, well-known jurists, lawyers, and Christian men. It was no act of carelessness, or for mere bravado on the part of Miss Booth. We did it deliberately. These jurists and Christian men said, For seven long months we have waited for some expression of opinion from the English public, or for some protest from the English Parliament, but not a word has been spoken. For seven months we have waited in vain. Now what (said they) is the best thing to do? Simply to ignore the arrete of expulsion. The act was deliberately done, and I hope that the Press will take notice of this. The expulsion was absolutely illegal, and to bring the tribunals to bear upon it, the arrete was ignored. When Miss Booth and Miss Charlesworth were arrested by the side of the grave I was determined not to leave her. I put my arm around her waist and said: "Where you go I will go." We went together to the Police Office, where we were detained several hours. In the carriage on the way Col. Clibborn and I prompted her what she should say. I said: "When you are before those men tell them that their expulsion is absolutely illegal, and that they have falsified the books in order to find a pretext to expel you."

Dear Miss Booth went in amongst those men, and gave her challenge splendidly and firmly, for we could hear her. The effect was such that you would have thought those men would have gone mad. The words they uttered, the expression on their countenances, the way they knocked over chairs and tables, showed how the truth had come home to them. They knew their action was illegal, and they had nothing to answer Miss Booth. The Government has now been challenged, and they will have the light of their own tribunals thrown upon their conduct. There is no fear but that justice will be done when once we have light. Miss Booth and I have often prayed about Switzerland, for we love that country. I am connected with it by family ties, and I love it very much. I bring with me this message from the good and Christian citizens of Switzerland to the English public.

Do not judge of us, they say, by what you see our Government doing, but help us by an expression of indignation, which should echo in Switzerland, and then you will strengthen our hands against the present party in power, which is a party that hates religion. That is the secret of the whole thing. Where the Gospel is rejected and the truth of Christ is not received, there is no true liberty, and they have lost all sense of true liberty through religion.

You can help them by stirring up your Government here, because the Government will never do anything unless it is pushed. It is a critical time this for Switzerland! Next month the Constitution of the country is to be revised, the whole of the penal code, and what is made of it now it will probably remain for 100 years to come. I have a friend on the Commission which is revising the Constitution of the country, and he showed me a sentence which they propose to introduce, shutting the door very much upon religious liberty. Think of it, friends! we are on the eve of perhaps seeing the door shut in Switzerland against the preaching of the Word of the Lord, and it will depend upon our united prayers whether that code will be altered in this fashion or not. As for dear Miss Booth, I will only tell you that she is full of joy, full of peace, and full of love for souls. Ah! friends, we know what love for souls is—some of us at least. She is filled with that fire of love for souls. She was very tired and worn-out when arrested, and I believe that if only she has a reasonable amount of comfort accorded to her in her prison, the rest will be blessed to her, body and soul. Let us pray that it may be so.

The Geneva correspondent of The Daily News telegraphs to that journal that the trial of Miss Booth and her fellow-prisoners would not really begin till Monday last, the Court having been on Saturday occupied exclusively in discussing points of law and questions as to the formation of the jury. When the Court rose on Saturday Miss Booth seemed quite overcome with excitement and fatigue.

THE KABYLE MISSION.—My statement in The Christian of last week, that Mr. and Mrs. Mackintosh would, at the end of six months, give themselves to the work of the Kabyle Mission was premature, as the period for which the Bible Society may need them is not yet determined.—Yours faithfully, E. H. Glenny.

Y.M.C.A., HASTINGS AND ST. LEONARDS.—The first annual meeting of this Association was held in the Assembly Rooms, on Wednesday, September 26. The chair was taken by Rev. J. W. Tottenham. The attendance was large and representative. The report, read by the Hon. Sec., Mr. George Henry (the founder of the Branch), stated that the average attendance at the Sunday Bible-class had been 30; that 20 open-air services, with 55 addresses, had had an average attendance of 400; that week evening Bible-classes had been conducted; the reading-room, circulating library, tract distribution, and other agencies, had been well sustained; and that conversions had resulted from the work. The report spoke most favourably of the progress of this new and well-situated Branch. Mr. Hind Smith, Exeter Hall, attended as a deputation from the National Council of Y.M.C.A.'s, and delivered an address on the basis and objects of the Association.

THE MADAGASCAR MISSIONARIES.

IT was quite to be expected that the Exeter Hall meeting last Thursday evening, to welcome the Madagascar missionaries and hear their story, would be a large and successful one; and so it proved. More remarkable even than the densely crowded audience, or the influential platform, as a token of public interest, was the array of representatives of the British Press. Somewhere between thirty and forty of these were present—a thing unprecedented, we should say, in the annals of missionary meetings, even in Exeter Hall. The Times, we believe, sent a trio of reporters, thus enabling it to present its readers next morning with a very full report of the lengthy personal narrative of Mr. Shaw, the hero of the evening.

Mr. Hubbard, Chairman of the Directors of the London Missionary Society, who presided, gave the right tone to the proceedings by deprecating the use of any language that would needlessly embarrass the English Government in its effor s to obtain justice for the aggrieved missionaries, while preserving friendly and peaceful relations with our neighbours across the Channel. Everyone, he said, must recognise the difference between the conduct of the French Government in this matter, and that of the officers representing them at Tamatave.

Mr. Shaw, as we have said, was the hero of the hour, but before him came Mr. Cousins. It was a high tribute to the interesting character of his speech, that for the space of an hour the audience listened with unflagging attention, though he had no such text on which to dilate as his brother missionary. From an experience of nineteen years' residence and labour in Antananarivo, the capital of the island, he was able to speak with authority of the past and present condition of the Malagasy people; his account of the great advances made by the Hovas during the past twenty years, in matters of education, literature, social and political life, as well as practical religion, was one of the most telling testimonies to the regenerating and civilising power of the Gospel of Jesus Christ ever heard from a missionary platform. Mr. Cousins made very short work of the pretended claims of the French to a slice of Malagasy territory, and said that while the Hovas greatly desired peace, they would not give up an inch of their soil to a foreign power except under compulsion. Assuming the facts to be as stated by Mr. Cousins, we cannot persuade ourselves that the French nation as a whole will ever sanction such an unrighteous policy as that which seems to find favour in the eyes of their present rulers.

Mr. Shaw's unadorned and impassioned recital of the events that preceded and accompanied his arrest and imprisonment on board a French war vessel, was heard with a very marked and sympathetic interest by the great audience. Though not in a bellicose mood by any means, the people gave frequent vent to expressions of disapprobation and disgust at the high-handed and inexcusable behaviour of the French officials towards this unoffending missionary. Various false accusations were in turn reported to him as the grounds of his prolonged detention and inconsiderate treatment. It would appear that the only thing he was really guilty of was accepting the presidency of a Committee of Public Safety, formed on receipt of the news of an intended bombardment by the French. This could scarcely have been construed into a crime even by a hostile power, and, as a matter of fact, it was not advanced as a reason for his arrest and inhuman treatment. Like his fellow-labourer, Mr. Shaw bore strong testimony to the practical hold Christianity has obtained among the people; it was heart rending, he said, to think that these untoward events had interrupted and brought to a standstill the good work that was going on. He trusted, however, that the outcome of all that had happened would be an increased interest in Madagascar, and an increased desire for the welfare of its people. To this wish every Christian heart will cordially respond; and surely for a people with such a remarkable past there must be yet greater things in store.

MR. SPURGEON ON MISSIONS.

AT the Annual Conference of Baptist Pastors and Delegates, held last week in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, Mr. C. H. Spurgeon said:—

"If the religion of Christ be not supernatural, and if there be not a supernatural power working in the world, to give it force over hearts and consciences, then the missionary enterprise is the most ridiculous to which the mind of man ever gave itself. It is not only impossible—it is so absurd as to excite fitting derision. What a series of wondrous things will have to be wrought out before that oath of God will be established, that the whole earth should be filled with his glory. You and I do not often come into contact with absolute heathenism, nor, perhaps, with Mahommedanism. The other Sunday morning, after trying to do my best to preach the Gospel of my blessed Master, I had a taste of what our missionaries must feel, in a remark made to me by a Mahommedan gentleman in the most bland and affable terms concerning the utter impossibility of God's ever having a Son, couched in language which I will not repeat. I stammered out some words, and I had been so unused to hear such talk that I hardly knew what to say; but I felt all day the single sentence or two that he had said. What it must be to go and live where Christ is derided, where the very idea of his existence is scoffed at, I can hardly tell. And yet the crescent of Mahommed shall wane into eternal darkness before the everlasting Sun of Righteousness. If ever it is done the angels will be as much astonished as they were at the creation of the world, for they have some idea of the stubbornness of Mahommedan thought.

"Look again at the Jews. Every now and then we get professed converts who deceive us. We have some, blessed be God, of the seed of Israel whom we love and honour and trust, but it will be a marvellous thing if ever Israel should receive the Christ upon whose name she now spits with indignation scarcely to be equalled in the bitterness of its hate. Yet He is the King of the Jews after all, and He shall be, and all eternity shall see it. And what must it be to face any of those still lower religions? for I look upon Judaism and Mahommedanism as infinitely preferable in many ways to sheer and clear idolatry. How are they to be met where there seems to be no conscience to work upon—where it seems as if the very faculty of truth had departed, and the soil had to be created before the seed could grow? O Lord, Thou hast set before thy Church a duel worthy of thyself, and far too high for her. But Christ died for us poor creatures, brethren, to make us great as well as good. "The works that I do shall ye do also, and greater works than these shall ye do, because I go unto the Father." If you have any ambition for a duel, if you have any wish to shine in warfare, here are your opportunities. If you would do things of which you can think throughout eternity, here are mountains to be cast into the midst of the sea; sycamore trees to be torn up by the roots are as nothing compared to this.

"We dared never have thought of it if He had not put the commission into our hands and faith into our hearts; but it shall be done. As the brain's decree affects every muscle and nerve and blood-vessel, so does the will and purpose of the eternal Christ, our Everlasting Head, move us all. We can give our money, since the mass of us cannot give ourselves. This seems so small a thing that it should be done at a splendid rate. Never should there be a penury about the love that gives to the Cross: and as for our sons and our daughters and ourselves, if God will help us and clear the way, we shall be glad to see them go, and gladder still if we might go with them to the front to do something in this wondrous battle. If, when men fought for liberty and the freedom of nationalities, gentlemen in England thought themselves accursed that they were not there to fight upon that glorious day, any Christian that shall sneak into his comfortable home, and never give or speak or labour for this work, may not only think himself accursed, but I can almost think that in heaven he will never cease to grudge himself that he was not foremost in the fray. Methinks even there he will feel as if he had marred the splendour to which he might have attained in having kept back when the opportunity was within his reach of taking the adversary by the throat for Christ. Oh, I pray God that we, every one of us, may be more earnest in this matter as long as ever we live by prayer and service."

MR. VARLEY AT SOUTHAMPTON.

THE labours of this evangelist in our town ended on Sunday night, and on all sides deep and sincere regret at his departure is expressed. Clear, practical, and deeply spiritual teaching was daily given to the very large number who attended the afternoon Bible-readings. The nightly evangelistic meetings were crowded to excess, notably by the working men and respectable tradesmen of the town, numbers of whom, in the after-meetings, witnessed from time to time that they had attained to an intelligent grasp of a personal Christ as Saviour and Lord. A touching little expression of gratitude, in the shape of a handsome Bible from the working men who attributed their conversion, under God, to Mr. Varley's preaching, was presented to him on the Wednesday previous to his departure.

A special attraction every week has been an "Entertainment" on Saturday evenings, conducted by Mr. Varley almost entirely, and given with the desire of offering a counter-attraction to the public-houses and music halls. This has proved a singular success. Mr. Varley gave a lecture on "Billy Bray," which, with its occasional humorous or earnest touches, was evidently much appreciated by the audience. A hearty God-speed follows Mr. Varley as he leaves us to preach at Bradford. E. T. E. P.

THE TEMPERANCE CRUSADE.

Mr. R. T. Booth has conducted successful Missions at Stockport, Ipswich, and Eastbourne.

A "Blue Ribbon Fountain" has been placed in the new Duthie Park in Aberdeen, opened with great eclat last week by the Princess Beatrice.

Mr. Matthew Burnett continues his Gospel Temperance work in Australia. In one city over a third of the population took the red ribbon before he left.

The City of London Abstainers' Union will resume its meetings in City warehouses early in November, beginning at Mr. Samuel Morley's establishment.

Greenock.—A series of Gospel Temperance meetings in connection with the Church of Scotland have been held here, and have been productive of much good.

The Licensing Sessions throughout the provinces have resulted in considerable reductions of licences. In Lancashire close upon 200 licences have been refused.

Witchampton, Wimborne.—The earnest Christians of this village have united in a movement for the advancement of the Temperance cause. Tent meetings have been arranged; and the first of these was very largely attended, and an encouraging number of pledges taken. The Gospel element was kept prominent in all the addresses.

London.—At the Brixton-rise Mission, now concluded, upwards of 1600 pledges were taken. A ten days' Mission has been held in Clerkenwell. A second campaign at Highbury has attracted much attention, and secured many fresh adherents to the cause. Special efforts are to be made during the coming winter at the "Elephant and Castle" Theatre in connection with the Metropolitan Tabernacle Society.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS Y.M.C.A.—We are glad to hear that steps are being taken for the resuscitation of a Branch Association in this important town. An inaugural meeting will be held shortly. Mr. Hind Smith, Exeter Hall, will be glad to hear from friends who are willing to co-operate.

Letters to the Editor.

ABOUT MALTA.

Sir,—In The Christian of August 23, what a correspondent writes about Malta is quite true. At the census taken on August 3, 1881, the population was 151,193, the number of priests on duty was about 1000. When Malta was ceded to the British Government, two of the conditions were: first, that the law was to be administered in Italian and according to the Roman law; secondly, that their religion was not to be interfered with. The agreement was for fifty years; that time is long past.

It is quite true that the Gospel cannot be preached to the Maltese. For were two Maltese to meet, one of them expounding its truths, and were information to be given, the preacher would be put in prison. It is very deplorable that the Maltese should be excluded from the Gospel.

PLAIN WORDS TO CHRISTIAN WOMEN.

Dear Sir,—I was glad to see in a recent number of The Christian a few remarks on "Conformity to the Fashions of the World in the Modes of Dress;" but I feel there is yet more to be said on the subject, since those remarks referred only to its negative aspect. Let us look a little at the positive side—those things which are to be our adornment.

Note first that the Apostle Paul says: "I will that women adorn themselves in modest apparel" (1 Tim. i. 8, 9) —that which by its quietude, both of shade and fashion, tends to hide its wearer from observation. The same passage says with "Shamefastness (R.V.) and sobriety"—scantiness of dress, either in width or length, cannot be shamefastness.

And here I would appeal to our Christian sisters of the upper classes—can a so-called low dress without sleeves be what is meant by the modest apparel and shamefast clothing which are commanded by God? Should it be urged that by abandoning these customs of Society we must absent ourselves from many a harmless assembly in which we should like to be, we would reply that no gathering can be right for the Christian in which the plain precepts of God's Word cannot be obeyed.

It is scarcely necessary to define "sobriety;" we all know that sober means the reverse of gaudy; probably it was from this word the Quakers obtained the idea of dressing in drab and brown.

The next adornment "which becometh women professing godliness" is "good works" (1 Tim. ii. 10). How anxious we are to wear what is becoming. Let us learn that in the sight of God no costly garments are so becoming as to be "well reported for good works—if she have brought up children, if she have lodged strangers, if she have washed the saints' feet, or ministered to their bodily comfort, if she have relieved the afflicted" (1 Tim. v. 10)—such are they.

The description of what should be a woman's ornament is beautiful indeed, and needs no comment—"a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price. For after this manner in the old time the holy women also, who trusted in God, adorned themselves" (1 Pet. iii. 4).

The Scriptures even speak of our hair, teaching that "if a woman have long hair it is a glory to her," but that it is "a shame for a woman to be shorn" (1 Cor. xi 6, 15).

Seeing we have so many directions about our dress in the Word of God, it must be our duty to study and obey them; and let us try to set such an example of Scriptural attire that our poorer sisters may discern its beauty and strive to imitate it.

In concluding these imperfect remarks, we quote the solemn words of the Prophet Isaiah: "The Lord saith, Because the daughters of Zion are haughty, and walk with stretched forth necks and wanton eyes, walking and mincing as they go, and making a tinkling with their feet: In that day the Lord will take away the bravery of their tinkling ornaments, and their cauls, and their round tires like the moon, the chains, and the bracelets, and the mufflers: And it shall come to pass, that instead of sweet smell there shall be stink: and instead of a girdle a rent; and instead of well-set hair baldness; and instead of a stomacher a girdling of sackcloth; and burning instead of beauty" (Is. iii. 16—24). A Mother.

SUNDAY TRAINS.

Dear Sir,—Many thanks for your kind words on our behalf. Truly, as you say, we find the Sabbath a day of toil and care, and, indeed, much more so than on week days; our feelings in regard to the subject may be gleaned from the following lines, written while on Sunday duty:—

"I fain would use thy holy day
To worship at thy feet,
Within thy courts to watch and pray,
And with thy children meet.

But I have masters to obey
Who care not, Lord, for thee,
Who run their trains on this thy day,
And thus make work for me.

'Tis hard to see the thousands, Lord,
Who value not thy day,
Thus wandering from the living God,
For these, dear Lord, I pray.

And for myself that I may be
Throughout this trying day,
Kept by thy power close to Thee,
On this thy holy day."

ADAM'S FEDERAL HEADSHIP.

Dear Sir,—I am in almost complete sympathy with your strictures in The Christian of August 30, on H. W. Beecher's views, as given in your two quotations from his recently-published letter. But I think it most desirable that we should avoid another as equally unscriptural extreme espoused by many divines, and which, on the principle of recoil, has greatly strengthened H. W. Beecher's position. I hold that the race of man, in consequence of their federal relation to Adam, by God Himself for the most wise and loving ends instituted—"sin abounding that grace might the more abound"—enter on life with a nature similar to his in its fallen state, and that whoever among them are of an age, and with faculties to incur responsibility, do in point of fact contract guilt. Because transgressing the law of conscience within—all which is unmistakably taught in holy Writ—is quite a different thing from maintaining that Adam's personal guilt is imputed to his offspring, and that they shall, therefore, be punished on account of his disobedience, as well as their own. This doctrine has been, in the most express and emphatic manner, repudiated by God Himself by the mouth of the prophet Ezekiel. See the whole of chapter xviii., but especially verses 2 and 20. "What mean ye that ye use this proverb . . . saying. The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge?" "The soul that sinneth it shall die" (evidently meaning it shall die on account of its own sin). "The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father," &c.—Most truly yours, M. C. I.

EVANGELICALISM AND THE UNIVERSITIES.

Sir,—Many of us at Oxford and Cambridge will have noticed your remarks under the above heading in your issue of September 20. Doubtless many Christian people in all parts who know comparatively little of the religious life of the Universities, are glad to learn that evangelical thought and action evidently exist both at Oxford and Cambridge. Let them be reassured that such is the case, and that there are not a few of both Universities who know the delight of finding time amidst their daily duties to do definite work for God.

At Cambridge the atmosphere is altogether more congenial for such work, and consequently College Bible Readings and Meetings for Prayer draw together a large number of those who appreciate such gatherings, and it may be interesting to know that Mr. Sankey's hymns in somebody's rooms in Trinity are not by any means unknown at Cambridge, though they have not quite arrived at such a happy state of things at Christ Church, Oxford, yet. Perhaps they will some day. The second and third week in October will have brought us back to the Universities for the recommencement of another term. Will those who watch with interest the progress of vital Christianity at Oxford and Cambridge, pray very earnestly that an abundant blessing may be poured out upon us during this next term. It is the time when "Freshmen" enter a University life, and the first term very often decides the course of life to be adopted during the rest of one's college career. How important, therefore, that every new-comer should be surrounded with the prayers of God's people. We will not boast of anything we have. We will be thankful. We will yet ask for better things. "Brethren, pray for us."—Yours faithfully,

An Undergraduate.

Mission Appeals.

Shacklewell Mission Hall.—Mr. C. Gull, 2, Grove-lane, Stamford-hill, appeals for pecuniary help for this Mission. During the past three years the Divine blessing has attended the efforts put forth.

Port Tenant, Swansea.—Miss Katharine Grenfell makes an appeal for £200, half of the £400 required for building a room for various meetings. The workers are obliged to give up the place now occupied. Her address is Maestey House, Swansea.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For blessing at Hansfield.——Thanks for a good beginning of Evangelistic meetings in Chalmers Church, Dundee, conducted by Rev. George Campbell, from Glasgow.

PRAYER.—For services by Mr. Opie Rodway at Abertillery, from October 4 to 9.——For blessing on Evangelical meetings conducted by Mr. James J. Scroggie at Hassocks, Fairlight, and Godmanchester during October.——For the conversion of an aged father who is ill.——For the restoration to health of one long an invalid.

DECLINING FORTUNES.—It is not given to everyone to be joyful because of the success of the Temperance movement. To a well-known firm of distillers, it has made a difference of something like three thousand a year to each of the partners.—Vanity Fair.

THANKSGIVING AT BLACKGANG.—The usual harvest thanksgiving service at Blackgang, held last week, was an occasion of much interest; about 300 friends responded to Mr. Charles Reade's invitation. There was a goodly array of the choice fruits of the earth, and, better still, of the fruits of past Gospel labours, in the shape of converts from different parts of the island. Much praise was offered to God for blessings temporal and spiritual, and many prayers sent up for continued tokens of his favour in the days to come.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—The Quarterly Conference for spiritual edification was held in the rooms of the Evangelical Alliance, 7, Adam-street, Strand, on Friday last, Col. Brooke presiding. A very thoughtful and practical address was given by Rev. J. Gritton, D.D., on "The Faithfulness of God and the comfort of the Believer in Trial." In the discussion which followed, Revs. T. W. Brown, Mr. Arbuthnot, and W. Fuller Gooch, took part. The attendance was good and a spirit of devotion and earnestness marked the whole proceedings. Special prayer was made for the approaching annual meeting, to be held at Norwich this month.

"Mr. Bliss poured forth a glorious tide of artless song. He 'sang praises to God.' He sang before countless thousands the message of Divine love. He fashioned the ringing chorus and the lifting melody which touched the hearts of millions, and consecrated patriotic enthusiasm, military pride, domestic sensibility, and common instincts, to the service of the Christ whom he passionately loved."

CHOICE SAYINGS.

Being Notes of Exposition of the Scriptures.

Revised by ROBERT C. CHAPMAN.

NEW EDITION.

Tinted Covers, 9d.; Cloth Limp, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.; Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s.; Morocco, Gilt Edges, 3s.

Rev. C. H. SPURGEON in the Sword and Trowel for September, 1883, says:—"Here we have gold dust, 'and the gold of that land is good.' We hardly know a man more noteworthy for abounding grace and deep piety than ROBERT C. CHAPMAN. His name has never been sounded abroad, but those who know him value him beyond expression. Some of these brief 'Sayings' contain whole sermons. Personally, we expect to gather many discourses while studying this little book. A dew from heaven rests upon Mr. CHAPMAN'S expositions."

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE

To the OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS.

THE NUMBER "SEVEN" IN SCRIPTURE.

Compiled by S. A. BLACKWOOD, Esq., C.B.

Paper Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.; Presentation Edition, Cloth Boards, Bevelled, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

"Many other attempts have been made in tabulating the circumstances connected with the word "seven" in the Bible, but we cannot think of any one which is so complete, so concise, and so systematic as in the small volume compiled by Mr. Blackwood. From Genesis i. to Rev. xxii. all the many times the word occurs are duly noted, and each book is dealt with seriatim, so that reference is easy. One object of the book is "to stimulate search and to arouse inquiry," and with this book by the side of the Bible one course of study can be made very profitable indeed."—The Rock.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

CALLS TO CHRIST.

A Series of Addresses by Rev. R. W. NICOLL, M.A.

"It is admirably fitted as a gift-book to older scholars; but to Sabbath-school teachers also we would heartily recommend it."—Children's Record.

"Force and freshness are eminently the characteristics of these 'Calls to Christ;' they are also brief to a proverb, and hence they may be of great service to an earnest evangelist who knows how to use another man's thoughts."

Kelso Courier.

"A choice book. Sweet-scented throughout with the name of Christ, it sets forth the 'old, old story' in eleven simple but explicit lines of Gospel teaching. Though on a familiar theme, it has an unobtrusive originality, and many touches of beautiful thought, which remove it far from commonplace."

Children's Record.

Notices of Books, &c.

The Word of God: How Should I Read it? 2d. Shaw & Co. Contains many good suggestions and timely admonitions.

Thought-Food for Farmers is a pamphlet advocating the cause of Temperance, and worthy of circulation among the class for which it is specially designed. It may be had of the writer, Rev. G. Pope, Rempstone Rectory, Loughborough, at 5s. per hundred.

Walks About Zion. By Rev. J. Ormiston. 6d. W. Mack, 4, Paternoster-square. A brief sketch of a visit to Gethsemane and the Mount of Olives, making the third of a series of Palestine narratives. There is much useful information put in a readable form.

A Few Thoughts for Members of Church Choirs. By James C. Duncan. Nisbet & Co. 24 copies for 5s. A little book intended to help members of choirs to sing with the spirit as well as the understanding. The hints given will be of service if adopted and carried into practice.

We have received a pamphlet on The Attitude of the Christian in Relation to the Amusements of the World, by J. T. Barker, B.A. It deals in an earnest and sensible way with the vexed question of amusements. Copies may be had of Mr. G. Shaw, The Limes, Dukinfield. 1s. per doz., post free.

Standard Popular Dialogues. By J. W. Kirton. 1s. Ward, Lock & Co. These cleverly-constructed conversations will afford much healthy amusement during the winter season at "home, social, and public gatherings." Each dialogue hits some nail straight on the head, and thus combines instruction with entertainment.

A most admirable account of the scope and work of the London Y.W.C. Associations, from the pen of Hon. Emily Kinnaird, appears in the current issue of The Girls' Own Paper (Religious Tract Society). In the same serial the claims of the Princess Louise Home are ably advocated by Miss Annie Beale.

All of Blue. By Frank H. White. Partridge & Co. We welcome a second edition of this excellent treatise on the typical meaning of the garments of the High Priest, and other things connected with the Temple service. It is simply written, and the Gospel truths it embodies are forcibly and profitably stated.

The Gospel and its Counterfeits. By Walter Brown. 4d. Partridge & Co. Written with a view to show what, according to Scripture, the Gospel of Christ really is, and how it may be set forth to most advantage in the salvation of souls. It is calculated to be very useful in this direction. The same writer has issued a good series of evangelical tracts entitled "Beta Tracts," and well adapted for usefulness.

We have received a copy of a little brochure entitled "Church Membership; its Obligations and Responsibilities," by "A Member of the Church of Christ." If was written after reading, and in consequence of, a note on the subject in our columns of August 23. It is short and to the point, and likely to do good in stimulating its readers to love and good works. Copies may be had of G. Roberts, Westow-hill, Upper Norwood, at 2d. each.

Mr. W. C. Miles, the author of the "Gospel Compass" and Gospel Target," has designed some new illustrated leaflets for different classes. The three sets before us are "Sober Hints," a packet of 100 assorted leaflets with suitable texts, and intended for distribution at Temperance meetings, "Right-about-face," a packet intended for distribution amongst soldiers, and "Homeward Bound" among sailors. They are striking in appearance and well got up (8d. per packet—W. Mack).

Mr. Miles has also commenced a series of tracts for railway men, taking the initial letters of each line as the initial of the subject dwelt upon, e.g., from "G. E. R." he speaks of "God, Eternity, Redemption." (6d. per dozen, Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling).

Shakespeare on Temperance. By Fred Sherlock. Home Words Office. There are numberless allusions in the writings of the great poet-dramatist to the drinking customs and evils of his day, besides those that are so well-known and often quoted. Mr. Sherlock has rendered good service to the cause of Temperance by collecting and briefly annotating these passages. If another Shakespeare should ever appear in the world we hope that as the result of all the modern efforts at Temperance reform he may have better material to work upon.

Present Day Tracts. Christian Evidence, Doctrine, and Morals. By Various Writers. Vol. II. Religious Tract Society. We have before referred to this valuable series of tracts, adapted to meet the requirements of the age, in reference to the assertion and defence of Christian truth. The publishers have done well to collect and issue them in volumes. They contain in small compass a vast mass of information and argument such as many thoughtful but busy men want to possess, but would find it impossible to compile for themselves. They are worthy of high commendation and wide circulation.

Scottish Divines. In a portly and well printed volume, Messrs. Maclaren & Wallace, Edinburgh, have given to the reading public the third series of St. Giles Lectures on Leaders of religious life in Scotland. The "worthies" embalmed in this collection are John Knox, Andrew Melville, Samuel Rutherford, Archbishop Leighton, Ebenezer Erskine, Principal Robertson, Edward Irving, Thomas Chalmers, Professor James Robertson, Bishop Ewing, Robert Lee, and Norman Macleod. The authors are all well-known ministers of the Established Church in Scotland, and in most cases attached to the "Broad" school of theology in that Church; as might be expected, their life sketches of these divines are tinged with their own theological and denominational views. Making due allowance for this, the reader will find the lectures very pleasant and instructive reading.

The Life of Faith. Sermons and Lectures by the late John Gregg, D.D., Bishop of Cork. Hatchards. Rarely do volumes of sermons command much attention or possess much more than a local interest, but in this case we have one which is likely to prove an exception to the rule. For exposition of Scripture, soundness of creed, and general freshness of style, Dr. Gregg's sermons have an unusual amount of merit and interest. They are not only readable but full of point and power; they remind one of the best Puritan divines, only they are more terse and direct. Lovers of the old theology will find food well suited to their taste; wherever the volume finds its way it will spread a sweet savour of Christ grateful to all who love Him, and adapted to win others to his cause. Higher praise than this can scarcely be given; our readers will do well to obtain the book and judge for themselves whether it is not well deserved.

SEVENTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN"
WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.
Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK
REMARKABLE CASES REPORTED BY A GENTLEMAN AT WORCESTER.

Mr. C. Mather, of Mayfield-road, Rainbow-hill, Worcester, who has assisted many patients (who really could not afford to buy) to procure my medicine at reduced cost, by writing me himself on their behalf. He says:—

"You have my correspondence with reference to 'Rees,' who was given up entirely by his doctor, who said he could do nothing but 'relieve him a little.' I collected and made up sufficient to procure him a supply of your medicine twice, and his relatives obtained him a third, the result of which was his recovery. The man has not had a day's illness since, and is one of the best members in a Society of Odd Fellows."

Some time since Mr. Mather, while waiting at the office of a solicitor in Lincoln's-inn-fields, met with a young man who could scarcely speak. (This was a case of chronic bronchitis and laryngitis.) Strongly recommended by Mr. M., the young man obtained my medicine. Mr. M. writes me:—"The result of the first bottle was so satisfactory, the young man continued on, and the last time I saw him he said how thankful he was that he ever saw us."

In another letter Mr. Mather says:—"One of the last of my patients was a man given up as incurable, being in a rapid consumption. He used three bottles, and, as the result, he is now as strong as any ordinary man."

"In fact (Mr. M. continues) I could give many instances of a like nature. I have seen so much good by the use of your medicine, for upwards of seventeen years. I am continually recommending it. You are at liberty to make use of anything I have said in correspondence with you."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT

In London, where wealth, luxury, and pleasure abound, sin also abounds; hence the crying need for the call to repentance in our streets.

This year successful Meetings have been held in several large Provincial and Seaport Towns, and many poor young women have been reclaimed.

The Committee are now arranging a series of Meetings in all the principal parts of the Metropolis, and they hope to carry the message of "repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ," to EVERY OUTCAST WOMAN IN LONDON, BY MEETINGS AND STREET MISSION WORK.

Will Twenty-four Christians contribute £5 each to meet the expense of missioning Twenty-four Districts, and provide Tea, &c., for a Meeting?

Christian Friends desirous of co-operating by contributing towards the expenses of a Meeting (or helping by prayer), are invited to communicate with Mr. J. L. CHRISTIEN, Organising Secretary, at the Office. Donations may be sent to MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., or to

C. WILSON McCREE,
Financial Secretary.

Office—8A, Red Lion Square, London, W.C.

"Full of pleasant incidents and Gospel truths."
United Methodist Free Churches Magazine.

"This excellent magazine is in every respect worthy of its originator and of its name. It contains a great variety of interesting and instructive articles, both in prose and verse, all illustrative of some important truth, but its principal aim seems to be to show the fulness and freeness of God's mercy and the simplicity of the way of salvation. We heartily recommend it."—Wesleyan Sunday-School Magazine.

"Full of Gospel reading, prose and poetry, in short lessons and incidents, in easy reading for those not much accustomed to books."—New York Advocate and Guardian

NEW EDITION.

Tinted Covers, 9d.; Cloth Limp, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.; Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s.; Morocco, Gilt Edges, 3s.

Rev. C. H. SPURGEON in the Sword and Trowel for September, 1883, says:—"Here we have gold dust, 'and the gold of that land is good.' We hardly know a man more noteworthy for abounding grace and deep piety than ROBERT C. CHAPMAN. His name has never been sounded abroad, but those who know him value him beyond expression. Some of these brief 'Sayings' contain whole sermons. Personally, we expect to gather many discourses while studying this little book. A dew from heaven rests upon MR. CHAPMAN'S expositions."

The Life of GEORGE WHITEFIELD.

By J. R. ANDREWS,

Author of "The Life of Oliver Cromwell to the Death of Charles I."

A Cheap Edition, price 6d.

Superior Edition in large type, for Presentation, cloth, bevelled boards (with Portrait), price 5s.

"Whitefield was not a framer of discipline, not a leader of a sect, not a founder of societies, not a ruler of men, but pre-eminently a winner of souls. Would that such preachers were multiplied in the present day! We thank Mr. Andrews for this seasonable addition to our religious biography. No young preacher or student should be without it. But it possesses an interest far beyond any special class, and deserves a wide and general circulation."—Methodist Recorder.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.
Supported by Voluntary Contributions.
President—
The Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.

Established 1822, for the purpose of employing humble Christian men, well versed in the Scriptures, to visit from house to house throughout the country, and visit all denominations. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required. The work is carried on in a spirit of love.

Subscriptions or Donations will be thankfully received by the Secretary, Capt. Kearney Whine, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin; or at 9, Paternoster-row, London.

The Earl of Shaftesbury says in his last letter to the Secretary:—Many thanks for your kind letter, and many thanks to Almighty God for the good intelligence you give me about your Scripture Readers in Ireland. I wish I could more effectively assist you. Your letter is their best thing that I have seen or heard from Ireland.

I enclose my donation, and only wish it was more.—Yours, Shaftesbury

N.B.—Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not as "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—Norwich Conference.—The Annual Conference will (D.V.) be held in Norwich on October 16, 17, and 18. Barker Harrison, Hon Secretary, 78, Coleshill-street, Eaton-square, S.W.

Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me.

URGENT APPEAL in aid of Little Paralysed Children, at the West-end Hospital, 73, Welbeck-street, W. The Committee earnestly solicit contributions, and a visit from Christian friends. Collecting cards for children.

P. F Proctor, Secretary.

GREAT COLEMAN'S, near Ongar, is now opened by Dr. and Mrs. S. C. Griffith to give change of air and rest to educated people of limited means.—For particulars, apply to 45, Finsbury-square, E.C.

URGENT APPEAL to all interested in the work of the Gospel in Ireland. Our more favoured brethren in England are most earnestly asked to contribute a sum of Three Hundred Pounds to finish the building of a Parsonage in the remote and poor parish of Roundstone, Connemara, founded by the late Rev. Wm. Pennefather, and since in part sustained by the Irish Church Missions. The work was "Boycotted" for a period of three months, but is now being rapidly pushed forward, and this sum is needed to meet the Incumbent's (Rev. J. McCormick) engagement with the contractors.—Donations will be received and acknowledged by Richard Nugent, Esq., Hon. Sec., Church of Ireland Sustentation Fund, 32, Charing-cross, S.W.

MAGNETO-ELECTRIC TREATMENT OF PARALYSIS.

"Magnetism does not supersede ordinary medicines, but can be used in conjunction with them without at all affecting, or being affected by, their action. But its chief value is that it will reach cases which ordinary medicine will not touch. Take paralysis. Mr. Garratt can point to people who were bedridden, and, to all appearance, bedridden for life, but who, thanks to Magnetism, have left their couches, and are now engaged in the active work of life."

"Another class of sufferers who derive incalculable benefit from Magnetism are people of overworked brain. In such cases the physician usually prescribes complete rest and a total change of air—medicine being of little use. Mr. Garratt affirms that he can give the overworked man, who is unable to obtain rest and change, the like benefit he would derive from them in a very much quicker, simpler, and cheaper way. At the same time, Mr. Garratt's system is not opposed to other means of combating disease; on the contrary, it is an auxiliary which may be used in conjunction with, and as a supplement to them."—Extracts from "The Fountain."

From MR. E. DAVIES, Blair Lodge, London-road, Forest-hill, S.E.

"Some time since I had a paralytic stroke, which left me very weak, and to a certain extent helpless; my medical adviser telling me that I should never be better, and, unless very careful, probably worse.

"Hearing of your success in the treatment of paralysis, I determined to consult you, and accordingly did so. You made no promises, but said you knew of nothing so likely to do me permanent good as a judicious application of Magnetic treatment. I adopted your advice, and since doing so I am much better in every way. Formerly I could scarcely lift my pen to write; now, you have proof that I can do so. My hands and limbs are as free as ever, and I do not display such irritability of temper as I did then.

"I have taken no medicine, therefore I am bound to infer that my improved state of health is due to your treatment alone, and it has saved me from being an invalid for life."

Some time after, this patient gave me a list of his ordinary week's engagements as follows:—

"Monday: Leave home at nine o'clock for office; work till seven or half-past; then attend an evening meeting which keeps me from retiring to rest till nearly midnight.

"Tuesday: Same office hours, and the conduct of two evening meetings.

"Wednesday: Same office hours and subsequent evening engagement, reaching home at eleven o'clock.

"Thursday: Heavy business day, one evening meeting; home at eleven o'clock.

"Friday: Business hours from eight o'clock, one evening meeting at eight, and I am home about half-past ten.

"Saturday: Half-day at business, the rest spent in fulfilling temperance engagements, often keeping me from home till midnight.

"Besides this I have political engagements, which involves much heavy work at certain periods of the year.

"Sundays are also occupied in Evangelistic work."

As recently as October 1st he writes:—

"I can only add that I am even better now than when I wrote that letter."

Letters commendatory of Mr. Garratt's treatment by Magneto-Electricity have been received from hundreds of persons in all classes of society. A private list of 850 names as referees can be had on application. Consultation free, personally, or by letter. B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

SEVENTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN"

WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK

PLEASING CASE of a little GIRL at SUDBURY.

In the early part of January I was consulted by Mr. Charles Golding, of Acton Square, Sudbury, Suffolk, upon the case of his child, ten years old. He had seen my announcements in the weekly journals, and had been recommended by several old patients of mine in Sudbury.

Family consumptive; the little patient had been subject to bronchitis and inflammatory attacks since eight months old.

The case at this time had assumed a very serious aspect. The child was rapidly wasting all over her body. Cough violent, night perspirations, severe pains, and "so weak." "She gets no rest night or day (the father writes). She is very ill indeed."

A supply of medicine was at once sent, with various instructions, directions for a tonic preparation, &c. &c.

Improvement was very marked from the beginning. For brevity's sake, I pass on to a letter received from the father, August 12, in which he says: "My little daughter, Ada Susannah Golding, for whom I wrote you at a most critical time in January last, by the blessing of God, made steady progress ever since she took your invaluable medicine. You are at liberty to publish this."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

GOD FIRST:
THE FIRST CHRISTIAN COUNCIL.

THAT thoughts of God filled and ruled the minds of the Apostles, and that their words and influence were powerful in consequence, may be traced very strikingly in the proceedings related in the 15th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles. Let us also remind one another of the truths publicly attested on that occasion.

Certain persons from Judea had taught the Gentile believers that unless they observed the ritual given through Moses to the Jews they could not be saved.

Paul and Barnabas were stopping at Antioch at that time, and had no small dissension and questioning with these persons. It was ultimately appointed that they, with others, should travel to Jerusalem to the Apostles and Elders about this question. They went accordingly, and reported the matter, and the Apostles and the Elders were gathered together to consider it.

At first there was much questioning; and, as it said afterwards that the multitude kept silence and hearkened unto Barnabas and Paul, it would seem that at the commencement there had been some agitation in the assembly, and an indisposition to listen patiently and courteously.

After this had continued for some time (and there are many advantages incidental to the free expression of different opinions), Peter spoke. And just as in evangelising, God, Himself, his Christ, his character, and his works should come first, so the same principle actuated Peter at the Council. He reminded his audience of what they already knew (I must not take up your space by full quotations, but will briefly indicate his line of remark). A good while ago "God" made choice. "God" which knoweth the heart bore them witness, giving them the "Holy Spirit," even as "He" did unto us: and "He" made no distinction, cleansing the heart by faith. Now, therefore, why tempt ye "God." We believe that we Jewish believers shall be saved through the grace of the "Lord Jesus" in like manner as they the Gentile believers.

God the Father and the Lord Jesus being thus regarded and glorified, what was the immediate effect? The multitude kept silence and hearkened to Barnabas and Paul.

Next, observe how Barnabas and Paul were animated by the same principle. Peter had referred to "God" acting by him, but it was a good while ago. Barnabas and Paul followed in the same course, and rehearsed what signs and wonders "God" had wrought among the Gentiles by them, only more recently.

Then James spoke, and harmoniously with what had gone before. Peter had declared the dealings of God with the Gentiles through him. Barnabas and Paul, the work of God in the Gentiles, through them. And James showed that this was exactly according to God's prophetic word. By the mouth of His prophets God had foretold certain things: "I" will return, and "I" will build again the tabernacle of David, and "I" will set it up, that the residue of men may seek after "the Lord" and all the Gentiles upon whom "my" name is called, saith the Lord, who was now beginning to accomplish the blessings purposed long before.

To anticipate slightly, let me notice how this man of "God" refers to the Gentile believers. Not as Gentile believers, not as Antiochan Christians, not as the uncircumcised; but, God being uppermost in his heart, they are simply viewed as human beings in their position, and a blessed position it was, towards "God," they which from among the Gentiles are turning to God."

What is his judgment? It is wonderfully brief and undogmatic: "Let us not trouble them," yet let them see to this, that forbearing love and holiness of life imperatively demand certain things.

Before saying a few words on the latter topics, let us observe that this judgment was arrived at by the exercise of one of the gifts of the Holy Spirit, namely, wisdom (1 Cor. xii. 8), whereby the past dealings of God, the present dealings of God, and the prophetic word of God, were, in the power of the Spirit of God, shown to combine together to indicate the very answer to be given to the question under consideration.

The judgment was not a new revelation, nor something imposed either by arbitrary authority, or by a majority, nor contrary to the opinion of a reticent, dissentient minority. But "it seemed good to the Apostles and the Elders, with the whole Church, they having come to one accord," to send Judas and Silas to tell independently by word of mouth that which Paul and Barnabas would take in the form of a written decree.

It was thus incontrovertibly decided and witnessed, in writing and orally, that the yoke of bondage, which neither the Jews nor their Fathers were able to bear, was not to be put upon the neck of Gentile disciples.

Nevertheless there is a yoke of love, and there are the undeniable claims of holiness. What were they in regard to those who, from among the Gentiles, had recently turned to God?

They were living in the days when Israel's broken covenant was becoming old, and waxing aged, it was nigh unto vanishing away. Things were in a transition state, but the life of the old still flickered, and must not be ignored. Jews who were not Christians, and very likely most Jews who had become Christians, would be horror-struck and scandalised if a Gentile believer, because of his liberty from the law of meats and drinks, ate blood or things strangled. The true and living God had himself imposed on the Jew prohibitions in regard to these things. Violence would be done to his whole being if in his presence or in his neighbourhood, God's direction, once given to some were counteracted by those to whom they were not given. The Gentile believers must be careful not to act so. Let not Christian liberty be used as an occasion to the flesh, but through love be servants one to another.

Let us now consider the next point, the eating of things sacrificed to idols. There is one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we unto Him; and one Lord, Jesus Christ, through whom are all things, and we through Him. But some true brethren in Christ, once idolaters, still thought that an idol was something, and consequently that food offered in sacrifice to it was defiling. Such persons were really weak, but they themselves were not to be scorned on that account, nor were their prejudices to be set at naught. That would indeed be sin against Christ. Conscience is precious, even though weak. Oh, for more conscientiousness! Let the stronger in the faith show their strength by this kind of self-control, namely, by not requiring that others should see with themselves, and by not using their liberty so as to injure the tender, though not thoroughly enlightened, conscience of him for whom Christ died, an exhortation of wide application for all times, and sometimes very needful.

There was also in their case a third necessary injunction, and it must be attended to. A particular sin in God's sight very heinous, was prevalent amonst pagans, by whom it was thought of lightly. Pagans these Gentile believers had been, and sins yielded to in time past nurture a sinfulness after their kind, which may reappear. Therefore they should especially flee from that sin, as well as, of course, from sin generally.

Thus was "God" glorified; and the tide of peace, and rest, and joy in the Lord Jesus Himself, as the one through whose grace salvation is sure, flowed back to those whose souls had been subverted, and they rejoiced for the consolation. How calculated is exhortation after this godly sort, when accepted and acted upon, to prevent sectarianism, to nurture genuine Christian Catholicity, to make Christians attractive links of union, and to guard them from becoming elements of separation.

May we enjoy the same liberty from the yoke of bondage! May we also contemporaneously profit by the principle of these exhortations. For, indeed, it is as we live out the truth in practice, that the principle grows in ourselves, and the new man advances into the likeness of his Lord. Let us so act in our individual path; and when we form part of a congress, council, or other assembly, called to consider religious questions, let us bear with others, and ourselves avoid the much disputing, and watch increasingly to glorify God Himself, taking this Apostolic model for our personal guidance.

THE FRENCH COAST.

IN addition to the frequent notices we have lately given of the work of Mr. Henry Cook's Mission ketch, the Annie, on the French coast, we have received an interesting report from Miss Blundell, of 16, Rue Tilsitt, Paris. She says:—

"Never was there a brighter thought than that of employing a Mission Yacht to attract the maritime populations of France. Trouville, Honfleur, Caen, Rouen, Havre, Boulogne and Calais, have been visited with blessed results.

"In Calais the Annie stayed three weeks. It was touching to see the fishers' children remain for hours on the quay waiting for the time of meeting as for a daily fête, and the continued overflowing of the people at the adults' meetings. It was joy when Mr. Henry Cook, the originator of this Mission to Seamen, came to spend the last few days. Tea was given in English fashion three times, and did much to strengthen the pleasant bonds between the Annie and the people, and the earnest Calais Christians who did their best to help.

"Several earnest cases of conversion, and a thorough stir among the maritime populations, are the present results. I have rarely seen a Mission in such perfect harmony with the needs of the people as that of Mr. Henry Cook's Seamen's Mission. A proposal was put forward to reach all the inland centres in France by a Canal boat, properly fitted up, and gliding along the canals, stopping at every town of consequence, doing similar work. Whose heart will be stirred to do this?"

Mr. Cook also writes us, saying that the Annie is to be refitted and sent to France again next spring. He is greatly in need of pecuniary help for his very useful mission; which we hope our readers will supply.

FAMILY RELIGION.

By Rev. Dr. STANFORD, Camberwell.

ADDRESS DELIVERED AT THE BAPTIST UNION, LEICESTER, OCTOBER 4.

WITH much deference I have to submit to your judgment the following considerations on the subject of Family Religion.

THE CHARGE.

(1) Speaking to you as heads of families, I say, first, let each one of you look upon his own young family as a charge from the Father in Heaven. Distinguish between the rights of ownership and the responsibilities of a charge. To have a charge is to be entrusted with what belongs to another. When, for the first time in your family, Jesus takes a little child and sets it in the midst of you, eyes full of liquid sunshine grow dim at the sight of it; looks, loving as the looks that watched the bulrush ark, beam on its velvet face; before the spell of its sacred innocence, discord softens into music; and the roughest man feels gentle as giant Lamech did when the tendrils of a tiny fist clasped round his great finger, making him whisper, "This same shall comfort us."

But whose child is it? You are sure, as a matter of course, that it is all your own—your own flower, your own toy, your own pride, your own to keep, your own to do what you like with; but I hear a Voice from the excellent glory say, "No! that child belongs to Me, and you only have it from Me as a charge." Once ancient Israel heard this speech from God: "Thou hast taken thy sons and thy daughters, whom thou hast borne unto Me, and these thou hast sacrificed. . . . Thou hast slain my children, and delivered them, to cause them to pass through the fire" (Ezek. xvi. 20, 21). You are not tempted to offer your children to Moloch. The British public will do anything for fashion; but it is not now the fashion to catch the laughing little nurslings up from the cradle, to carry them to a god of burning brass, and to drop them into arms of scintillating white fire. English ladies and gentlemen do occasionally sacrifice a child to an idol, but not now to this one. The passage, therefore, is cited only to fill your souls with the thunder of the words "my children"—words claiming God's right to all children through all time. They are his because, in the deepest sense of language, He is their Father. Mortals are only the fathers after "the flesh," with the sinful sympathies and tendencies that strike through the flesh to the spirit.

But the mere flesh is not the child. That child will not one day all change as mere flesh might, into a little lime, or a little earth, or a little grass; its knowledge is not the mere verdict of the senses, its thought is not some fine result of phosphorus. "There is a spirit in man" from the moment of his birth, "and the breath of the Almighty hath given him understanding." The world of wonders, the eternity of powers, the infinity of latent possibilities, that lie folded up in that bud of being, a little child, belong not to the flesh, of which you are the father, but to the spirit, which is God's immediate creation. He has placed that child of his under your charge, that you may train it to be a citizen of earth as well as of heaven, and you have the sole responsibility of this just at the crisis of first impulses, when character begins to take form, when seeds of thought begin to quicken, out of which infinite forests shall spring, when stories begin to open that shall never have an end.

THE MANAGEMENT.

(2) I venture to express an opinion as to the authority given you for the management of this charge. The most important office in society is the parent's office, and the first father was the first magistrate. In this home rule, of course, "the husband is head of the wife," and she would think little of him if he were not; but the domestic authority of husband and wife is inseparable. They are not "twin stars," for "twin" means twain, and it has been ordained that "the twain shall be one." Baron Swedenborg says that "the married in heaven always melt into one angel;" if so, it must be a heavenly thing for this melting process to be finished, far as may be, on earth, so that between father and mother there may be delicate, mutual, continuous, indefinable help in the exercise of domestic authority. The child's obedience to this must begin from the first possible moment, and it will be harder every moment you postpone it. Wait until he is old enough to reason with, require of him only what he can understand, and you virtually give up altogether. From the first, and until he ceases to be a child, you alone must decide what he shall have, or learn, or do.

The difficulty is to settle the principles of your government. Some of the faithful so govern their children as to stifle their natures. They are always waiting to be down upon them. They give out pungent, stringent, most minute orders on all matters, in all moments. They are ever coercive in trifles. They scrub them with good advice from day to day, and aim to keep them what they ought to be by the sheer force of autocratic dictation. They would hold their opinions for them, lest they should hold the wrong ones; tie their hands, lest they should get into mischief; hobble their feet, lest they should run away; bandage their eyes, lest they should behold vanity; lock the muzzle on their mouths, lest they should be rude; or keep them under glass, lest "the wind should visit them too roughly." And the result is that, when the inevitable time comes for the youth to leave home and act for himself, he might say, of liberty, what Wamba, the son of Witless, did, "I wish any wise man would teach me what ever to make of it, now I have it."

Bounding from this extreme, some of our friends verify the Selavonic proverb, "Go far enough from the east, and you get into the west." Their cry is, "Oh, give the children their liberty, and let them be happy." What liberty? Liberty to do wrong, or to do nothing, or to do what they please, when, where, and how, without why or wherefore? Liberty to be nuisances? Liberty, like the liberty of an unfledged nestling, to topple out of its nest? liberty to be caught, liberty to starve, liberty to die? "Oh, give them their liberty," is only the cry of the thoughtless, or of the selfish, or of those who mistake laxity for love. "The sons of Eli made themselves vile, and he restrained them not." The little rebels had their liberty, because it would have been a trouble for the father to restrain it; and while he was thinking that he spared them, he only spared himself. The only liberty that makes for happiness in young or old, is liberty under law; and the rule I plead for is not that which crushes liberty, but that which educates it—that which trains the child in the right use of all his faculties, and rules him so that he may learn to rule himself. This rule must be real. A king may be a ceremony, but a father is not; and when God makes a father of any man, there can be on that man's part no evasion of responsibility, and no right to say, "I decline to act."

THE POWER.

(3) Allow me to urge the need of training by the power of your own Christian life. I once met with this somewhat free translation of a certain Latin parable: "A maternal crab sharply said to her daughter, 'Walk straight, child; hold your head up!' The little innocent answered, 'Yes, mother. Mother, will you walk first?' The mother did so; not adding to the light of instruction the force of example." This parable is to the point. Young detectives have small respect for eloquence that is only labial, and their souls are not to be stirred by mere puffs of articulated wind. One of the divinest names of religion is grace; and, before now, families have had some reason for saying of their leaders: "Walk first, and show us what you mean by grace." Is grace a secretion, or a sensation, or an emotion, or a profession, or what? Is grace the fault-finding faculty? Has grace no softening charm on the temper, no lifting force for the life? Is grace that which makes our family nest a nest of nettles? To such questions as these, put in whatever words, let the life of every Christian parent say "No!"

Grace glories in truth; "grace," in the saved as well as in the Saviour, "reigns through righteousness;" grace fills the house with a climate of love; grace is a life, a life that inspires the whole man, so that everything done by a Christian man ought to be a Christian deed; whatever else it is, grace is graceful. Beauty in motion is what the Greeks meant by the word, and this idea is included in its meaning still, for there can be no such thing as ungraceful grace. Mr. Jay, of Bath, tells us of Cornelius Winter, that it seemed scarcely possible to see him and not secretly say, "There goes a Christian! How beautiful is a Christian! May I be a Christian!" The blessing that would come to our families from such a heightened Christian life in all their leaders, no words yet born within us can express.

THE SCRIPTURE.

(4) Let me speak my mind about home training in the knowledge of the Scriptures. In popular books, warning stories are told, and gruesome pictures painted of such home training. Survivors touch us to tears by the things they tell about the Calvinistic religiosities of their melancholy childhood. It appears from these reports that the training in question is carried on through the medium of "upturned noses, nasal psalmody, long chapters, long extemporaneous prayers;" long faces, long sermons, and long, sad, soporific Sundays. (Considering the tremendous things I am now speaking of, you will, I am sure, pardon the use of long words.) Southey, Thackeray, Macaulay, Mill, and other great magicians of the soul are summoned as witnesses of these things. We are told that minds worth anything, minds that long for an atmosphere of growth and movement, minds with any elasticity, fertility, or impulse, will not tolerate the maddening humdrum, the austere dulness, the grey and colourless life of such Scriptural home training; that the working of the reactionary law is inevitable; and that as, when a young Spartan left Sparta, he always became the most dissolute of the Greeks; as the son of holy Grimshaw became a sot; and the son of philanthropic John Howard became a scapegrace;—so, by the processes of family religion, the young are made to hate religion. No wonder!

But there are dyspeptics in all denominations; and although, in former days, a few mistaken people of every creed furnished materials for such pictures, we fail to recognise in them the likeness of Christian family training now by average Evangelicals; but we pass this by, and ask, what kind of training our friends would recommend? In substance, the answer is mainly in such negatives as these: No definite theology, no doctrine, no dogma, no catechism, no fixed institute of family prayer. We are not prepared to vote for these resolutions. No definite theology! Then the Christian revelation is to be looked upon as a revelation of the indefinite, a revelation of mist; in short, a revelation of nothing. We say, God is infinite, and salvation is infinite; but, to be of any use, the Gospel, which is the only way to God, must be definite. It is inconceivable that the words dictated by Infinite Wisdom, on purpose for our guidance at this crisis, are indefinite words, conveying no clear, unquestionable directions. No doctrine! Why not? Doctrine simply means authoritative teaching; and the doctrines of Scripture are only the teachings of Scripture in distinction from our own teachings. No dogma! At present the matter in question is a certain branch of education. Must there be no dogma in education? Then there must be no Euclid, no multiplication table, no art, no science of any kind, for dogmas are only fixed principles. If these are indispensable in learning the ower things, why are we to do without them in learning the higher? The objectors do not really think that there must be no dogma, for they themselves insist on a dogma, and that is, that the revelation of the Gospel is indefinite, and that Christianity is an unsettled problem. No catechism! This matter has been so many times well aired and re-dusted that there is no need to repeat the ventilation. For my own part, I almost think, with Master John Spencer, that "if we had not so many uncatechised heads, we should not have so many Christian weathercocks!"

"No family prayer! that is, after the Puritan type; but, instead of this, let the young people, if they please, attend a short service in some sacred edifice." No such thing! Let us do our utmost to keep them from the spells of any power that would sacramentalise family religion, sacramentalise the pastorate, and even sacramentalise the origin of Christian life. Our houses are our temples, and every man is a priest in his own house. Instead of giving up the good old habit, let every father adapt it to circumstances, and try to make it more interesting. This was the method of a certain good old vicar: "For my family worship, I am not the reader, but employ one of the children. I make no formal comment; but when any striking event or sentence arises, I say, 'Mark that! see what God thinks of that thing!' Sometimes I ask what they think of the matter, and how such and such a thing strikes them. I often get very strange, and sometimes very ridiculous, answers; but attention is all alive when I am explaining wherein they err, and what is the truth."

The knowledge essential to child no less than man is "the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord," and this is what we must teach somehow. "Christian teaching does not consist in words," we are told. No; but it must include words. In all systematic endeavour it is important not to teach too much at a time, but only a little; then to let it soak.

THE MOTHER'S INFLUENCE.

Of course the mother speaks the first word, and has the first influence. Many melting stories are told on earth, and doubtless many more in heaven, about the wonders Almighty grace has wrought through her voice in sacred moments of early prayer and teaching. Whatever methods may be adopted, the most influential of all teachings at home, whether by father or mother, is that which answers to the description, "Thou shalt teach these words diligently to thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." This is not so easy as it seems. British Solomon though you may be, the small Queen of Sheba who trips down to you with dolls and hard questions—forced to hold your hand all the while, lest her feet should dance away with her from off the earth—will now and then ask a question that might have posed one of Milton's evil angels; and you may depend upon this—if there should be a flaw in your argument, or a disingenuous evasion in your tactics, that sly slip of womanhood will be sure to detect it, even though she may say nothing. "Did God make heaven?" "Then He did not always live in heaven?" Where did He live while heaven was being made?" "Does God live everywhere?" "Then why did He want heaven to live in?" "How did He get in?" Blessings on the fluttering little heart! As the years fly, and the boys grow, you must look alive, to be ready with the solution of difficulties suggested by those serials that lie on your table, charming all readers by a style of graceful and bewitching delight; or difficulties started by talk with companions who can find nothing in all the mysteries of being, created or uncreated, which they cannot describe, pronounce upon, and laugh at; or with those who think that there is nothing of the least importance in all mortal or immortal things but "good form;" or of those who scorn all articles of faith that you feel to be most sacredly true and beautiful, as the mere pass-words of

PURITANIC "NARROWNESS."

All errorists appeal to that sensitive generosity which is natural to the young, and which makes them shudder at the very word "narrow." Such appeals are being made to them in the city, and on their way to it in the train or the tram. They are often made to them by their instructors or their class-mates in the schools on which good society has been supposed to set its "hall-stamp," and on account of which stamp, real or imaginary, you have selected them; they are always being made. The Romanist is ready with them—he believes that there is no salvation outside the pale of the Church to which he himself belongs; and, because you believe that all are in the true Church who are in the true Christ, as soon as he can reach the ear of your children he insinuates that you are "narrow." The Ritualist, who makes the like exclusive claims for his own framework of pleasing imitations, so splendidly got up out of bits "stuck together with Roman cement," also connects himself with a profession of breadth, and tells them that you are "narrow." The Atheist, so called in the "Pilgrim's Progress," but now known by a gentler name, wins the admiration of the young pilgrims who are so dear to you, by his humble charity; for he professes not to know anything, and never presumes to say that the things told about God in the Book are not true, but only that no one can be sure that they are true, for science has now shown that such knowledge is impossible. Of course he is gloriously liberal; but, whatever liberality he may have for others, even he has none for you, because, you know, you are "narrow."

You may reverence the conscience of every man; your character may be marked with grand simplicity and superb disdain of the theatric; your heart may leap with delight at the sight of God's image wherever it may shine; the life of your life may say, as we all say now, "Grace be with all who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and in truth," to whatever school of thought they belong, or in whatever "lodge" they meet; you may pray to feel related to all the goodness in the universe, whatever its denomination, and to have a charity "broad as the charity of Almighty God;" but if you dare to hold what is called "the Evangelical creed" it will be said that you "dare not speak your mind," and that you are "narrow." Souls blight souls. Even your children may become to some degree affected by the atmosphere of opinion they daily pass through, and you may gradually lose your influence on those around whom your proudest hopes gather, and for whom your fondest prayers ascend.

God help you!—help you to be a father tenderly sympathetic with the spiritual sorrows and puzzles of young life; a father who is an acquaintance improving upon acquaintance; a father who is always true, natural, alive, and like the father of the Beechers, who, it is said, always had "a fresh breeze blowing through his soul!" To be all this, you must be educated for your office in the "secret place of the Most High"; and there must be given to the work of your high calling much prayer, much costly time, and much trouble.

GAMBLING AT MONTE CARLO.

THE season is approaching when invalids, families, and others unable to bear the rigours of an English winter will resort to the more genial climate of the Riviera. Thousands of our countrymen sojourn at Nice, Cannes, and Mentone, between the months of October and May, and every year we hear of the ruin effected in their ranks through giving way to the allurements spread for their fall at Monaco.

Special attractions have been provided this year in the shape of an Exhibition at Nice, towards which the Monte Carlo Casino has contributed 200,000 francs, with the object of bringing sight-seers to the neighbourhood of their gaming saloons. The painful story of misery and woe and a ghastly list of suicides will again be repeated. Fortunes will be lost or broken; the happiness of individuals and families wrecked and the moral and spiritual welfare of multitudes imperilled.

The International Society for the Suppression of the Gaming Tables at Monte Carlo has for several years vigorously protested against this growing evil, by circulating suitable pamphlets among visitors throughout the Riviera; keeping on the campaign in the Press of France, Italy, Germany, and other countries, and has already succeeded in enlisting the sympathy of several foreign Governments, who are prepared to act for the abolition of the gaming tables.

It is no "small thing" the International Association has undertaken. Hitherto the expenses have been borne by a few; one of the number the Lord has recently called to himself.

Will not the readers of THE CHRISTIAN lend a helping hand in this arduous and most important work, and thus aid in saving many from death, suffering, and misery?

WATFORD.—On the 15th inst., an eleven days' Gospel Temperance Mission will commence in the new Hall at the Coffee-tavern at this place. Among the speakers are Revs. J. W. Kirton, W. Barker, G. M. Murphy, W. H. Allen, and Messrs. C. Ernest Tritton, N. B. Downing, G. Thorneloe, H. Branthwaite, J. H. Raper, and Miss Laws.

THE PERSONALITY OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.*

AS our attention during the Conference to-day is to be mainly directed to the Holy Spirit and his work, it is natural that we should begin by briefly considering who and what is the Holy Spirit? What is his relation to the other persons of the Trinity, and what is his relation to men, especially in connection with the great work of redemption?

It is a subject which from its very nature demands no ordinary reverence and subduedness of mind. We may well take the shoes from off our feet as we approach it; we must address ourselves to it in a frame of holy awe. In its intellectual bearings, the whole subject of the Trinity belongs to a region so utterly beyond the ken of our faculties, that every inquiry that bears upon it ought to be conducted with profound reverence and godly fear. In its practical bearings, the doctrine of the Holy Spirit makes an equally strong demand upon our reverence, for it is in the person of the Holy Spirit that Godhead comes into closest contact with man, and no inquiry can be more important than that which concerns the manner in which, when the Holy Spirit thus deals with us, we should act towards Him. If there were some one member of the Royal Family whose function it was, when we had any business to transact, to come into personal contact with us, we should feel that without diminishing the respect due to those members of Royalty who kept more in the distance, we were under special obligations to bear ourselves suitably toward him. If it be true, as we shall presently see more clearly, that the Holy Spirit is that member of the Trinity who comes into touch with us, with the view of depositing Divine elements in our spirits, with the view of quickening us, and of moulding and fashioning us after the Divine likeness, and in all suitable ways influencing us in accordance with the Divine will—it becomes overwhelmingly important that we bear ourselves rightly and reverently toward Him, and abstain from all that would be displeasing in his sight, and especially from all that is fitted to thwart Him and drive Him away.

The special point on which this address is intended to bear is the Personality of the Holy Spirit. We have to consider Him not as a mere influence exerted either by the Father, or the Son, but as Himself, a person, equally a person with the Father and the Son. It is true that this is necessarily implied in the very doctrine of the Trinity; the Trinity means three persons in the unity of the Godhead, and in this point of view it were out of the question that the first should be a person, and the second a person, but not the third. In point of fact, however, it is found that many persons have a much less distinct impression of the personality of the Holy Spirit than they have of the personality of the Father and the Son. It is desirable, therefore, that the fact of his personality, and the proofs of his personality, be set clearly before our minds at the outset of our Conference to-day.

We gather from Scripture—which is really the only source of our knowledge on this profound and mysterious subject—that while the Father is the Eternal Fountain of Godhead, the Son is eternally begotten of the Father, and the Holy Spirit proceeds eternally from the Father and the Son. We are further taught in Scripture that no man having seen God at any time, it is the function of the Son to reveal God, and that it is the function of the Holy Spirit to communicate God, in all his communicable attributes, to men. In reference to the scheme of redemption, it is the office of the Father to devise, the office of the Son to execute, and the office of the Holy Spirit to apply that work. The performance of these various functions implies the personality of each of the three persons, and certainly it implies the personality of the third as much as of the first or the second. I do not take up your time at present with the Scripture proofs of these varied functions of the three persons. I suppose it will be admitted by those present that they are Scriptural. I trust, too, that there are many here who can add to that Scriptural evidence a certain confirmation from their own experience.

For the doctrine of the Trinity, far beyond our natural apprehension though it is, is susceptible of a certain verification from experience. To the natural mind the doctrine appears not only unreasonable but very unnecessary and even troublesome. It seems to introduce a very needless complication into the unity of God. To the natural reason of man it appears that all it is essential for God to do might be done by one person as well as, nay, better than, by three. But those to whom redemption has become a reality—those who have passed through the stages of conscious guilt, and conscious disorder of soul—who have been driven from refuge to refuge, finding all insufficient until at last they have got rest in the atoning work of Jesus, the sanctifying work of the Holy Spirit, and the fore-ordaining grace of the Father who has disposed and directed all,—those who have come through all the strain of these experiences, find much complacency and satisfaction in that manifoldness of Divine operation which is implied in the doctrine of the Trinity, and in that blessed and most harmonious co-operation of all the three Persons in our redemption, which is the practical outcome of the doctrine to us. The interlacing arms of the three Persons seem to provide a specially sure and glorious refuge for the soul that has been tossed with a sense of sin, after it has been driven from all the refuges of lies, while the special relation of each of the three to some one aspect of the work of redemption gives us the fullest possible assurance that every department of the work will be most thoroughly carried out. The words of the Apostolic Benediction are far more to such persons than a threefold echo of a single sound. "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost," are a threefold cord that cannot be broken.

"The Lord bless thee and keep thee; the Lord make his face shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee; the Lord lift up his countenance upon thee and give thee peace," acquires a new fulness and completeness when you think of it as the blessing of the One in Three, the Three in One.

The more direct Scripture proofs of the personality of the Holy Spirit are such as these:—

(1) The Holy Spirit is spoken of in relation to the Father and the Son in such terms as imply that He is a separate person. The formula of baptism and the words of benediction now referred to imply his personality. Why should we baptize in the Name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, if the Holy Ghost is not a person, if He is a mere Divine emanation or influence? But even more decisive are the terms in which He is referred to in our Lord's farewell discourse: "The Comforter, which is the Holy Spirit, whom the Father will send in my name" (John xiv. 26). It were hardly possible for words to teach more clearly that the Holy Spirit is a separate person, separate both from the Father and the Son.

(2) Will and choice, the most peculiar acts of personality, are ascribed to the Spirit. In 1 Cor. xii. 11, after an enumeration of the gifts which were common in the early Church, we read: "All these worketh that one and the self same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as He will." There is no more distinct evidence of personality among men than the exercise of will and choice, such as is here ascribed to the Holy Spirit. Of similar tenor are the passages in the Acts xvi. 6, 7, where it is said that Paul and his companions were forbidden by the Holy Ghost to preach in Asia, and that when they tried to go into Bithynia the Spirit suffered them not. So also we read (Acts xiii. 2) that as certain brethren ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said: "Separate Me Barnabas and Paul for the work whereunto I have called them." If we take such passages in their natural sense they undoubtedly, and most distinctly, prove the personality of the Holy Spirit.

(3) The ordinary operations of the Holy Ghost, involving will and choice as they do, imply the Spirit's personality. These operations will be the subject of another address. What I remark of them is that they are characterised by much variety, and by adaptation to the circumstances of each case. The Spirit does not deal with all alike. He has various ways of convincing and converting, of comforting, and even of sealing. His operations are adapted to the peculiar case of each. There were great diversities in the dealings of our Lord with individuals while He was pursuing his personal ministry. He did not deal with Zacchæus as He dealt with Nicodemus; He did not deal with Peter as He dealt with Thomas: He did not deal with the Syro-Phœnician mother as He dealt with the woman that was a sinner. Now the Holy Spirit was sent to continue the work of Christ in drawing men and women to Himself. The work of the Holy Spirit is characterised by the same diversity as that of Christ, and this implies not only personality, but a busy, active, earnest mode of operation—the work of one intensely interested in what He is doing, and prepared to bring any or all the resources of his Infinite Divine Nature to bear on the great work of converting, sanctifying, and transforming the souls of men.

(4) One other proof of the personality of the Holy Spirit is found in what is said regarding Him when his work is opposed. Scripture tells us that the Holy Spirit may be resisted, grieved, vexed, quenched. It would take too much time to go fully into the meaning of these several expressions, and the occasions to which they are applicable. They do not imply that the Holy Spirit ever fails in his blessed purpose in the case of any who are the subjects of God's fore-ordaining grace. And, indeed, when it is said that the Spirit is grieved or vexed, this can only be the figure called anthropopathy—ascribing to a Divine Being the feelings of men. But undoubtedly the use of such words is a conclusive proof of the personality of the Spirit. It would be wholly unsuitable to say that an influence or an emanation was grieved or vexed. Grief or vexation, or whatever feeling answers to this in the Divine nature, is obviously an attribute of a person.

Now, in conclusion, let us ask, what is the practical application of this doctrine of the Personality of the Holy Spirit? What difference does it make that the work of regeneration, sanctification, and transformation, is not carried on by an influence or emanation from God the Father, but by a separate Divine person? Now, I am not prepared to say that the difference is a difference in kind, for there have been good men who have been Christians for years and have fully recognised the Divine source of conversion and sanctification before they understood the doctrine of the personality. But if not a difference in kind, it is a most decided and important difference in degree. It gives us a new and vivid sense of the reality and overwhelming importance of the work of renewal in the soul of man, to think that it has been specially committed to one Divine person, that it specially occupies his Divine energies, that it is the special subject of his thoughts and operations. Further, it gives us a vivid sense of the honour which we ought to cherish for the Holy Spirit, the gratitude which we owe to Him, the profound cordiality with which we should welcome Him, the dread we should have of hindering or obstructing Him, the delight with which we should resign ourselves to his hands, and seek to be penetrated by his grace, and to be instruments for his work. Once more: this subject may well give us confidence in the complete accomplishment of the work of conversion and sanctification, seeing it has been committed to a Divine Being who is as much interested in it, and as profoundly qualified for it, as the Second Person was for the work undertaken by Him. Let us, then, honour more the Holy Spirit, realise more vividly the value and importance of his work, own more humbly our entire dependence on Him, look up to Him more earnestly to put forth his mighty power; and very specially let us guard more carefully against all that would hinder Him in his mighty enterprise either in ourselves or in others. "Because the palaces shall be forsaken, the multitude of the city shall be left, the forts and towers shall be for dens for ever, a joy of wild asses, a pasture of flocks: until the Spirit be poured upon us from on high, and the wilderness be a fruitful field, and the fruitful field be counted for a forest."

One other remark I must make in conclusion, in the way of caution. The Scriptures show us, that while there is a real sense in which different portions of the work of redemption are specially connected with the several persons of the Trinity, that sense is not an exclusive sense. That is, it does not exclude the other Persons from doing the same work. The Father sanctifies, and the Son sanctifies, along with the Spirit; and, indeed, it cannot be otherwise. In the ineffable mystery of the Trinity, the acts of each are the acts of all, and the acts of all are the acts of each. For "there are three persons in the Trinity, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one God, the same in substance and equal in power and glory."

FUNCHAL, MADEIRA.—The emigrant ship Duntrim, with 485 emigrants for Australia, called at this port with her condensing machinery broken down. I went on board with Mrs. Smart on September 30, and held a service, which was very well attended. We found a Primitive Methodist from Birmingham holding the fort. For the Young.

FOR BOYS AND GIRLS STUDYING FRENCH.

My Dear Young Friends,—I suppose by this time you have returned, or are returning, from the holidays. I wonder what you have been doing, and where you have been. Among the hills, by the sea, or some of you in the homes which, though they are in the smoky towns, are bright and pleasant to you because they are bright and sunny with a mother's love. Well, now the holidays are over, and you are back again at work among your old companions. Some of you have the great advantage of having Christian privileges and Christian companions round you at school. To you I would like to say a word or two.

A young French girl said to me one day, "I was brought up in the Orphelinat at Creil. It is so good to be there! You hear only good things. They feed you on the Word of God. Every one is pious round you, and you believe you are converted. Then you come back to your village, and you are surrounded by those who know nothing of God, and you find out after all you were not converted." Perhaps some of you have had an experience something like this in your holidays, and you feel a little ashamed to meet your companions who during the holidays have been more privileged than you. Take care, my dear child, and avoid all hypocrisy—it is a hard word to use, but it is a very frequent snare with children. No one, or at least very few, intends deliberately to make a false profession; many, many make a mistake at first, and are ashamed to confess it afterwards. If you have made a mistake come at once to the Lord Jesus, now. He is the same, and will receive you just as if it were the first time of your coming to Him; and this time you know your weakness better, and you know more of the dangers and temptations which will beset you. Only let the dangers and temptations drive you to Christ, and not away from Him.

And now I think you may like to hear something of what we have seen this July and August. We have been in such a nice village, or rather hamlet, among the mountains. We are in a long green valley, shut up at one end by a great barrier of precipice called Findurl, which connects two mountains, St. Genaix and Ambel, on each side, and then another peak called Concasson is joined to Ambel, so we are in the heart of the mountains. St. Etienne is far up the slope of the mountain side, half hidden among great walnut-trees and orchards of plums and mulberries. Everyone has his own property, so as one woman said, "Il n'y a pas de misere dans notre vallée." ("There is no misery in our valley.") But alas! there are very few who know anything about the Saviour, and the children did not know one hymn. It was droll, only sad, to hear two little mites of boys singing the "Marseillaise": "Aux armes, citoyens!" Well, we found they only wanted teaching, and were all ready for that. We had brought a little "harmonic flute" with us, and invited the children to come every day to learn to sing. They came, and were delighted to hear a Bible story, too, and ready also to learn a text every day.

When their holidays came we changed the hour, and one day when they came too early I carried the harmonic flute out into the orchard, and they were glad to sing in the open air under the fruit trees. Next day their mothers asked to come and bring their work while the children had their lesson, and then the fathers and brothers came too, and it looked like a picture to see the groups resting, or singing, or listening. One day I counted fifty who were present. Of course we had a Sunday-school, too, and when we had our meetings on Sunday, Miss M. made the children recite their texts, and all the village took the greatest interest in hearing Paul and Leopold and Pauline repeat the precious verses they had learned.

Now the sun sets earlier, and our friends have not so much time in the noon rest, but they have learned to love the hymns, so one evening they sent to ask if they might come and veiller avec nous—that is, spend the evening. Of course, again, we were only too glad to have the opportunity of "sowing seed," and now for ten days we had perhaps forty in our room for a veiller. We begin with hymns, "Cantiques populaires." And how they sing! Tunes you know, though the words are a little different. The great favourite is:—

"Monte sur l'arche du Dieu fort Jésus Christ y commande." (No. 40.)

Then, to rest Miss Mudie, I read to them an extract from The Christian, or from Missionary News, and then we sing again. Then we have reading from the Bible, and a short address. This week we are taking the life of St. Paul. You would like to see our veillée, would you not? the women in their white caps, and the men in their blouses, and hear them sing. Now, here is something you can do, in order to get ready for work here, and that is, practise singing these French hymns. As every syllable is sounded, there is little difficulty in learning, and, if you know the English tunes, I was going to say, none; however, there is need of attention and care, but it is worth while. We think some of the hymns prettier in French than in English. There is a nice S.S. Hymn-book, which only costs 4d., and has the music of about a hundred hymns. You will find these in their foreign dress: "Tell me the Old, Old Story," "Oh, that will be joyful," "A Little Ship," and other very old favourites. It is sold at No. 16, Rue de l'Abbaye, Paris.

I think you will see, how, without any great gifts, one might do something for the Lord in this land. I don't think there can be many villages as nice as this, but really I don't know. One day we went to a smaller hamlet across the valley; we found one family professedly pious, but who had not a word of encouragement for us. "No, they did not think there was the least use attempting a meeting." "Their neighbours did not care for good things at all." A few weeks later we called again; in the street we met several women, who all but insisted on a meeting. We were glad to promise to come another day. We went and found everybody at the meeting, including our friends who thought no one would come. What had caused the change? One of our little girls from St. Etienne had gone there to visit an aunt; she had sung for them, and talked of the meetings till they were all eagerness to have one. "A little child" had led them.—Yours affectionately,

S. R. Geldard.

THE BOYS' HOME, SOUTHWARK.—We have received a copy of the report of Mr. Fegan's work among the boys of London. It contains a detailed and deeply interesting account of the work in all its phases. Want of space forbids our quoting any part of it at present. We earnestly advise our readers to send three stamps to Mr. Fegan, Boys' Home, Southwark, for a copy. The spiritual tone of the work has been well kept up and bears good fruit. The financial help is an incessant want, because the boys and the work will grow.

THE LOOKS OF JESUS.

By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.,
Manchester.

"And He looked round about to see her that had done this thing."—Mark v. 32.

(Concluded).

(2) The Lord's looks of love and warning to those who have found Him.

THERE are three instances of this class. The first is when Helooked round on His disciples and said, "Behold my mother and my brethren!" (iii. 34). Perhaps no moment in all Christ's life had more of humiliation in it than that. There could be no deeper degradation than that his own family should believe him insane, not his brethren only, but his mother herself, seems to have been shaken from her attitude of meek obedience, so wonderfully expressed in her two recorded sayings, "Be it unto me according to thy word," and, "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it." She, too, appears to be in the shameful conspiracy, and to have consented that her name should be used as a lure in the wily message meant to separate Him from his friends, that He might be seized and carried off as a madman. What depth of tenderness was in that slow circuit of his gaze upon the humble, loving followers grouped around Him. It spoke the fullest trustfulness of them, and his rest in their sympathy, partial though it was. It went before his speech like the flash before the report, and looked what in a moment He said, "Behold my mother and my brethren." It owned spiritual affinities as more real than family bonds, and proved that He required no more of us than He was willing to do Himself, when He bade us forsake father and mother and wife and children for Him. We follow Him when we tread that road, hard though it be. In Him, the mother may behold her son; in Him, we may find more than the reality of every sweet family relationship. That same love which identified Him with those half enlightened followers here, still binds Him to us, and he looks down on us from amid the glory, and owns us for his true kindred.

That look of unutterable love is strangely contrasted with the next instance. We read (viii. 32) that Peter "took Him"—apart a little way I suppose—and began to rebuke Him. He turns away from the rash apostle, will say no word to him alone, but summons the others by a glance, and then, having made sure that all were within hearing, He solemnly rebukes Peter with the sharpest words that ever fell from his lips. That look calls them to listen, not that they may be witnesses of Peter's chastisement, but because the severe words concern them all. It bids them search themselves as they hear. They, too, may be "Satans." They, too, may shrink from the cross, and "savour the things that be of men."

We may take the remaining instance along with this. It occurs immediately after the story of the young seeker, to which we have already referred. Twice, within five verses (x. 23—27), we read that He looked on his disciples, before He spoke the grave lessons and warnings arising from the incident. A sad gaze that would be!—full of regret, and touched with warning. We may well believe it added weight to the lesson he would teach, that surrender of all things was needed for discipleship. We see that it had been burned into the memory of one of the little group, who told long years after how He had looked upon them so solemnly, as seeming to read their hearts while He spoke. Not more searching was the light of the eyes, which John in Patmos saw, "as a flame of fire." Still he looks on his disciples, and sees our inward hankering after the things of men; all our shrinkings from the cross and cleaving to the world are known to Him. He comes to each of us with that sevenfold proclamation, "I know thy works," and from his loving lips falls on our ears the warning, emphasized by that sad, earnest gaze, "How hard is it for them that have riches to enter into the kingdom of God!" But, blessed be his name, the stooping love which claims us for his brethren shines in his regard none the less tenderly, though he reads and warns us with his eye. So, we can venture to spread all our evil before him, and ask that He would look on it, knowing that as the sun bleaches cloth laid in its beams, He will purge away the evil which He sees, if only we let the light of his face shine full upon us.

(3) The Lord's look of anger and pity on his opponents.

That instance occurs in the account of the healing of a man with a withered arm, which took place in the synagogue of Capernaum (iii. 1—5). In the vivid narrative, we can see the Scribes and Pharisees, who had already questioned Him with insolent airs of authority about his breach of the Rabbinical Sabbatic rules, sitting in the synagogue, with their gleaming eyes "watching Him" with hostile purpose. They hope that He will heal on the Sabbath-day. Possibly they had even brought the helpless-handed man there, on the calculation that Christ could not refrain from helping him when he saw his condition. They are ready to traffic in human misery, if only they can catch him in a breach of the law. The fact of a miracle is nothing. Pity for the poor man is not in them. They have neither reverence for the power of the miracle-worker, nor sympathy with his tenderness of heart. The only thing for which they have eyes is the breach of the complicated web of restrictions which they have spun across the Sabbath-day. What a strange, awful power the pedantry of religious forms has of binding the vision and hardening the heart as to the substance and spirit of religion! That Christ should heal, neither made them glad nor believing, but that He should heal on the Sabbath-day roused them to a deadly hatred. So there they sit, on the stretch of expectation, silently watching. He bids the man stand forth. A movement, and there the cripple stands alone in the midst of the seated congregation. Then comes the unanswerable question which cut so deep, and struck their consciences so hard that they could answer nothing, only sit and scowl at Him with a murderous light gleaming in their eyes. He fronts them with a steady gaze, that travels over the whole group, and that showed to at least one who was present an unforgettable mingling of displeasure and pity. "He looked round about on them with anger, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts." In Christ's perfect nature, anger and pity could blend in wondrous union, like the crystal and fire in the abyss before the throne.

The soul that has not the capacity for anger at evil wants something of its due perfection, and goes halting like Jacob after Peniel. In Christ's complete humanity, it could not but be present, but in pure and righteous form. His anger was no disorder of passion, or "brief madness" that discomposed the even motion of his spirit, nor was there in it any desire for the hurt of its objects, but, on the contrary, it lay side by side with the sorrow of pity, which was intertwined with it like a golden thread. Both these emotions are fitting to a pure manhood in the presence of evil. They heighten each other. The perfection of righteous anger is to be tempered by sympathy. The perfection of righteous pity for the evildoer is to be saved from immoral condoning of evil as if it were only calamity by an infusion of some displeasure. We have to learn the lesson and take this look of Christ's as our pattern in our dealings with evildoers. Perhaps our day needs more especially to remember that a righteous severity and recoil of the whole nature from sin is part of a perfect Christian character. We are so accustomed to pity transgressors, and to hear sins spoken of as if they were misfortunes mainly due to "environment," or to inherited tendencies, that we are apt to forget the other side, that they are the voluntary acts of a man who could have refrained if he had wished, and whose not having wished is worthy of blame. But we need to aim at just such a union of feeling as was revealed in that gaze of Christ's and neither to let our wrath dry up our pity, nor our pity put out the pure flame of our indignation at evil.

That look comes to us with a message, when we are most conscious of the evil in our own hearts. Every man who has caught even a glimpse of Christ's great love, and has learned something of himself in the light thereof, must feel that wrath at evil sits ill on so sinful a judge as he feels himself to be. How can I fling stones at any poor creature when I am so full of sin myself? And how does that Lord look at me and all my wanderings from him, my hardness of heart, my Pharisaism and deadness to his spiritual power and beauty? Can there be anything but displeasure in him? The answer is not far to seek, but, familiar though it be, it often surprises a man anew with its sweetness, and meets recurring consciousness of unworthiness with a bright smile that scatters fears. In our deepest abasement, we may take courage anew when we think of that wondrous blending of anger shot with pity.

(4) The look of the Lord on the profaned temple.

On the day of Christ's triumphal entry into Jerusalem, apparently the Sunday before his crucifixion, we find (xi. 11) that He went direct to the temple, and "looked round about on all things." The King has come to his palace, "the Lord . . . . has suddenly come to his temple." How solemn that careful, all-comprehending scrutiny of all that He found there—the bustle of the crowds come up for the Passover, the trafficking and the fraud, the heartless worship! He seems to have gazed upon all that evening in silence, and as the shades of night began to fall, he went back to Bethany with the twelve. To-morrow will be time enough for the whip of small cords, for to-day enough to have come as King to the temple, and with intent, all-comprehending gaze, to have traversed its courts. Apparently He passed through the crowds there unnoticed, and beheld all, while himself unrecognised.

Is not that silent, unobserved Presence, with his keen searching eye that lights on all, a solemn parable of a perpetual truth? He walks amidst the seven golden candlesticks to-day, as in the temple of Jerusalem, and in the vision of Patmos. His eyes like a flame of fire regard and scrutinise us too. "I know thy works" is still upon his lips. Silent and by many unseen, that calm, clear-eyed, loving but judging Christ walks among his churches to-day. Alas! what does He see there? If He came in visible form into any congregation in England to-day, would He not find merchandise in the sanctuary, formalism and unreality standing to minister, and pretence and hypocrisy bowing in worship? How much of all our service could live in the light of his felt presence? And are we never going to stir ourselves up to a truer devotion and a purer service by remembering that He is here as really as He was in the temple of old?

Christ has done and suffered too much for the world to let the power of his Gospel be neutralised by the sins of his professing followers, and Christ loves the imperfect friends that cleave to Him, though their service be often stained, and their consecration always incomplete, too well to suffer sin upon them. Therefore He will come to purify his temple. Well for us, if we thankfully yield ourselves to his merciful chastisements, howsoever they may fall upon us, and believe that in them all He looks on us with love, and wishes only to separate us from that which separates us from Him.

On us all that eye rests with all these emotions fused and blended in one gaze of love that passeth knowledge—a look of love and welcome whensoever we seek Him, either to help us in outward or inward blessings; a look of love and warning to us—owning us also for his brethren, and cautioning us lest we stray from his side; a look of love and displeasure at any sin that blinds us to his gracious beauty; a look of love and observance of our poor worship and spotted sacrifices.

Let us lay ourselves full in the sunshine of his gaze, and take for ours the old prayer, "Search me, O Christ, and know my heart!" It is heaven on earth to feel his eye resting upon us, and know that it is love. It will be the heaven of heaven to see Him face to face, and to know even as we are known.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

LONDON Y.M.C.A'S. PREPARING.

IN different quarters of the metropolis the friends of evangelistic work are bestirring themselves in view of the campaign about to be commenced by Messrs. Moody and Sankey. A representative meeting of the London Y.M.C.A.'s was held at Exeter Hall on Monday, October 1, Mr. G. Williams presiding. A number of formal resolutions were submitted and adopted, pledging the various Associations to a hearty support of the work. A register of authorised workers is to be formed, and each worker will keep a record of the names and addresses of the young men whom he may have the opportunity of influencing towards spiritual decision.

As we have already stated, Mr. H. Thorne will devote his energies throughout the campaign specially to the work among London young men.

WORKING-LADS' INSTITUTE.—A meeting in aid of the building fund of the proposed new Working Lads' Institute for East London, will be held at the Mansion House, on Friday, the 12th inst., when the Lord Mayor has promised to preside. The main object of the Association is to promote the welfare of the working lads of the metropolis by establishing in the neighbourhoods where large numbers are employed or reside, institutes where such youths may profitably spend the evening hours, and so be saved from the temptations and snares of the streets, public-houses, music halls, &c. Nearly a thousand lads have attended the present institute at the Mount, Whitechapel; the premises, however, are small, and the work has been sadly hindered for want of increased accommodation. The Committee have now secured a large and eligible plot of freehold land in Whitechapel. Contributions amounting to about £2500 have already been obtained, leaving a similar amount now required. Mr. Henry Hill, Jun., 38, Bow-lane, is Hon. Sec.

AN IMPORTANT WORK.

THE Stoke Newington Mission to Women and Girls originated in a night-school for girls above the age of thirteen. It soon became popular, and up to the present time nearly 400 names have been entered on the books. Many of the scholars are of a very rough class and are principally employed as step-cleaners, laundresses, charwomen, &c. They thus have their evenings at their own disposal, and find but little in their cheerless homes to counteract the dangers of the streets. A warm, airy, and cheerful room has great attractions for them, and the actual benefit derived from the reading and writing lessons is a small matter compared with the importance of the Christian instruction which they receive, and of the shelter which is afforded them from the temptations to which they would be otherwise exposed.

The school proved the nucleus of other plans for their welfare, and the Mission work now comprises a night-school or club (open twice a week during the winter months), a mothers' meeting, lending library, and a coal and blanket club (into which above £118 was paid during the past year, and which is entirely self-supporting). Three Bible-women nurses, and a Bible-woman also, work in connection with the Mission and spend their time in ministering to any, either men or women, who are sick and suffering, in endeavouring to teach all of the Saviour, and thus to raise them from the degradation in which so many are sunk.

The need is now urgently felt of increasing the work and of placing it on a more permanent basis. For this end it is proposed to take a house as a centre of the Mission operations, which shall be under the charge of an efficient matron. Large rooms will be thrown open every night in which these girls can spend their evenings, where instruction and suitable amusements will be provided, and where they will be brought under Christian influence. One or two rooms will also be fitted up as dormitories as a temporary shelter in special cases. The kitchen will be utilised for the purpose of preparing food for the patients under the care of the nurses.

Both funds and workers are urgently needed. £400 is required, and towards this sum about £120 is already promised. The treasurer is Mr. A. H. Reed, Strathearn, Amhurst Park, Stamford-hill, N.

LOCAL BOARDS AND LICENSING.—Captain Brotchie, of Greenock, warns the friends of Temperance to have no faith in local boards. "We have already in the magistrates," he says, "a local board, and what are they doing? We are cursed with drink from one end of the town to the other."

BUDA-PESTH.—A Governess's Home was opened here on the 22nd September, at Waizner, Boulevard No. 1. It is intended to provide board and lodgings for governesses for one florin per day, and goes by the name of "Home Suisse." The promoters hope it will be a means of spiritual as well as temporal good, and they will be glad of pecuniary help. Address: A. Moody, Rudolf, Quai 8, Buda-Pesth.

THE ALPINE CHOIR AT HAWARDEN.—On Thursday last, Mr. Gladstone received Professor Andre's Alpine Choir, which was fulfilling an engagement at Chester. The party were very kindly received by Mrs. Gladstone and Mr. Herbert Gladstone in the drawing-room, where a number of guests were assembled. Mr. Gladstone had agreed to give only five minutes of his time to the relaxation thus offered him, but so pleased was he with the performance given, that he personally desired the repetition of four of the five items in the programme, and the result was that the five minutes were extended to three-quarters of an hour. The Alpine hymns especially pleased him, and several of these were repeated, as also a German wanderleid. Professor Andre, who is the composer of most of the music sung by the choir, was very highly complimented and repeatedly thanked by both the Premier and Mrs. Gladstone for having afforded them such a very happy hour. The members of the choir were afterwards entertained at tea by Mrs. Gladstone.

"THE SHEPHERD OF THE SHEEP."

SHEPHERD of the fold of God,
Look on me, a sinful lamb;
Lead me by Thy mighty power,
Till with Thee in heaven I am.

Shepherd of the fold of God,
Guard me through life's thorny maze;
In Thy bosom hide Thy lamb,
Till in heaven I sing Thy praise.

Shepherd of the fold of God,
Keep the wolves afar from me;
From my heart, oh, cast them out,
That there may be room for Thee.

Shepherd of the fold of God,
May Thy Spirit in me beam;
Drops of mercy now bestow,
Till in heaven I taste the stream.

Shepherd of the fold of God,
May thine arms encircle me;
Passing through the vale of death,
Say "Fear not, I am with thee."

Shepherd of the fold of God,
May I, thine own purchase, see,
In the happy fold above,
What my Shepherd's done for me.

Shepherd of the fold of God,
Then, and not till then, I'll see;
What thy grace hath saved me from,
What thy death hath done for me.

Shepherd of the fold of God,
With the ransomed flock above
May I spend eternal years,
Singing Thy redeeming love.

JESSIE ROY.

ZENANA MISSIONARIES.—Three of the students of the Medical Mission School, 58, St. George's-road, S.W., are about to proceed to India, under the auspices of different missionary societies. A prayer-meeting is held at the Home every Saturday at 12 noon, to which Christians are invited.

HOUSE OF REST.—Miss Mason's report of the House of Rest for Christian Workers gives a pleasing description of the way in which the Lord has supplied the need of the Home, and the benefit which has resulted to many weary ones from a brief stay there. The address is 7, Cambridge-gardens, Kilburn, N.W., and Burlington-place, Eastbourne.

EXETER HALL.—At the workers' meeting on Saturday night, in the small hall, Mr. George Holland gave an interesting and instructive address on "Practical Christianity." Incidents in connection with the work in George-yard were given as illustrating the subject. Mr. Holland kindly consented to give another address on Saturday, November 10.

THE LUTHER COMMEMORATION.—Arrangements have been made for the opening of a Luther Exhibition and Picture Gallery at Exeter Hall in connection with the approaching Commemoration. The loan of various pictures and articles of interest connected with, or bearing on the Reformer's work, has been promised, and from the way in which the matter has been taken up the Exhibition seems likely to be one of considerable importance. Those who are willing to contribute to its success by the loan of pictures or objects, or who have any suggestions to offer, should communicate at once with the secretaries of the Luther Commemoration Committee at Exeter Hall.—Rock.

BIRMINGHAM.—The work connected with the Evangelistic Mission has been carried on during the past six months with very encouraging results. Meetings have been held every evening in the Mission Room, conducted by Mr. J. Stead, Gospel addresses, Bible-readings, Temperance work, house-to-house visitation among the sick and others, and many open-air services. Tracts have been extensively circulated, and preachers have been engaged for special Mission services, which has necessarily led to some additional expense. A very considerable number of persons from amongst the poorer and roughest class have been brought to a saving knowledge of Christ. Contributions in money, tracts, or Bibles, will be thankfully received by Mr. A. A. Fardon, Treasurer, Glover-street, Birmingham.

Notes and Comments.

WE would direct our readers' particular attention to the address on "Family Religion," by Dr. Stanford, the first part of which appears on another page, and will be concluded in our next issue.

We record with much sorrow the dangerous illness of Mrs. Wm. Noble, who for years past has been a faithful and effective helper to her husband in his Gospel Temperance work. We earnestly commend our brother and his suffering wife to the prayerful sympathies of our readers.

Our brethren, Messrs. Moody and Sankey, were expected to arrive in Ireland on the 9th inst., to commence their evangelistic campaign in the British Isles. They are at Limerick from Oct. 10—15; Cork, 16—26; Waterford, 28—31. Our next and following issues will contain full reports of their meetings, and we hope our readers will do all they can to circulate them.

The Archbishop of Canterbury touched on a point of vital importance when preaching at Croydon a few days ago. He remarked:—

"The want of sympathy between the upper and lower classes made one tremble to think of the mine of ill-will which lay buried for the present among the suffering and toiling classes. It was difficult to see that the same seed would bear any different fruit from what it had yielded in former years and in other countries. It was the result of the hard line drawn between class and class, by which classes were kept asunder. The children of the poor had been better cared for of late; but it was difficult to bring about sympathy between the rich and the working population. The few great men who had laboured among the poor had reaped a rich harvest, but they might be counted on one's fingers. We could not set our house in order because as a nation we had shown so little sympathy except to those who could return it. We had looked upon independence as a personal and national characteristic. He prayed God to multiply those who would assist to throw down the dangerous class barriers that now existed."

It is of first importance to the interests of both the Church and the world that religious leaders should give heed to this aspect of affairs amongst us. It is difficult in these times to hold the balance evenly on many social questions, to take an all-round view of the inter-relations of various classes, but to do this as far as possible in the unselfish spirit of Him who "though He was rich, yet for our sakes became poor," is the highest wisdom, and the paramount duty, as things now are, of every true follower of Christ.

The result of the trial of Miss Booth in Switzerland is to be viewed with satisfaction as a defeat of what was intended to be a blow, not only at the Salvationist movement, but at religion of every kind. But to accept the result in the spirit of defiance and offensive exultation would be a great mistake, both as opposed to the meekness and gentleness Christ enjoins his servants to display in his service, and also as sure to re-act upon the Swiss people, and induce, on the part of the defeated, a deeper spirit of hostility. All may and must rejoice in the confirmation of the legal as well as moral right of any representative of the Master to carry on his work unmolested and unhindered throughout the cantons, but now is the time to show how in doing it nought but love is the motive which prompts to it, and the spirit which animates it.

Pastor Fliedner, in his last quarterly paper, speaks most hopefully of the state of things from a religious point of view in Spain. He says: "New life is coming into a dead people — dead because it wants a Christian conscience, a conscience which no one has ever awakened. Now, on every hand, there is movement, weak and feeble, but yet evident and living. It is a new Spring, which makes itself manifest; and we can fully and confidently sing, with Luther, 'The Winter is past, the Summer is hard by; the tender little flowers are peeping up. He who has begun the good work will perfect it. Amen.'"

We are glad to find our brother thus expressing himself in reference to the duty of Christians in Spain as to the political complications of the country. The recent outburst of the revolutionary spirit there, he believes, will be helpful to the cause of religious liberty, by showing the Government the necessity for hastening liberal measures of reform. But to quote his own words:—

"The Protestant Christians in Spain must take no part in politics, although it is undeniable that by far the greater number sympathise with the Republican party. One cannot blame them, for they enjoyed freedom under the Republic; and are, on the contrary, exposed to all kinds of annoyance and persecution under the Monarchy. Just for this reason it is a serious task for the directors of the Missions to keep the work of the Gospel separate from politics, and to take as our motto that good confession of our Lord before Pontius Pilate: 'My Kingdom is not of this world.' Still, we may hope for some advantage, at least, from this attempt at revolution."

The resolution which has been arrived at to arm our suburban police with revolvers is one which cannot be viewed without grave foreboding. It reveals a state of lawlessness and social danger such as may well awaken serious concern. Such a step has not been taken by the authorities without much hesitation we may be sure, and its results will be watched with no little anxiety by many. It is a painful comment on nineteenth century progress to find such measures needful or possible in the first capital of the world.

The formation of a Discharged Prisoners' Aid Association for the counties of Carmarthen, Cardigan, and Pembroke, with Lord Emlyn, M.P., at its head, suggests a note calling attention to the great value of such means as these, in reforming the character of many found among our criminal classes. For lack of such agencies many are left to float down the rapid stream of vice and crime, whom a helping hand would rescue, and restore to paths of virtue and usefulness in society. They are not all "gaol-birds" who find their way to prison, and the ban of social ostracism ought not too quickly to be placed on all such. At any rate, such associations have a good field to work in, and demand public support.

The Rev. Dr. Kay has earned for himself a very doubtful and unenviable notoriety by his extraordinary zeal in championing the cause of theatre-going. As the Scotch correspondent of the Nonconformist says:—"The good man had better have held his tongue. He has only stirred into violent activity a nest of hornets. The moderate playgoers and such-like persons are exulting; but they, unfortunately, are not, as a rule, either teetotallers or ardent supporters of Christian churches; and Mr. Irving and his company gave evidence of the sort of sympathy they are likely to afford to their clerical champions by taking the Sunday to rattle up to London in a special train."

The fact is, theatres and theologians have nothing in common, if each keep true to their vocation. "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." The temple of God has no link with the shrine of worldliness, and we need more than ever to assert the impossibility of fostering spiritual life and power in an atmosphere of carnal delight, and in connection with sensuous display. The pulpit only lowers its own influence when it goes out of the way to uphold this world's vain show.

The opening address of the present session at New College was delivered by Dr. Stoughton a few days since, the subject being, "The Theology of the Present Century." He spoke of modern teaching as having a threefold aspect and form—the Churchly, the Evangelical, and the Rationalistic, and gave an earnest as well as eloquent testimony to the transcendent value and Divine power of Evangelical truth as opposed to the perils of modern thought, specially instancing among the latter the diminished sense of sin which they produced. "Nothing," said the venerable Doctor, "stirs the masses like evangelical doctrine." Such a testimony from such a source is of peculiar value now when so many regard Evangelicalism as effete.

The Leicester Session of the Baptist Union seems to have been marked by great success, and to have possessed some features of novel interest if not of universal commendation. The presence and address, at the opening soirée, of the Rev. J. Page Hopps, as a well-known Unitarian leader, is certainly one of these. The co-operation and fraternal sympathy of evangelical leaders, such as the Revs. Canon Vaughan, Dr. Allon, A. McArthur, Esq., M.P., and others are, however, a fact in which all who desire to secure the unity of orthodox believers must see cause for rejoicing. Such interchanges of Christian feeling and action are conducive to the best interests of the Church of Christ, by proving to the world that religion is, after all, superior to the rival claims of sects and parties.

The address of the Rev. J. P. Chown, Chairman of the Union, dealt with the history of Nonconformity in Leicester, and from both a local and denominational point of view, was exceedingly interesting and instructive. The connection with the town of the celebrated Robert Hall, Dr. Carey, and other worthies of a similar cast, afforded room for many reminiscences of a pleasing and salutary kind, of which the speaker did not fail to take advantage. The advocacy of Temperance formed one of the strong points of the session, a crowded meeting, presided over by Mr. Caine, M.P., having prominent place on the programme.

The missionary meetings were of an enthusiastic and stirring character, as might be expected in a town so nobly linked with the early history of Foreign Missions in modern times. A forward movement has evidently been not only resolved on, but made, by our Baptist brethren in this work, and the statement given by Mr. A. H. Baynes, the indefatigable secretary of the society, proves that the denomination is waking up to sympathy with it. The debt from last year of £3000 has been wiped off; £2000 for the passage and outfit of fourteen new missionaries has been obtained, and £15,000 is to be raised for generally increasing operations in the various fields.

Mr. Howard Vincent's address at the Social Science Congress, on Friday last, contains many points worthy of attention. The following statistics read unpleasantly, and may well cause concern. The direct cost of crime amounted in England and Wales and Scotland to £6,000,000 sterling, employing 74,000 magistrates, police officials, and others. In 1881, 825,657 were apprehended or cited, or nearly one in 36 of the population, 94,868 being for crimes against the person, 122,761 for those against property, the remainder being chiefly moral rather than criminal.

These figures are bad enough, and prove the existence among us of an enormous mass of ignorance, vice, and lawlessness. It is, however, somewhat cheering to find so experienced an authority asserting that during the last ten years there has been an undoubted diminution of serious crime, and that owing to the efforts of the Howard Association, the Temperance movement, Home Missions, and increased educational advantages.

Mr. Vincent declared himself against the abolition of capital punishment, alleging that it acted as a considerable deterrent upon the commission of murder. His plea for greater leniency in the dealing with first convictions for crime is a strong one, and sustained by considerations of charity, economy, and policy, and is all the more powerful for his urging that second and third convictions should in all cases be treated with greater severity. The address, as a whole, makes us increasingly thankful to feel such a man as Mr. Vincent occupies so important a position as that of Director of Criminal Investigation.

It has been stated in some quarters that the Evangelical Alliance, one of whose objects is the safe-guarding of religious liberty all over the world, had made no move in regard to recent events in Switzerland. This appears to be inaccurate, for we learn that communications were passing between the British and Swiss Branches of the Alliance when Miss Booth was arrested. Immediately upon this event taking place, a letter was addressed to Earl Granville on the subject, and we are permitted to give the following extract from his lordship's reply, addressed to the Secretary of the Alliance, on the 24th ult. :—

"I am to state to you for the information of the Council of the Evangelical Alliance that the judgment of the Federal Council in this case is under the consideration of Lord Granville, who is in consultation with the law officers of the Crown as to whether it calls for any action on the part of Her Majesty's Government. I am to add that, in the meanwhile, Her Majesty's Minister at Berne has been instructed to do what he properly can on behalf of Miss Booth."

The Council of the British Alliance have determined to memorialise the Government of the Republic on the whole subject, and the Swiss branch are also arranging to present a petition. Of course this appeal of the Evangelical Alliance is made on the broad grounds of religious freedom.

The Church Congress at Reading has been occupied with an exhaustive and to a large extent eminently practical programme of subjects, enthusiastic audiences crowding the places of assembly from day to day. The Bishop of Oxford, as president, gave an inaugural address which contains many points of prominent interest just now, dealing with them in a frank and manly way, which must commend itself to all, however much some may differ from his conclusions. His remarks on social purity, Sunday amusements, and kindred topics not distinctively of an ecclesiastical or political character, are specially worthy of consideration. It was a point much overlooked that the Bishop called attention to, when he remarked that it was the habit to think of the victims of moral corruption as being found in prisons and workhouses, asylums and penitentiaries; but it was forgotten that there are more of them in stately dwellings, lingering on beds of sickness which their own vices have courted, or wasting selfish years in the false glitter of rayless homes.

The various sectional meetings and manifold discussions of topics affecting seriously the social and religious welfare of our land, afford ample scope for note and comment, but lack of space prevents our more than saying that thoughtful and earnest workers cannot fail to profit from perusing the reports of the Congress carefully, and with set purpose to obtain a broad view of what men of high position, rich culture, and undoubted sincerity in Church circles think and say of the signs and requirements of the times. To do so will at least acquaint them with some of the most powerful factors at work in the spheres to which they refer. No one can say the Congress lacked in earnestness or in determination to look matters fully in the face.

The special meetings for working men appear to have been very successful in answering the end they aimed at. We may cite the address of the Bishop of Bedford at one of them as having a ring about it of a right kind. A reporter says:—

"He described his work in the East-end of London, and said it was his ambition to be known by all the working men and women of that district as their Bishop, and that he should labour to that end. He spoke of the duty of the Church in bridging the gulf which separates class from class, and said that to accomplish that object, it ought to belong to no political party, and to be able to adapt herself to changing modes of thought; he told the working men that they must work out their own elevation, complimented them on what they had done in that direction—especially in the cause of Temperance and co-operation—and counselled them never to forget the great bond of union to be found in Christianity."

We learn with regret that Rev. J. Mountain, who, with Mrs. Mountain, has been for some time evangelising in South Africa, has been laid aside from active service through exhaustion caused by overwork. A letter from him, dated Port Elizabeth, Sept. 1, states that he had partially recovered, and had been engaged in some light Mission service, but he was still unfit for close application to work. In a postscript Mr. Mountain says:—

"The Christian arrives very regularly, and is most cheering and stimulating. I have met with several who read it regularly and value it highly. Religious life, however, is too low and too denominational to value as it deserves so catholic and spiritual a journal."

The evils of speculation are being sadly illustrated by the recent absconding of two "City" men engaged in professional pursuits. The Daily Telegraph, in a leader of its issue for the 5th inst., calls attention to the gambling in Stock Exchange transactions which is so much in vogue, and questions whether the man who engages in it is not in a more perilous path than those even who frequent the saloons of Monte Carlo and similar gambling scenes. It is a subject journalists do well to call attention to. Among the sinful and ruinous propensities of the age, certainly that of making haste to be rich is not the least, nor are its snares the most easy to escape.

The Annual Dublin Christian Convention will be held at the Metropolitan Christian Union Buildings, Lower Abbey-street, Dublin, on October 29, 30, 31, and November 1.

Pastor Chiniquy writes to us from his American home that he is now publishing a work giving the result of his personal experiences of the teachings and practices of the Romish faith; the book has been in preparation for the last ten years. He says with respect to it:—

"For the first time the inside life of Popery is given with the exactness of photography. From the supreme art with which the mind of the young and timid child is fettered, enslaved, and paralysed, to the degradation of the Priest, under the iron heel of the Bishop, everything is revealed to the world as it has never been. The superstitions, the ridiculous and humiliating practices, the secret and mental agonies of the priests, monks, and nuns; their blind abnegation and awful self-denial, are exposed as they never were. The sophisms and errors of Romanism are discussed and refuted, I dare say, with a clearness, simplicity, and evidence, which my twenty-five years of priesthood alone could teach me."

The Pastor quotes in his letter from some highly appreciative notices of the work he has received from those who had examined the MS. As the work will be an octavo one of more than 700 pages, he is unable himself to meet the expenses of publication, and invites subscribers. Those who remit to him a guinea will receive a copy in return. Any friend obtaining eight guinea subscribers will receive a copy gratis. His address is St. Anne's, Kankakee Co., Ills., U.S.A.

A correspondent writes referring to the danger to spiritual life and influence arising out of church members' connection with athletic sports, competitions, and associations. As he says, bicycling, running, &c., are harmless enough in themselves, but when made the means of bringing Christian young men into alliance with betting, and into questionable companionships, as they often are, they may become extremely harmful. This is doubtless true, there is a standing aloof from worldly association, and a separation for Christ's sake from evil, which is essential to Christian fidelity, and to fellowship of soul with God.

Even in things which are lawful per se, there is a law of expediency which ought to be consulted, and must be if we would be true witnesses for our Lord. "Come out from among them, be ye separate; touch not the unclean thing," is the Lord's voice to his disciples in reference to their contact with the world, and they are wise and happy who obey it. The Apostle's word to Timothy may be cited here: "Bodily exercise (Greek, gymnasia) profiteth little; but godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." "Exercise thyself rather unto godliness"—spiritual athletes are needed in these days on all sides.

WEST BROMWICH.—Mr. G. Russell, of Malden, Hall, Kentish Town, has conducted a Gospel Mission in a much neglected part of Swan village and West Bromwich during the last five months. Many of the worst characters known have become changed in heart and life, and are now giving testimony that they are new creatures in Christ Jesus. A long-closed chapel has been re-opened, and each week is increasingly filled; it seats from six to seven hundred. Tracts or books for distribution will be thankfully received by Mr. Russell, 59, Dudley-road, West Bromwich.

THE CLIFTON CONFERENCE.

FOR the twenty-first time, Christian brethren have met at Clifton for conference and prayer, and the meetings of last week in the Victoria Rooms, not only in reference to the number of visitors attending, but to the spirituality and fervour of the addresses, will favourably compare with the best Conferences of past years.

TUESDAY.

In opening the meetings, Rev. James Ormiston read part of Hebrews i., after which Rev. W. L. Rolleston offered prayer.

Rev. Talbot Greaves introduced the first topic of Conference—"The Sonship of Christ, as Son of God and Son of Man, viewed in relation to the purposes of his Father." He said, there are many subjects, especially in the depths of the spiritual world, which can only be really understood by experience, and the enjoyment must precede the illumination, and even then they cannot be fully expressed. It would be utter folly to reject a mystery because it could not be explained. The Incarnation, the Atonement, and the restoration of man to God all depend upon the Trinity in Unity, and the Deist who denies the Sonship of the Lord Jesus Christ completely annihilates the Christian scheme. The speaker distinguished between the Sonship by eternal generation and the Sonship by incarnation, remarking that many admitted the one who rejected the other. The address was closed with an admonition of great practical value: "Let us have nothing to do with any ecclesiastical system, with any scheme of teaching, with any school of philosophy which does not exalt and glorify the Lord Jesus."

Of the addresses which followed it must almost suffice to say that they were characterised by the same spirit as that in which Mr. Greaves had opened the subject. After prayer had been offered by Rev. W. N. Cornwall, Mr. West and Rev. Canon Ffolliott, of Portrush, spoke.

In the evening, Rev. H. E. Brooke (Dovercourt) took up the character of Christ as Son of Man, remarking that it was the favourite title by which the Lord Jesus more frequently spoke of Himself. The reason of this was looked at; it was "because the children were partakers of flesh and blood." The Greek adverb beautifully brought out the sense of the passage; literally, it was "coming alongside of," and the Lord Jesus partook of flesh and blood, coming alongside of humanity to deliver out of that humanity. He was like the lifeboat "coming alongside" the wreck. The atmosphere of humanitarianism, which makes so much of human nature, makes the mistake of calling the Incarnation mere sanctified humanity, and every Christian was bound to be on his guard against and to expose this danger. Mr. Brooke's address was one of rare beauty and excellence. The engagements of the day were closed by addresses from Mr. B. Thomas and Rev. C. J. Bird.

WEDNESDAY.

The topic of the second day's Conference was, "The Sonship of the Saints by adoption and by new birth, viewed in relation to the purposes of their Father." Rev. J. Ormiston read 1 John ii. from ver. 28, and proceeded to speak of the sonship of the saints under several aspects. It is a sonship of Predestination, it is a sonship of Promise, and it is a sonship by Redemption. In the course of his remarks he said that he should prefer calling the parable usually known as that of "The Prodigal Son," as the parable of "The Forgiving Father."

The Earl of Cavan, who followed, based his remarks on Ephesians i. 3—6. Those who at one time were far off, are made nigh by the blood of the Lamb. It behoved all to walk worthy of the high calling wherewith they are called, and to be a distinct and separate people. All should ask: Have I fully grasped this wonderful relationship with the family of God? It was a cause of great joy to many believers that the subject of the Second Coming of the Lord was brought so prominently forward just now.

In the requests for prayer to-day special reference was made to the absence, through illness, of "dear old Jonathan," as Mr. Barne, who led the devotions of the assembly, called the Rev. Dr. Doudney.

Rev. H. Barne afterwards delivered an address, in which, after speaking of the true enjoyment to be found in Christ, he dwelt very seriously upon Christians keeping their garments unspotted. If it were possible for a blush to visit the cheek in an eternal world, many would blush in the remembrance of the time and money spent on the pomps and vanities of the world.

Rev. W. Saunders spoke upon four words in connection with Galatians iv. 1—7. The words, he said, brought before us the Person, the Payment or purchase, the Power of the Holy Ghost, and then the Position—no longer a slave, but a son, and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ.

In the evening there was a very large gathering. Mr. Ormiston said it had been suggested that their Conference should occupy three days, and a vote was taken upon the question, when the meeting evidently showed that this was desired. Addresses were given by Mr. James Wright, Rev. W. L. Rolleston, Rev. H. E. Noyes, Rev. James Battersby, Rev. W. B. Doherty, and Mr. Inskip.

In the afternoon meetings addresses were given by Mr. C. Cook on English and Continental Prisons; Mr. Arrowsmith, on the work of the Children's Special Service Mission; Mr. Fegan, on the Boys' Home at Southwark; Dr. Barnardo, on his work among waifs and strays; the Church of England Zenana work in India, and Spanish, Portuguese, and Mexican Aid Society work.

YOUNG WOMEN IN LIVERPOOL.

OPENING OF NEW CHRISTIAN INSTITUTE.

PERHAPS one of the most remarkable meetings ever held in connection with work amongst young women, was one over which Earl Cairns presided last week in Liverpool, in Hengler's Circus. The spacious building (where Mr. Moody's meetings were held in the spring) was crowded from end to end, with an audience of over 5000.

The enterprising spirit of our northern friends has led them to conceive and carry out the first complete building (combining institute and boarding-house) ever erected. We have many houses in our country, but all these are adaptations merely, and, therefore, are more or less incomplete. This was the case, it seems, in Liverpool, until recently. The boarding arrangements were very cramped, and quite unsuitable for the refined class of young ladies who availed themselves of the accommodation at Mildmay House; whilst the growth of Mrs. Stephen Menzies' Bible-classes had compelled their removal from the house to a small public hall.

This led to the erection of the beautiful building now completed, and which was formally opened on the 2nd inst. The building has eighty rooms, with one large central lecture-hall, holding 700, one special feature being that each young lady has her own separate room.

Lord Shaftesbury, as President of the Young Women's Christian Association (of which the Liverpool Association is a branch), was to have been present, but was prevented by indisposition.

Prior to the magnificent gathering in the circus Lord Cairns visited Gordon Hall and Mildmay House, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Stephen J. Menzies, whose guest he was during his stay in the city; and upwards of 500 ladies and gentlemen were present by invitation to meet his lordship. The building, it may be stated, is now finished and paid for, but the treasurer has still to ask for £3100 for the site, and also for the furnishing, the former costing £2400, and the latter £700.

In his opening remarks Lord Cairns said: "I am here to endeavour to fill Lord Shaftesbury's place, and at the same time to testify the interest and the pleasure which I myself take in this great work. Look at the city of Liverpool, the second city in our great empire, with its enormous and still swelling population of upwards of half a million; look at the number of young women, the thousands and tens of thousands that every year are drawn in to supply the vast shops, the warehouses, the places of business, and the work-rooms. The young woman leaves her home in the country, where she has been carefully nurtured. She leaves her parents, her sisters and brothers; she leaves all the loving and tender restraints and influences of home and domestic life, and she comes into a great city. She comes possibly obliged to find a situation for herself; she comes, perhaps, without a friend, and, possibly, without even an acquaintance, without anyone to give her sympathy, to offer her advice or guidance, to warn her against what is evil, or to lead her to what is good; and remember that what I have described as the case of one, is the the case of thousands and thousands of young women. What these young women want is, not charity, not to be patronised, not to be schooled or lectured, but what they do want is sympathy. They want tender and gentle advice and guidance, the warm, good, loving conduct of women's hearts; they want to have thrown around them something that will most nearly resemble the shelter and the influence of that home they have left.

"Well, I must say I have never seen any place in which my conception of a Young Women's Christian Institute has been so completely realised, and upon such a scale, as in this city of Liverpool. The idea of reaching, in some way or other, every young woman employed in Liverpool, by sub-dividing all the city into seventy divisions, and the idea, by means of upwards of 10,000 monthly packets, of communicating with every young woman in those divisions of Liverpool; the extent to which in the central and branch institutions the accommodation for board and lodging has been provided; the amount of the accommodation in that splendid Central Hall and the adjacent rooms which we have just been inspecting; Mrs. Menzies' Bible-class, with 1700 on the rolls, and with an actual attendance of over 400; the £600 and upwards provided by the young women themselves to pay for the building of the Central Hall—all these are grand and noble features in the magnificent work which has been undertaken in this city. The Institute is not merely Christian in name, but in its endeavours to bring all young women whom it can reach to the knowledge of Christ as their Saviour, and to bring them to lead the life of those who desire to keep his word and to walk in his footsteps.

Mrs. Stephen Menzies will be happy to acknowledge any donations that may be sent to the Liverpool New Institute.

AFRICAN SETTLEMENT SOCIETY.—Dear Sir,—Kindly let your readers know that I can receive applications from four Christian men, with their families (provided they have a small capital), for our settlement in the colony of Natal, where the summer is not so hot as that of New South Wales. The Society gives a certain amount of land free.

PASS IT ON.—A correspondent in the United States writes to us:—"Through the kindness of a friend, I am allowed to see The Christian very often. I earnestly pray that many others, to whom money can furnish such a pleasure, may be able to look about for some less favoured with money, but possessing the same love of God in their hearts, so as to cheer them by the good news it contains."

A SOUTH AFRICAN JUBILEE.

he Journal des Missions Evangéliques, Paris, . Dieterlen sends a full and graphic report manner in which the missionaries and the celebrated the Jubilee of the French Mis- the Basutos in South Africa. He says:— e assembly was composed of some Basuto ists, delegates from the churches, missionary es, a few chiefs, and all those who were o come, whether invited or not. The r number of the chiefs were not able to our invitation, in consequence of the civil tween the sons of Molapo. In all about ersons, of whom eighty were Europeans, bled.

The arrival of the mission- changed all that. Since they came the s have prospered, and are become one of st powerful tribes of Southern Africa.

nen came LUCA, the man who drove the naries' waggon when they first set foot in nto. He spoke of the famous Griquois , who advised Moshesh to try and get missionaries. 'A gun,' said he, 'will not t you against the attacks of the Korannas, Gospel will be your best shield.' And sh, who wished to be sheltered from the ous incursions of the enemy, sent a large er of oxen to buy some missionaries. A GOOD WORK IN SOUTH LONDON.

SINCE you published in THE CHRISTIAN for August 16 the account headed "A Dark Spot in South London," the Lord has greatly blessed the efforts put forth at the Mission Hall in Penarth-street, close to the Old Kent-road Station of the South London Railway. Said one woman to the missionary (a considerable portion of whose time is daily spent in visiting from house to house in the neighbourhood): "I am glad you are going to visit us. I have often said that we might die here before anyone came to see us. It's nice to feel that someone cares for you, isn't it? I shall always be glad to see you."

The number of workers has already increased fourfold. The seats now available will accommodate from 600 to 700 persons. The meetings are appreciated and well attended. Drunkards are being reclaimed, and backsliders are returning to their God. One evening several young men asked that a Bible-class might be started. This is now held every Monday evening. Soon after, an application was made by the young women for a weekly Bible-class, and a devoted Christian lady has volunteered her services every Tuesday evening for this purpose. Numerous requests have been made by the women for a Mothers' Meeting, and we are waiting upon God for the right workers and the necessary materials to begin with. Numerous incidents might be quoted from the note-book of the Missionary showing how greatly the work has already been blessed.

A PLEDGE CARD'S MISSION.

One poor woman, having with her three children, each of whom seemed clad only with a single garment, signed the pledge a few weeks since. She said, "I will sign, if it is only for my children. Whenever I have a penny, I feel I must have drink, and the money which should have bought food for my little ones has gone to the public-house. Do pray for me!" Eleven days after signing the pledge the woman called, and stated that in the previous week they had been summoned by the School Board officer for not sending their children to school. "You see, sir, they had no clothes to go in," she said. "The policeman called yesterday to take my husband into custody; but I showed him my pledge-card, sir, and he saw I was sober, and that I meant it, too, so he said: 'Well, I won't take your husband till Saturday, and then if the fine is paid that will be the end of it.' The fine was paid, and the man was not imprisoned. It is a sad fact that out of £2 regularly earned weekly, at least £1 12s. was spent at the public-house.

Will your readers pray for us in this dark corner, that many may be brought into the light. Friends visiting the hall will receive a hearty welcome. The Superintendent of the Mission is Mr. S. Clayton, 85, Montpelier-road, Peckham; the Treasurer is Captain Annesley, R.N., 7, Woodlands-terrace, Dunstan-road, Lordship-lane, S.E. F. T. WATT,

"OUTCAST LONDON."—In connection with the special effort which the London Congregational Union is making to supply "halls" in various parts of London, inquiries have been instituted as to life in some of the lowest and most degraded districts. Much of the information secured is of a most startling character, and will shortly be published under the title of "The Bitter Cry of Outcast London." The facts, which have been collected under the superintendence of the Rev. Andrew Mearns, Secretary of the Union, will be read with painful interest. Out of 2290 persons, living in consecutive houses at Bow-common, only 88 adults and 47 children attend any place of worship, while in one street, near Leicester-square, containing 246 families, only 12 are said to be represented in church or chapel. The condition of some of their homes is said to be "pestilential." To get into them you have to visit courts which the sun never penetrates, which are never visited by a breath of fresh air, and which never know the virtues of a drop of cleansing water. It is hoped that the publication of these facts will awaken deeper interest among the Christian public for the outcast poor of London, and that the outcome of this effort may be of a most practical character.

THE TEMPERANCE CRUSADE.

CORK.—A Temperance Demonstration was held at Cork on September 28, at which the advocates of Temperance assembled in large numbers, and Mr. T. E. Murphy gave an address on the general success of the movement in Ireland.

CREDITION.—A Gospel Temperance Mission has been conducted in this town by Dr. J. W. Kirton with great success. Every meeting from the first, on Sunday, September 23, to the last on Friday, the 28th, has been crowded. The Vicar (Prebendary Smith), Rev. H. Venn (of Tiverton), and others took part, and a large number of pledges have been taken and blue ribbons distributed.

HUSBANDS AND WIVES.—A singular incident in connection with licensing legislation occurred at the Flaxton Brewster Sessions. A petition in favour of granting a full licence to a certain public-house proposed to be erected was presented, signed by 180 of the male population of the district. A counter petition, however, signed by the wives of those who desired the new public-house, was presented condemning the proposal. The petition of the wives was backed up by the superintendent of police, and the magistrates refused to grant the licence.

BLUE RIBBON GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MISSION.—An important Conference upon winter work was held at the headquarters of the movement, Hoxton Hall, N., on Saturday last, presided over by Mr. W. J. Palmer, J.P., of Reading. A paper was read by Mr. Duncan Milligan, of Wandsworth, and discussed by several well-known workers in London and the suburbs. The Chairman indicated his intention of advising the Committee to promote Missions in the metropolitan town-halls during the ensuing months; a work which will doubtless meet with great results. Mr. William Noble presided at the meeting in the hall, which was attended by the usual Saturday night audience of 1200 persons, and addressed by suburban visitors to the Conference.

A WARNING FROM SWEDEN.—The degradation of conscience which inevitably follows any tampering with the Divine and authoritative basis of morality finds a terrible illustration in what is transpiring just now in Sweden. Though the Swedes are a quiet people, a riot broke out in Stockholm when the system of licensed immorality was first introduced; but now the moral tone of the country has been lowered to such an extent that certain doctors are openly advocating a scheme to make prostitution as honourable as marriage! They would raise the keeping of infamous houses to a business of the highest respectability, allowing none but the most honourable and responsible citizens to manage them. This is the logical outcome which was intruded upon the British statute-book in the dark, and which remains at this moment unrepealed.—Christian Leader.

DO THE CHILDREN DRINK?—At the Greenock Conference of the Church of Scotland abstainers, Rev. J. Paton, B.A., of St. Paul's, Glasgow, told how, the other night, one of the members of his own congregation objected to his introduction into it of a Band of Hope. "Do you mean to tell me," asked the gentleman, "that any of the boys and girls of this congregation drink?" Mr. Paton was about to answer, when a man who employed labour in the east-end of Glasgow, where a great many girls and young ladies were working, took the speech in hand. He said: "I have about 500 girls for whom I am responsible. Most of these girls are under eighteen years of age. I have frequently, after a pay night, to dismiss from my service girls of fifteen and sixteen for habitual drunkenness." Mr. Paton added that the Assembly report quoted a police document given in evidence before the Lords' Commissioners, in which it was declared as the conviction of the police, magistrates, and officials, that drunkenness in the majority of cases began from the age of fifteen to eighteen years.—Christian Leader.

A COMPLIMENT TO PASTOR BOST.—In consequence of a decree of the President of the French Republic, the asylums of Laforce are no longer to be called "Asiles de Laforce," but "Asiles John Bost." This tribute to the memory of the late beloved founder of the establishments is most appropriate, and is creditable at once to the committee and to the French Government. The name and the memory of the great Christian philanthropist will thus be permanently connected with the homes which he opened for the most wretched of the wretched.—Christian Leader.

CHRISTIAN WOMEN IN COUNCIL.

(Concluded from our last.)

[BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

THE large room allotted to the Mission section was well filled on Wednesday afternoon to hear an address by Mrs. M. Baxter, on the subject of "Healing by Faith." Miss Beilby had also been announced to take up the subject of Medical Missions, but in her absence her paper was read by another lady. In this she argued for the use of both faith and means in healing the sick. She believed in a great future for Medical Missions; were more faith exercised both the means used and the preaching would be more blessed.

Mrs. Baxter commenced by saying she did not approve of the term "faith-healing;" she preferred to call it the Lord's healing. After mentioning her own experience of the Lord's healing her of a disease of twenty-five years' standing, she traced the subject through the Old Testament Scriptures, noting that in every instance where the Lord was spoken of as the Healer, it was always with the condition of "hearkening unto the voice of the Lord." This condition should be more regarded now. We should realise that we are only called to follow as the Lord leads. If the Lord has used means in healing us, and not revealed anything further, then we are right in using means. Medical Missions must have our deepest sympathy and prayers; it is a step in the right direction to try to seek the souls of the heathen through their bodies, for the heathen have experience of their bodies, but no experience of their souls. When Jesus was on earth He never failed to heal everyone who came to Him. Sickness is sometimes sent as the voice of God, but we fail to hear it. Some people talk too much, even to God, and have no time to listen. It was by no means the case that every one who went to "Bethshan" (in Holloway) was healed, but a great many walked away leaving their crutches behind. Many more in all parts of the world, who heard and read of the work, did grasp the fact that the Lord is still the Healer, without going to Bethshan, and were made whole in response to the prayer of faith.

It was noticeable that when the Lord healed the body He also sent a great blessing into the soul. A remarkable case that had just occurred of a young lady who had been a sufferer from hip disease for seven years would illustrate this. She had sent a letter to "Bethshan," asking them to pray for her that she might be healed. As soon as the letter was gone to the post she asked herself, "Why should I ask these people to pray for me?" and strongly realised that the Lord was able to heal her in answer to her own prayer. The next morning, in getting out of bed, she found she could put her foot to the ground and walk. She was perfectly whole. This was done hours before the letter was opened. Another letter speedily followed, telling of the cure, and of the new-found power to praise the Lord and testify to his gracious care.

Noticing how closely the command to heal the sick was identified with the commission to preach the Gospel, in Christ's own words to his disciples, Mrs. Baxter said she did not believe that the power of God through his believing children was even in these days limited to healing the sick; and mentioned from her own experience an incident which fairly came under the head of the gift of tongues; and another in which the promise was claimed and honoured, "If ye drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt you." For herself she claimed no gifts, but could praise the Lord for using her to the healing of souls as well as bodies.

An interesting discussion followed in which many questions were asked and answered; if some of the objectors were not convinced it was evident that many misconceptions were removed. Miss Mason remarked that many people were invalids from disregarding God's laws of health, which were the same now as when the world was first created.

In another room Mrs. Lance read a paper on "The Moral Influence of Woman."

The subject of "Foreign Missions" was taken up in the evening meeting of the same day. Miss Mason presided and opened the proceedings by a few words of exhortation in her usual trenchant manner. Mrs. Clerk, a medical missionary from India, gave a graphic sketch of the work she had been permitted to accomplish in that country since she first went out in 1858. About four years afterwards the need of the people caused her to form the resolve to establish a Medical Mission. She encountered no encouragement, but much opposition. She returned to England to obtain the necessary training herself, to establish a hospital for women and school of midwifery, the first of the kind in India. Many native women were thus instructed. The work was so much appreciated that the Government took it up, and, quite an exception to the usual rule, allowed the religious teaching to be continued in connection with it. This released Mrs. Clerk for further studies, and she afterwards started a Medical Mission in Cashmere, which is now under the care of the Church Missionary Society, and is carried on by men doctors. She has subsequently itinerated through the Punjaub, with tent and pony, where she found kindness and a knowledge of medicine a good pioneer of Gospel truth. There had been a great alteration of caste prejudices in India during the last twelve years. The Calcutta University is now thrown open to women. She believed there was no more promising field for workers than Medical Missions in India.

Miss Poulter, of Wimbledon, followed with an account of the remarkable development of the Syrian Missions started by Mrs. Bowen Thompson in 1860, where the schools, which number thirty in all, are much appreciated, and the lessons carried home by the little ones open the door for the twenty-four Bible women who visit from house to house. There are special schools for the blind in Tyre, Beyrout, and Damascus. This work is carried on among all creeds alike, Jews, Mohammedans, and Greeks, and in all classes a spirit of inquiry is rife.

Mrs. Hudson Taylor said there were only 400 Christian missionaries to the many millions of Chinese; in stirring words she pictured the needs of this vast country, where thousands die every day without any opportunity of hearing the Gospel. She pleaded with those who could go to do so, and those who could not, to join the Women's Prayer Union, and plead with God for the needs of poor China.

Madame Rodriguez, from Figueras, gave an interesting account of the Spanish Mission, in which she is engaged.

Mrs. Baxter gave a short address on the Pentecostal spirit needed in prayer, as well as a higher education both in prayer and faith; less of vain repetition, and more real, definite, believing prayer, would bring down large blessing from God. We were commanded to pray the Lord of the harvest to thrust forth labourers; she believed that prayer could bring forward the 1500 missionaries asked for for China, and before the close of this year, too. Miss Mason and Miss Sisson testified from incidents in their own experience to the wonderful results of believing prayer.

The first place on Thursday morning was given to a valuable paper by Miss Tod, of Belfast, on "The Duty of Christian Women in regard to the Purity of Society." Remarking on the increasing interest taken in this subject in recent times, Miss Tod entreated Christian women prayerfully to consider each one her own duty in the matter. If ever the finger of Providence wrote plainly by the course of events it is shown at the present position of this question. Their first duty was in regard to their own families, but purity in the family would be most successfully upheld by an attitude of open hostility to vice without, in that constantly growing class outside of, and unaffected by, family influence. To work towards an improvement in the surroundings of the poor classes of society, to help to make the streets pure and safe, would come within the scope of woman's work; for an epidemic of vice would spread as readily as an epidemic of smallpox from the back streets to the front. Women's share of municipal work would be transfigured and glorified by fighting this evil of impurity which destroys the souls of the poor first and the rich after. The removal of incentives to vice from the pathway of the poor would enable Christian workers to reach them with less difficulty. As long as the hideous doctrine of the necessity of vice for men remains the Church will make but little progress against the world. Obedience to God's laws of justice and purity must be the absolute rule of life, both sexes being equal in the sight of the law of God. Christian women have a duty to perform to men themselves in this matter. Men imbibe evil teaching from heathen literature in schools and colleges.

Three ladies followed with papers on the Temperance question. Miss Moorhouse demonstrated in a comprehensive paper the fallacy of alcohol being a food. She strongly condemned the habit of nursing mothers taking porter, averring that the first seeds of drunkenness are often thus implanted in the constitution of the babe, while milk is an infinitely more nourishing drink.

Mrs. Lucas Shadwell, reviewing her twenty years' experience of total abstinence, said that adopted at first to increase her influence in spreading Temperance principles among the poor, an act of self-denial in intention, she found in reality a physical benefit. Recalling memories of old days, and of workers who have passed from toil to reward, she could not but believe that the recent spread of Gospel Temperance principles and the success of the Blue Ribbon Army was an answer to the dying prayer of the late W. Tweedie, who spent his last hours imploring a blessing on the work he had so much at heart.

Miss Emily Weston, of Bath, suggested that in rejoicing over the success of the Temperance cause, we must not forget that strong drink is still closely interwoven with the social life of the nation and with the habits of the people. We must not separate social life from religious life; but take into consideration means for abolishing the temptations to evil which abound on every hand. Grocers' licences are working untold evil among women everywhere. Christian women should discourage grocers who sell spirits. They could also help the cause by providing non-intoxicating drinks for cricket matches and juvenile parties, as well as for hay and harvest workers. The tap-roots of intemperance must be dealt with, and not the effect. The reform of the drunkard was a last resource, like religion on a death-bed. Missions and great meetings would lose half their results if not followed up by smaller regular meetings and individual work.

A vote of thanks to the Clifton Committee for their excellent arrangements for the meeting and generous hospitality to friends from a distance, was heartily accorded by the Conference at this sitting.

Miss L. M. Moor took the chair at the Missionary section on Thursday afternoon, when Young Women's Christian Associations and similar agencies among young women had the consideration of the meeting. Gospel Temperance was discussed by the Temperance Section, and the promotion of spiritual interest in childhood and youth in that set apart for Educational subjects. In the Moral Question Section Miss Tod gave an account of the past history and present position of the movement against the State Regulation of Vice, which was suitably followed by an interesting account from Mrs. W. H. Budgett of the recent Congress on Public Morality at the Hague.

Miss Mason commenced the proceedings on Thursday evening by reading Psalm cxxi., from which she drew some suggestive thoughts for Christian workers. The Lord our Keeper. Christ living out his life in us; righteousness being right with God and right with man; as powerless to maintain it as to obtain it; real change coming into living union with ng Saviour—this is the Gospel to take to the casts in our field of labour. The best Chris- n Evidence Society should be the lives of God's ldren.

Miss Lloyd gave particulars of various nches of work which have sprung out of the ristian Women's Union.

Mrs. Hudson Taylor followed with some ighty exhortations as to our work and our nmission. Christ said: "As my Father sent , even so send I you."

Mrs. Meredith concluded the meeting with yer, and after singing, "May the grace of rist our Saviour," this last meeting was ought to a close.

CHICAGO CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

WE are glad to be able to give our readers a condensed report of a most interesting nvention held in the Farwell Hall, Chicago, September 18, 19, and 20, under the presi- ncy of Mr. D. L. Moody. Mr. Sankey and Mr. l Mrs. McGranahan led the singing. A good ny of America's most devoted servants of rist were enabled to speak burning words of ortation and instruction. On both sides of Atlantic "Christian Conventions" seem to e become a necessary part of Church work; right well have they been, under wise guid- e, a source of real profit to the servants of Lord and the binding together into practical owship of those who, until some Conference se, were not one in the outward manifesta- n of the life within.

The Farwell Hall at Chicago was well filled ly on the first day, September 18, and the eting was opened by singing,

"Crown Him, crown Him!"

Dr. Goodwin led the discussion on the first ic, viz., "How can we best secure a prepara- n for Christ's work?" The first thing was get near to God, where we can see ourselves ll our weakness and sinfulness: and next, to emptied of self, in order to be vessels

MEET FOR THE MASTER'S USE.

There must be searching of heart and search- of the Scriptures, and the teaching of the ly Spirit.

Mr. Moody said he heard of a man the other who had a pump with only two failings. It uld run dry in the summer, and it would eze up in the winter. Too many Christians like that. What we want is continual fel- wship with God. Be hungry and thirsty. l a meeting in the churches of the hungry thirsty, no matter how few they be, and get d's blessing.

The next question was, "The hindrances, and w to remove them."

Dr. Burrows and Dr. Goodsell said that ionalism, universalism, intemperance, and sins of God's people, often stand in the way some men's salvation.

Mr. Moody said another hindrance is talking ut the hindrances. Churches take up too ch time looking on the dark side. God sn't use discouraged men. There are too ny of God's children under the juniper tree. t us be of good cheer.

The "lay element" was the next subject of cussion. It was urged that every gift in the urch should be utilised and everyone set to rk. Some could labour in the Sunday-school, ers among young people, visitation, mothers' etings, while some might be sent to take care the children that the mothers could come and r the Gospel.

"How faith spreads" was said to be accom- hed "by the contagion of regenerated istian lives, that is, by personal contact."

The question-drawer, as usual, brought forth e very practical answers, of which the fol- ing are specimens:—

Question.—Do you find preaching the law o ce more useful in bringing souls to Christ?

Mr. Moody.—Preach both. A man must know he is sick before you try to cure him.

Question.—What would you do with a converted man that shouts in the meeting?

Mr. Moody.—Let him shout, unless it gets to be noise rather than worship.

Question.—Ought an evangelist to belong to some church?

Mr. Moody.—I do. I had hard work in getting in, for they thought at first I wasn't a Christian. But I love the church.

Question.—How can we reach the non-church goers?

Mr. Moody.—Send after them, and throw the house open all the week through, and set your judges and lawyers to help your pastors preach.

On the second day the audience was even larger than the first. The morning subject of was introduced by Dr. Henson, who laid great emphasis on the necessity of preaching the Gospel—the old Gospel which is ever new—and using all the common sense possible in making the place comfortable, and inviting strangers.

The "Christian Home" is a subject of vital importance, and was dwelt upon by several brethren, each of them laying stress upon the necessity of careful home-training by both father and mother. The topics of "The Prayer-meeting" and "Organisation" followed, the first being pointed out as the means of getting the people on fire, and the second setting every one to work.

MORE QUESTIONS.

Question.—Is an association for women as important as for men.

Mr. Moody.—There is work for such an organisation to do in taking care of young girls. They say there are 30,000 fallen women in Chicago.

Dr. Lorimer.—The women of Chicago ought to get together and rear a memorial building dedicated to the rescue and preservation of tempted females.

Question.—Would you have one or two speakers in evangelistic meetings?

Answer.—One. I've seen so many men make an impression and then some one come along and wipe it out.

Question.—Is there danger of setting young men to work too soon?

Answer.—Yes, but more danger in not getting them to work at all. It takes young men to win young men.

Question.—Can any one preach?

Answer.—Yes, you needn't argue, but you can hold up Jesus Christ. Use tact.

The third day was commenced by Dr. H. Johnson introducing the subject of

"BIBLE STUDY."

He said: In spite of the fact that the Bible is the talk of all the streets and all the shops, there is to-day lamentable lack of acquaintance with its truths, The cause of the weak namby-pamby religion of the present day is the want of Bible study. We should make ourselves living epistles, walking gospels, taking the truth everywhere. This will increase the study of the Word of God. There needs to be care in making the Bible interesting in the home, and in the pulpit; make people believe not only that it is the best of books, but that it is God's book.

Mr. B. F. Jacobs said: Put Bibles in the church pews, and in the prayer-meeting room. Put more of them in the Sunday-school. Use the Bible in family worship, rather than "gems" or "exercises." Go into neglected homes and read the Bible.

The question of reaching Foreigners was next discussed, followed by which was introduced by Rev. E. C. Ray, who said love is the first force. Next to the affections we must appeal to the imagination. Memory comes next, then child logic: remember the children are great logicians, apply the Gospel to them, impress them with the logic of a life.

Believing, as Mr. Moody does, in the sad neglect generally among the churches with regard to the children, he plied questions which had a good effect. Here are two.

Mr. Moody.—Now I want some cross-firing. I make the charge that the ministers don't want children in the congregation. Six or seven ministers were soon on their feet to deny the charge in vigorous one-minute speeches.

Mr. Moody.—Well, I'll take that back. Now I make another charge. The ministers don't give the children anything when they do get to church. This also called forth clerical response, which was what Mr. Moody wanted.

The "Song Service" was next considered, at which Mr. Sankey and Mr. McGranahan gave an account of their singing experience, and emphasised the necessity of having Christian choirs, the latter remarking it might be well sometimes for the minister to announce the paid choir: not let us continue, but let us suspend divine worship while the choir show off their voices. There should be sanctified spirit in the song. The words should be made plain. We ought to have the new song in the heart. We need to bring Christ into the fore-front.

Thus passed off one of the most profitable conventions ever held, and at which between two and three thousand were in attendance at every session. Many pastors from the North-West were present to receive help from the meetings, and the Chicago pastors were well represented.

FOREIGN NOTES.

The American Presbyterians intend to celebrate, in 1884, the second centenary of their ecclesiastical organisation in the New World, in remembrance of the foundation of their first Church in 1684.

Paris Y.M.C.A.—M. G. Van der Beken has just become the Secretary-agent of the Paris Y.M.C.A. He will be happy to welcome any isolated young men in that city, and may be seen at the Union premises, 160, Rue Monmartre every day except Sunday and Thursday, between the hours of two and five.

Crischona, Bâle.—M. Rappard, director of the Missionary College here, is about to devote himself entirely to the work of evangelisation; at the same time he will not cease to take some surveillance over the establishment, which now contains sixty students. The new director is M. Théodore Haarbeck.

Evangelisation in France.—La Semaine Populaire says the McAll réunions in Paris have been more frequented this summer than in any preceding year at the same time. At the Boulevard Barbès, for instance, every Sunday, Monday, and Friday, the audience numbers from 250 to 300 persons. The Salle de Rivoli is quite full every evening. At Calais some Christians have been labouring with great devotion every Sunday among the fishery population. Some of the agents of the French "Mission Intérieure" give very encouraging accounts of the good meetings they get in journeying from place to place, and of the readiness of the people to hear the Gospel.

Mrs. Hampson has achieved great success in her brief Mission in Adelaide. Between 400 and 500 persons have professed conversion, and at her last meeting 700 signed the pledge, or donned the blue ribbon. The Adelaide correspondent of The Argus says: "The Rev. Charles Clark, in his palmiest days, never drew such audiences as Mrs. Hampson is drawing night after night. Men go to scoff, and remain to pray. Bankers, merchants, lawyers, members of Parliament and members of the Press, are constantly to be seen among the eager listeners who throng to hear the message which this simple woman has to declare. The remarkable feature about her preaching is that she addresses herself more to men than to women. Though never forgetting her womanhood, she is never unwomanly." Mrs. Hampson has returned to Victoria, and after a rest of a few days will begin her Mission at Sandhurst. A very earnest invitation has been sent to her to visit Warrnambool, —Southern Cross.

EAST LONDON.—Mr. Charrington, encouraged by the success which has attended his labours, is about to erect a new Assembly Hall for evangelistic work in East London capable of accommodating 5000 persons.

RUDE ELOQUENCE.

HAVING received an invitation from Mr. Catlin to attend on Monday last a tea-meeting, given to the members of the Cowcross Mission, of which Mr. Catlin is the well-known superintendent, I accepted the invitation, and went to Gloucester Hall, prepared for a useful evening, but not expecting much beyond the ordinary routine of social gatherings. The speaking on the occasion was, however, such a vivid illustration of the power of a rude, unlettered, but sanctified eloquence, to stir the masses, that a little record of it may be useful. Mr. Catlin, I may mention, is holding a ten days' Mission among the poor of Clerkenwell.

The first speaker was a converted prize fighter, who for some twenty years may be said to have been changed from a powerful bruiser of men into a bruiser of Satan. Nothing in his address indicated his previous calling. In language it was correct, but chaste and fervent. He told us, among other things, that after recently giving an evangelistic address he invited a policeman to take Christ as his Master. The man burst into tears. On subsequently going to his house, to learn the result of his appeal, the man was out, but his little girl, in her artless way, began to say: "Oh, do you know father sings, and prays, and reads the Bible with us now?" "Does he, indeed?" "Yes; and more than that, he goes into his own room, and prays!" "But how do you know that?" "Oh," answered the little prattler, in her innocent manner, "because I go to the door, and listen!" We were much struck by this proof of an arrow shot at a venture having gone home.

The treasurer of Gipsy Smith's Army at Hanley gave us in an address, which was a striking mixture of the humorous and pathetic, a glimpse of the spiritual condition of the potteries, which revealed a dark mass of brutal and sensual life as existing there. Among other things, he thrilled his hearers by the narrative of the conversion of two most degraded drunkards, one of whom bore the startling title of "The Devil of the Parish." If this speaker's address had been noteworthy for nothing else than for a saying of Billy Bray (whom he personally knew), which he gave us, it would have been worth listening to for that. "When a bar of iron is cold," said Billy, "I can carry it about, and do pretty well what I like with it; but when it is red-hot I have to keep at a respectable distance from it. So when a soul or a Church is cold, the devil can carry it, or do almost what he likes with it; but when it gets red-hot, he is afraid to come near it." A good hint this to us all, was it not, to keep our hearts warmed by the love of God?

An evangelist from the manufacturing districts told us also with force and power of his conflicts with the publicans there; and, with a humour that was infectious, mentioned how in the act of singing the doxology, and praising Him from whom all blessings flow, their thankfulness for "all things" was put to the test by a shower of mud flying at that very moment past the face of the singer. A converted chimney sweeper was not less interesting than the previous speakers, as he told us the early story of his life, in the home of a drunken father, who would pull his children out of bed by the hair of their head, and threaten to cut their throats. One incident of his "professional" life was very touching. After telling us that he now found an opportunity of preaching Christ to the mistresses and servants where he swept the chimneys, he said that on a bitter winter morning he one day found himself without food or firing. The cook, where he swept a chimney afterwards, gave him a lump of coal, which she put in his soot bag, and said it would warm him. Recollecting, however, that it was the property of her employer, and not hers to give, "I said to myself," he continued, "shall I part with Christ for a lump of coal?" and immediately he took out the doubtful thing, and left it, going home in such a glow of gratitude at the victory given him over temptation that he felt the cold no more that day.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Haig Miller and the chaplain of Northampton Gaol said a few practical words, and the speaking was concluded by a young man, who testified to the good imparted by prison ministration, telling us how, after entering a gaol a drunkard, he emerged from it converted, and was now leading a useful and thriving life.

We left the meeting greatly satisfied with the good Mr. Catlin (whom we recommend to the liberality of his Christian friends) was accomplishing by such a service, and gratified by the testimony that had been furnished of the power of Christ to pick up the most degraded members of society, and to furnish them with an eloquence for his service, more effective in its peculiar way than culture and lettered style. CHRISTIAN WORK IN EGYPT.

FROM a letter by Mrs. Prinsep to Miss Lowe we are permitted to make the following extracts:—

"I have lately returned from Egypt, having spent one month at Suez, another at Cairo, another at Alexandria, and three at Jaffa. For many years the Church of Scotland has had a Seamen's Bethel in the harbour of Jaffa, the boat being the gift of Said Pasha. In returning from Palestine I spent a week on board this Bethel-boat; the meetings held were well attended. It did one's heart good to see the boats coming from the different ships, such as the Condor and Sunbeam.

"While on board I heard of a 'Rest' at Alexandria, but that it was very much a failure. A lady, hearing of my being on board, asked, 'Could I not find some lady in London with means of her own, who would come and live at the place, and try and give it a fresh start?'

"I found many openings in Egypt; there is spiritual death of the most intense kind among the English at Suez, Cairo, and in the army. I was able to give away Arabic Bibles to several Pashas. There is a spirit of curiosity about Christ among the Mohammedans such as has never previously existed. We are bound to seize and make use of it. I found little Ali Hissem, from Mr. Guinness's, and had sweet fellowship with him. He is now among his own people far up the Nile. A young French brother has volunteered to go to Egypt to join Mr. Eoll at Port Said. At Laliotâl we gave away 300 Testaments and 3000 tracts, but there are 2000 Italians here, and it would require £40 to give each one a Testament only. All we give seems but a drop in the ocean. I feel how needful it is for women to work for the Lord in the most quiet and womanly way possible.

"The men of the 50th Regiment have a room set apart for prayer and other meetings; it is an untold comfort and blessing to many a soul. I have now made twelve voyages in the Messageries Maritimes steamers. One of my dreams is to go to China from Marseilles, stopping a fortnight at each station. I should require an immense supply of Scriptures.

"More and more now I urge on all Christian young men, who tell me they wish to serve the Lord, that they must earn their own living, and not live upon the Church of Christ. The money ought often to go to the real poor, and the widows and orphans of the Church. Every man who provides for his own family and serves the Lord on Lord's days would double his influence, in France especially."

MR. W. FORBES.—After leaving Montreal Mr. Forbes held a number of Gospel Temperance meetings in various places in the Province of Quebec, under the auspices of the "Dominion Alliance."

MOROCCO.—Rev. J. B. Ginsburg, of the "London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews," writes that on Sunday, July 29, the little church at Mogador was again the scene of glad rejoicing. Three Israelites publicly confessed, by holy baptism, their faith in Jesus of Nazareth as the Son of God and King of Israel. The Saturday Hebrew Service has taken a happy turn. Last time there were no less than sixty Jews and Jewesses.

THE PERSECUTED JEWS.—3.

By Mrs. FINN.

THE St. Petersburg correspondent of The Times wrote on May 18, 1882:—"Commerce and industry are suffering in an unprecedented degree. Business men are complaining loudly, especially those whose trade depends upon the confidence and credit given by commercial houses abroad. Even the Moscow Exhibition bids fair to become a failure. The number of exhibitors from an empire of 90,000,000 of subjects is only counted at about 2000, and many of these have not yet been able to send their goods. Foreign houses express so much distrust that, as business men on 'Change remark, twenty or thirty telegrams have now to be exchanged with houses abroad before one transaction can be carried through."

The peasantry are by no means unanimous in their readiness to rise against the Jews. Later (June 9, 1883) it was reported that: "In several small Russian towns and villages the agitation for the expulsion of the Jews has been revived. In one town, where twenty-five Jewish families reside, the Staroschina (chief of the peasants) succeeded in inducing the inhabitants to abandon their wish, on the ground that they themselves would be the losers if the Jews were driven out. But in another place the handful of Jews were peremptorily ordered to quit within seven days."

The persecutions in Russia this year are due mainly to the efforts of organised attacks promoted by emissaries from other places. In Russia as in Hungary the anti-Semitic agitators from Germany have been busy. Recent telegrams afford ample evidence of this; here is one from Vienna: "Serious persecutions of Jews have occurred again in Hungary—the anti-Jewish leaders agitate everywhere with immense zeal, and as the excitement of the population has already attained a very high pitch, the riots are renewed with ever-increasing rapidity." The come details of a mob of 1500 attacking the Jewish houses at 10 o'clock at night, and by morning all houses and warehouses had been broken open and everything that could be found was destroyed.

This is the most appalling feature of the whole business. Anti-Semitic Congresses are held in Germany, at which women and children are enlisted in the work of disseminating the scheme of the destroyers, and a paper is brought out in French, German, Russian and Spanish, for the object of urging destruction of the Jews. In Bohemia seditious books and pamphlets have been seized by Government, because they threaten "death to the Jews." In Pesth 2000 copies were seized—so also in Strasburg. In Vienna in the Lower House, two persons were arrested in the gallery who had come there to distribute similar literature. In Jassy 300 delegates from all parts of the country met at the anti-Jewish Congress. In France and in Algeria the same propaganda is going on.

Extermination of the Jewish people is the object which the evil spirit now abroad has in view. How shall we arouse Christians in England to any sense of the magnitude of the danger which threatens, nay, which has overtaken, the Jewish nation? A long-tried friend of Israel writes to me:—"The persecution of the Jew now revived with such force, seems to stir no one. The world is tired of sympathy with these oppressed children of Israel." Is it so? I trust not. We in England know something of Israel's history. We know what became of the schemes for exterminating Israel when Pharaoh and his evil counsellors conspired against them. We know who it is that promises blessing to those who will bless and help his people Israel. Space is not left me for further details on this occasion. Next time I shall hope to continue the subject and to tell of the progress towards settlement made by our Cyprus Colony, in the spot which we trust may yet prove a refuge to more of "the remnant that escape" fire and sword of the destroyer.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. George Williams is at present conducting a series of evangelist meetings at Partick with much success.

Glasgow.—The work in the tent on the Green has now been brought to a close for the season. Many souls, it is believed, have been brought to a knowledge of the truth within its covering. The work will now be carried on in halls during the winter.

Theatre Services.—The committee for the arrangement of evangelistic services in Theatres, &c., have decided to secure twelve buildings for work during the winter. Pecuniary help for this effort is needed, which may be sent to Mr. C. M. Sawell, 5, Bridewell-place, New Bridge-street, E.C.

Rushden.—Messrs. Mateer and Parker have just completed a nine days' Mission at Rushden, Northamptonshire. The meetings throughout were largely attended, the most cheering feature of the work being the after-meetings, where many were led to the Saviour. The evangelists commenced a fourteen days' Mission at Sutton on Sunday, October 7, for which prayer is requested.

Mr. Gawin Kirkham, writing from Toronto, reports his arrival at Quebec on Sept. 10. "On most days," he says, "we preached either on deck or in the steerage, there being about 800 souls on board. On arrival I went to Montreal, thence to Toronto, and intend leaving here for Hamilton, St. Catherine's, Niagara, Chicago, St. Louis, and New York, where all letters will reach me through the Y.M.C.A., New York."

Tract Distribution.—A correspondent writes concerning the encouragement she has received at Lucerne, and other places on the Continent, in the distribution of tracts, &c. The people were eager to get them, and expressed themselves thankful to anyone who gave them books which show the way of salvation. Our correspondent sends us this information in the hope that others may be stirred up to do likewise.

Bradford Y.M.C.A.—Mission services were held in the Lecture Hall of the Y.M.C.A., Bradford, from September 22 to October 7. Mr. Oscar Owers, of the Evangelisation Society, spoke nightly at the earlier services. The attendance was numerous, and the Word has been powerfully and boldly declared. Mr. Owers also gave Bible readings, daily at 3.30, Saturdays and Sundays excepted. Mr. Henry Varley took charge of the services from October 2.

Tracts for East London.—The workers of the East London Tract Society earnestly appeal for sailors' bags, books, tracts, &c., to enable them to continue their work amongst sailors and on board ships. They visit about 300 police, 100 firemen, 2,500 railway men, &c., also bargemen, cabmen, omnibus men, and in docks, cemeteries, hospitals, public-houses, parks, &c. Nearly 3500 families are visited weekly. Mr. George Fuller, 4, Cawdor-street, Poplar, E., is superintendent.

Ipswich Y. M. C. Association.—On Tuesday, October 2, a district conference of friends from surrounding towns was held at the rooms of this Association. At a preliminary prayer-meeting, Mr. W. Hind-Smith delivered a practical address on "The Objects, Agencies, and Field of Service of the Y.M.C.A.," showing it to be an ally of the Sunday-school and an auxiliary of the Church. There was a large attendance at the annual meeting in the town hall. Mr. Samuel Thompson, of London, presided. Mr. Roberts, secretary, read the report, which showed that 103 new members and associates had joined the Association during the year. The Committee had been compelled, owing to the increased attendance, to enlarge and improve the premises. Revs. Canon Garratt, Chas. E. Mees, A. Jeffrey, and Dr. Roche also gave addresses.

National Bible Society of Scotland.—At the last monthly meeting of the Western Directors in Glasgow, it was reported that one of the Society's Japanese agents, a native Christian, had crossed to Corea, with a supply of Scriptures for sale in that country. Mr. Murray, of Pekin, had penetrated into Mongola. In three days spent in Dolonor, the Mecca of the Lamas, he had sold 900 Chinese Gospels and more than "a hundred-weight" of Mongol Scriptures. Dr. Murdoch, of the Christian Vernacular Education Society for India, was present, and reported the sales of Scriptures through his Society. To enforce the need of continued exertion in the diffusion of the Scriptures, Dr. Murdoch placed on the table a number of specimens of the infidel publications largely circulated throughout India. A number of home grants were made, including one for navvies employed on railway works in Ayrshire.

Mr. J. Harris, of the Evangelisation Society, has conducted a ten days' Gospel Mission at Piddington, Thame, Oxon.

Glasgow Mizpah Band.—On Tuesday week a testimony meeting was held in connection with this interesting movement. Addresses were delivered, encouraging the men in the evangelistic work which they had undertaken. Two of those who testified had fought through the Afghan war. After the presentation of a mark of esteem to their leader and the lady who had presided at the harmonium, the meeting was addressed by Mr. Scroggie and by Sir Wilfrid Lawson. Many of the evangelistic meetings, free breakfast and tent-meetings, have been greatly helped forward by this band of workers.

Letters to the Editor.

AN EXPLANATION.

Dear Sir,—Allow me to correct an error which crept into the report of the words which I spoke at Exeter Hall on the 25th ult. I am sure that the reporter had every wish to render correctly what I said, and the mistake is easily rectified. It is not the case that the Federal Constitution of Switzerland is under revision. What I wished to convey was, that the Constitution of several of the penal codes was about to be revised, that of the Canton de Vaud being actually, I believe, under revision; and that there is some reason to fear that in the present state of public opinion in Switzerland, certain clauses will not be in favour of religious liberty, but the contrary.—Yours faithfully,

Josephine E. Butler.

FACTORY GIRLS IN CANADA.

Dear Sir,—In your issue of August 30, under the caption, "Factory Girls in Canada," in "Miss Macpherson's Canadian Diary," I observe the statement made that in Hespeler, the factory girls receive eight to ten dollars a week—equal to 32s. to 40s. sterling. Please correct this, as it is most decidedly an error. The average pay of factory girls in this province is from eight to twelve dollars a month.

I may add that many years' residence in this country has convinced me that, taking it all round, factory girls do not improve their condition by coming to Canada. The truth is that there is no such demand for help—male or female, as the newspapers make out; that supply is actually in Toronto in excess of demand in all lines, and wages are little better, while the expense of living is more than at home. Wm. Paterson.

CAPE COLONY.

Dear Sir,—I feel compelled to take exception to some remarks of "T. M." in The Christian of the 20th ult., which I only read yesterday, being, unfortunately, owing to absence from home, a week's issue in arrear.

Having been acquainted with the Cape for more than a third of a century, and visited many parts of it, I can truly say that a more unjust reflection upon its people I do not remember to have read. That there are some fast men in Cape Town, as in every city and town of the Empire, I will not deny, but that the capital of the Colony, or the country in general, is exceptionally bad, is not a fact. If "T. M." is in the habit of reading the Cape papers, he must have noticed how few cases of importance are tried at the Sessions, and how common are the remarks of the Judge in addressing the Grand Jury as to the lightness of their duties.

I know of no church in the entire city that is not crowded on the Sabbath, there is no rowdyism in its worst streets, and, on the whole, there is living there as orderly a community as any town in Scotland that I am acquainted with, containing the same population.

Regarding the "popular minister" of great influence with young men, I know not for what purpose letters of introduction are sent to him, unless it be that he should keep a watchful eye for good over the strangers, and if by chance he may have uttered any words of invitation, I imagine they must have been to attend public worship regularly. The minister referred to is a most zealous and laborious servant, of strictly evangelical views, and who joins heartily with his Nonconformist brethren in every good work. I know of no minister who is less inclined to engage in proselytism than the one so unfairly attacked by your correspondent. W.

October 1.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.

Dear Sir,—May I crave the prayerful and practical sympathy of your readers in our present difficulties? Our need is urgent, as I will, with your permission, briefly show.

At the close of our financial year, June 6, we had a balance of £96. Since then our receipts have only amounted to £173, while our expenditure has been £250, and nearly £60 is now over-due for rentals, and salaries.

At these rooms, where the membership of theatrical female employés numbers over 3000, and at the Youths' Institute, 14, York-street, a continuous round of Bible and other classes, meetings, and lectures, is maintained weekly. Many Jews and Roman Catholics attend and seem impressed; scores have been reclaimed from the theatres and the streets, and helped into respectable spheres of duty, while a standing protest is made against the insidious teaching of those who foster in the minds of ignorant "professionals" the idea that theirs is "a hallowed calling," and "the art of dancing" as much "consecrated by God as the work for which Bezaleel and Aholiab were inspired."

Yours very faithfully,

Courthope Todd, Sec.

BISHOP TEMPLE ON BIBLE STUDY.

THE Bishop of Exeter has recently given a most timely and profoundly thoughtful address on the study of the Bible. He was speaking to a number of Sunday-school teachers gathered together at Gwennap, in Cornwall; setting out with the axiom that the Christian should give himself a ready offering to God, the Bishop remarked that the Sunday-school teacher ought to look upon his work as part of this offering, or that work could not by any possibility be properly done. Viewed in this light, it was seen how important was the necessary preparation for the duties of the class; and the question arose how was the teacher to become a good teacher? The necessary condition was this: as long as he goes on teaching he must never cease learning, for as soon as any man has stopped learning he may as well give up teaching. There was, of course, the temptation to get matters off by routine, in order that the teacher might, as he thought, have ease in teaching; "but let me tell them," said the speaker with significance, "the greater ease is always purchased with loss of effect."

And this, he pointed out, was quite as true of the clergy as of the teachers. "The clergyman who has left off reading the Bible, or reads it cursorily, or has come to the conclusion he has nothing more to learn from the Bible, is no longer fit to preach. He may preach with great fluency and great cleverness, and may be able to say many eloquent things, and yet the power of his preaching is certain, gradually but surely, to fail." There must throughout be close and constant study of the Bible; the more it was known, the fresher it would seem. There is, Dr. Temple went on to say, little new experience in our spiritual life, unless we are looking into the Word of God, and unless our study of it is constantly opening to us a fresh gaze of the spiritual world. "I do not," said the speaker in an animated passage of his address, "ask every teacher to become a considerable scholar, or to read a great deal, but I ask every teacher to read a little every day without fail, and so constantly keep his mind open to receive what God will teach to him from on high."

His lordship incidentally commended the thoroughness of the teaching done by the Jesuits, whose rule that the most experienced man should take charge of the smallest children, might often with advantage be put in practice in English Protestant schools.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For the work at the Grove Hall Mission, Lisson-grove, N.W., during the past six months.——For the recovery of a dear sister.

PRAYER.—For the work of the Railway Mission.——For eyesight to one who is blind.——For one who is passing through great anxiety.——For services at Langport, Somersetshire, commencing October 13, by Mr. Opie Rodway.

Notices of Books, &c.

Recollections of a Paris Evangelist gives an interesting account of evangelistic work in Paris, carried on by M. Vignal, whose address is 6, Rue Mayet, Paris. The booklet may be obtained of S. W. Partridge & Co.

Children of Light. By S. U. Gardner. 1s. Church of England Temperance Society, Bridge-street, Westminster. This is a little book of Temperance talks with children. It has some good points, and the language is simple, but there are a few sentences which would bear revision.

Friendly Greetings. Religious Tract Society. his is a splendidly illustrated volume, that cannot fail to attract the eye and admiration of all who may see it. The engravings are numerous, and by the best artists; the reading is calculated to arrest, arouse, and instruct.

Ferndale; or, The Blue Ribbon Boy. By W. Frith. 1s. Partridge & Co. We recommend this interesting story to boys and young men. It tells how a boy was led, through the drunkenness of his father, to join the Blue Ribbon movement, and eventually to become a Christian and a useful member of society.

The second edition of The Life, Suffering, and Death of Manuel Matamoros, by W. Green, C.E., is just published by S. W. Partridge & Co. Price 1d. It is a sweet little record of a Spanish saint, and very suitable for distribution just now, with the recent Gospel burning in Spain and the Luther Commemoration before us.

Picture Truths. By John Taylor. 1s. 6d. Woolmer, Castle-street, E.C. This is a charming book for boys. We heartily recommend parents to get it, and teachers to add it to their libraries. Great moral principles are illustrated and enforced by no unskilful hand. Boys who read and practise what is herein taught will be grateful to the author.

The Christmas Letter Mission.—We have received a large budget of the interesting and appropriate literature issued on behalf of this Mission, by Messrs. Hazell, Watson & Viney, 6, Kirby-street, Hatton-garden, E.C. There are letters, envelopes, cards, hymn-books, fly-sheets, hints to workers, and other reading suitable for the Christmas season; most of them are finely illustrated.

Memorials of a Young Evangelist. By E. S. H. R. Tract Repository, 113, Russell-street, Melbourne. This is a short memoir of Henry Drummond Rainey, who left Ireland in 1873 for evangelistic work in Australia, where he was much used in leading souls to Christ. The letters inserted show the deep piety of this young servant of the Lord, and we heartily recommend the book as specially suitable for putting into the hands of young men.

Christ in the Tabernacle. By Frank H. White. S. W. Partridge & Co. We welcome the fifth edition of Mr. White's excellent treatise on this most instructive subject. The circulation of his book is proof positive of its value. We cannot speak too highly of such a work as this, for the author sees Christ in all the offerings and ritual of the Tabernacle, and enforces the same by New Testament references. A profound reverence pervades the book throughout.

The first number of Cassell's Saturday Journal is out. After a careful perusal, we have come to the conclusion that it is a new, and perhaps improved, edition of The Family Herald. Out of sixteen pages, about seven are occupied with three tales—two of them "to be continued." A larger proportion of "solid," not necessarily "dull," reading would make it more worthy of patronage. It would be well if a couple of pages, at least, were devoted to an interesting narrative of the events of the week. The last page, containing "Answers to Correspondents," appears to us to be the best.

"Quit You Like Men." A Book for Young Men. By C. F. Dowsett. 6d. Of the Author, 70, Lincoln's Inn Fields. We have no hesitation in giving unqualified commendation to this book; it is one of the best manuals for the guidance of young men we have seen. It deals with a variety of subjects, including business, emigration, companionship, reading, drinking, smoking, marriage, and other matters of vital importance. If only young men will read it, and it is most readable in its style, it cannot fail to be of great and permanent benefit to them. It ought to be widely circulated.

Dr. Pusey: His Character and Life Work. By Rev. J. H. Rigg, D.D. Woolmer. The aim of this book is to bring out into full light the distinctive characteristics of Dr. Pusey's life-work as a Church leader within the National Church. Dr. Rigg has brought great tact and skill to bear upon his task, and while doing full justice to the undoubted personal piety and sincerity of Dr. Pusey, has not failed to show the enormous injury inflicted upon the English Church, and upon the cause of Christ generally, by the decidedly Romish character of his teaching. The book conveys warning and instruction greatly needed at this time, when the evil fruits of Puseyism are being developed with so much freedom and force.

Mission Appeals.

West Hampstead.—Rev. W. J. Watkins, incumbent of St. Cuthbert's, has opened a reading-room for young men, and will be thankful for a supply of books for the same, which may be addressed to him at 19, Fordwych-road, West Hampstead.

Children's Gospel Mission.—Mr. H. W. Nunn, 16, St. John's-lane, E.C., appeals for help for carrying on the Smithfield and Clerkenwell Mission to Children; the means used being a Sunday-school at Plumber's-place, and Sunday and evening services at Charterhouse-street.

Medical Missions at Gaza.—Rev. A. W. Schapira, a missionary of the C.M.S., labouring at this place, pleads for the establishment of a hospital and means for the support of a medical missionary for the benefit of the Mussulman population, neglected by their Government and forgotten by Europeans. Dispensary work is now carried on daily by a native doctor. Thousands of persons have received bodily relief and the Gospel has been preached to them. General Gordon, who has visited the place, writes to Mr. Schapira: "I sincerely trust you will be able to get the necessary £300 a year." Communications may be addressed to Rev. F. E. Wigram, 16, Salisbury-square, E.C.

THIS Society has been formed for the purpose of establishing a Christian Settlement in South Africa, the intention being to continue, and, as far as it is possible (with God's help) complete, the noble work begun by those Institutions which shelter the children and orphans in this country by emigrating them to a land where, under the supervision secured by the family system (besides obtaining places for these children in Christian families residing in South Africa), it is hoped they will continue to develop in moral character, and earn for themselves the advantages of an honest livelihood.

The Government of Natal has given a tract of land in Alexandra County, on Umzimkulu River, opposite Port Shepstone, of about 3,400 acres, on most favourable terms, and will grant free passages for our settlers and children. The climate of Natal is one of the healthiest in the world.

We require for our work just now about £700 for our settlement or depot. We have selected a party of five Christian men (without salary) and their families to go out and prepare the place for receiving our first party of boys. Everything is ready, but we have not yet received all the funds required. We believe the Lord's work must be done without running into debt.

It will take £360 to build our houses at the Settlement. Are there six to be found willing to come forward to build these houses? We do look forward to that time when Missionaries shall go forth from this Settlement into the "Dark Continent" to tell of Jesus' love.

It is urgent that we should have the sum required in hand without delay, so as to be in a position to take out the boys offered us by Dr. Barnardo, Mr. Fegan, Miss Macpherson and others in December or January, a time when much distress prevails.

Donations and Subscriptions (for even the smallest sums) will be thankfully received by any of the Society's Bankers, or at the office of The Christian. All Cheques and Postal Orders should be crossed.

GREAT SALE OF HEARTHRUGS.

TWO years ago we determined to offer our special Hearthrugs, 72 inches long by 36 inches wide, at 3s. 9d. each, carriage paid to any address. Since that time we have sold over 50,000 of these Hearthrugs, which is in itself a testimony to the value we offer the public. In addition to this we have had repeat orders and testimonials almost every day. No part of the United Kingdom is too distant, and no village or hamlet or home is too remote for us to send to. We have supplied these Rugs to the Queen's Palace at Balmoral, as well as to the humblest cottage in the land, and the testimony from rich and poor alike is that, whether for drawing-room, bed-room, dining-room, or kitchen, no rugs have ever been sold at once so handsome, cheap, and useful. They have now been before the public and in many homes for over two years, and we rely on this fact as a great testimony in their favour. In order that every home in the land may possess one or more of these beautiful Rugs, we will send

These Rugs are made in five colours, which, being artistically blended, will suit any coloured carpet or suite. The Rug will be sent carriage free to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of P.O.O. for 3s. 9d. or 48 stamps. In ordering, it will be desirable to write name and address very plainly, and to enclose the application form found below.

THE CHRISTIAN COUPON.

On receipt on this form, accompanied by a P.O.O. for 3s. 9d. (or 48 stamps), we agree to forward, carriage free, a large and exquisitely designed HEARTHRUG, 72 inches by 36 inches.

(Signed) C. HALL & CO.

The following is a specimen of the testimonials received:

"Digswell Rectory, Welwyn, Herts.

"Gentlemen,—The Rugs duly to hand on Friday evening. Am very much pleased with the designs, and I am more than satisfied with the price. They are, indeed, both excellent and cheap.—Yours truly,

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE

To the Old and New Testaments. Handsomely bound in cloth, price 7s.6d. Half bound in leather, cloth sides, gilt edges, 10s. 6d.

POPULAR EDITION, CLOTH, FIVE SHILLINGS.

THE SPECIAL FEATURE in this Edition is the NEW TRANSLATION, Revision, and Extension of the PROPER NAMES of the OLD and NEW TESTAMENTS, with their Meanings in the Original Languages. By Rev. Alfred Jones, M.A., Author of "The Proper Names of the Old Testament Scriptures, Expounded and Illustrated."

CHRIST LIFTED UP.

Meditations on the Death, Resurrection, and Ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ. By Rev. Robert Gilchrist. Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"An earnest, practical exhibition of the Gospel under a variety of aspects. Christ lifted up on the cross, and at the Father's right hand, is the grand theme, and affords scope for setting forth a wide range of Gospel teaching. The writer does this in an interesting, while simple style."—British Messenger.

"Old-fashioned divinity presented in a pleasing form. May its readers be many."—Sword and Trowel.

THE GOSPEL IN LEVITICUS.

Chapters on the Old Testament Foreshadowings of the Great Redemption. By the late Rev. Dr. Fleming, of Kentish Town. Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"The subject is set forth with a clearness, a directness, and a persuasiveness which leave little to be desired. Every lover of sound Scriptural theology, especially in regard to the momentous doctrine of the Atonement, will find in the book a rich treat."—Baptist Magazine.

JOHN, WHOM JESUS LOVED.

The Character, Writings, Theology, and Influence of the Beloved Disciple. New and Enlarged Edition. By Rev. Dr. Culross. With Chromo-Lithographic Views of the "Sea of Galilee" and the "Island of Patmos." Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d.

"It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."—Sword and Trowel.

"THY FIRST LOVE."

Christ's Message to Ephesus. By Rev. Dr. Culross. With Chromo-Lithographic Frontispiece. Cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"It is a heart-searching and stimulating little book."
British Quarterly Review.

"Its language is chaste and clear; its thoughts are fresh and invigorating; its tone is evangelical without being sentimental. While there is a genial warmth of devout feeling, there runs through its pages a healthy breeze of robustness."—Literary World.

BEHOLD, I STAND AT THE DOOR & KNOCK.

Christ's Message to Laodicea. By Rev. Dr. Culross. Tinted Covers, 1s; cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"The exposition is fresh and original, displaying great critical skill and discrimination, together with happy quotations of Scripture. The style is all that could be desired—chaste and polished, yet full of force; here and there, as in the author's other works, we meet with passages of great poetic beauty."
Aberdeen Daily Press.

CALLS TO CHRIST.

A Series of Addresses by Rev. R. W. Nicoll, M.A. Tinted Covers, 1s. Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

"Force and freshness are eminently the characteristics of these 'Calls to Christ'; they are also brief to a proverb, and hence they may be of great service to an earnest evangelist who knows how to use another man's thoughts."
Kelso Courier.

THE NUMBER "SEVEN" IN SCRIPTURE.

Compiled by S. A. Blackwood, Esq., C.B. Paper Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d. Presentation Edition, Cloth Boards, Bevelled, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

"Many other attempts have been made in tabulating the circumstances connected with the word "seven" in the Bible, but we cannot think of any one which is so complete, so concise, and so systematic as in the small volume compiled by Mr. Blackwood. From Genesis i. to Rev. xxii. all the many times the word occurs are duly noted, and each book is dealt with seriatim, so that reference is easy. One object of the book is "to stimulate search and to arouse inquiry," and with this book by the side of the Bible one course of study can be made very profitable indeed."—The Rock.

SEARCHING THE SCRIPTURES

In order to abiding Communion with God. Also, Suggestions for Bible Reading and Study, and a Plan for Consecutive Daily Reading. By Dr. Anderson. Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d. Second Edition.

"Whether viewed as an analysis of the whole Bible, or as a plan for its daily perusal, or as a directory to the spirit and intention with which it should be studied, it is equally judicious and complete. The one design of the whole Scriptures is kept in view throughout."—Sword and Trowel.

CHRIST AND THE SCRIPTURES.

By Rev. Dr. Adolph Saphir. Cheap Edition.—Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth, Limp, 1s. 6d. Superior Edition.—Cloth, Elegant, 3s.; with Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"This book is original. Dr. Saphir has the power of originating and combining, which is the mark of genius. It is the old truths to which we listen; but the old truths clothed in a living language, set in new lights, and drawn out in fresh applications."—Weekly Review.

BIBLE READINGS BY HENRY MOORHOUSE.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.

"We do not wonder that those who heard Moorhouse's Bible Readings found them full of power and suggestion. To him the Word of God was a sword—the only one worth using in spiritual warfare."—Liverpool Courier.

"This volume will be heartily welcomed by not only workers in the field, but by all who love to study the Divine Word. A careful reading must stimulate moral seriousness and earnest service for Christ."—Christian Commonwealth.

THE SURE MERCIES OF DAVID;

or, God's Dealings in the Sanctuary. By Anna Shipton. Best Edition, toned paper, Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 4s. 6d. Cheap Edition, Cloth neat, 2s. 6d.

"This is a well-written volume of spiritual instruction, interspersed with interesting narratives, from the able pen of Mrs. Shipton. It is well worthy of a wide circulation, especially amongst members of Christian congregations, Sunday-school teachers and scholars."—Free Press.

NOTES FOR BIBLE READINGS.

A Collection of over Six Hundred Subjects, carefully compiled and arranged. Suitable for Bible Readings, Cottage Lectures, Sermons, Addresses, Sabbath-school Lessons, &c. Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d. A cheap edition may also be had in tinted covers, 2s. 6d.

"A book which every Bible student should possess. It will be of special value to the class teacher, and an assistance also to the preacher. It supplies valuable matter for private meditation, and those who conduct Bible Readings will find it most suggestive."—Christian Progress.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO MOSES:

As seen in the Tabernacle and its Various Services. By Rev. George Rodgers. Frontispiece. Tinted covers, 1s.; cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.

"No young Christian, and especially no preacher, should be ignorant of the truth which this small volume very simply but very forcibly enunciates."
The Record.

"A very spiritual as well as instructive little book, the Saviour being typically portrayed in the Tabernacle, the High Priest, and the Sacrifices."—Churchman.

HYMNS AND SONGS

SPECIALLY SUITABLE FOR

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MEETINGS.

A Series of 4 two-page Leaflets, each containing a collection of stirring Pieces, admirably adapted for use at "Gospel Temperance" and other Meetings. Price 9d. per 100, or 7s. 6d. per 1000.

CONTENTS OF NO. 1.

Where is my wandering boy to-night?
One there is who loves thee
The mistakes of my life have been many
Long in darkness we have waited
Are you coming home, ye wanderers?
A ruler once came to Jesus by night
Fierce and wild the storm is raging
Why do you wait, dear brother?
Say, where is thy refuge, my brother?
Why perish with cold and with hunger?
From the riven Rock there floweth

CONTENTS OF No. 2.

What can wash away my stain?
Come, thou weary! Jesus calls thee
Should the death-angel knock at your chamber
The Gospel bells are ringing
Have you any room for Jesus?
Oh come, sinner, come! 'tis mercy's call
Make room for Jesus! room, sad heart!
Oh, do not let the Word depart
Brightly beams our Father's mercy
O Christ, in Thee my soul hath found
Light in the darkness, sailor!

CONTENTS OF No. 3.

When my final farewell to the world I have said
Standing by a purpose true
When the storms of life are raging
I have read of a beautiful city
Ring the bells of heaven! there is joy to day
I have heard of a land far away
"Land ahead!" its fruits are waving
Oh, tender and sweet was the Master' voice
'Tis the promise of God full salvation to give
When storms around are sweeping

CONTENTS OF No. 4.

Of course you know that to and fro, throughout our glorious land
She only touched the hem of His garment
Our Master has taken His journey
Tempted and tried
Father, don't you hear the angels
The prize is set before us
There is a Fountain filled with blood
Would you lose your load of sin?
Yield not to temptation, for yielding is sin

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN. OPEN-ALL-NIGHT.

Recently it was announced that the Committee of the Homes had determined to make some much needed alterations and repairs at the OPEN-ALL-NIGHT REFUGE. These works are now nearly completed, and it is hoped that within ten days of this date the place will be re-opened by a meeting to invoke the BLESSING OF GOD upon the Mission of Mercy carried on therein. The expenses have somewhat exceeded the estimate of cost.

WILL SOME FRIEND OF POOR OUTCASTS, THEREFORE, CONTRIBUTE A DONATION OF £25 TOWARDS THIS SPECIAL OBJECT?

MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT will, as usual, gladly take charge of a Donation of this amount, or small sums.

CHOICE SAYINGS.

Being Notes of Exposition of the Scriptures.

Revised by ROBERT C. CHAPMAN.

Tinted Covers, 9d.; Cloth Limp, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.; Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s.; Morocco, Gilt Edges, 3s.

Rev. C. H. SPURGEON in the Sword and Trowel for September, 1883, says:—

"Here we have gold dust, 'and the gold of that land is good.' We hardly know a man more noteworthy for abounding grace and deep piety than ROBERT C. CHAPMAN. His name has never been sounded abroad, but those who know him value him beyond expression. Some of these brief, 'Sayings' contain whole sermons. Personally, we expect to gather many discourses while studying this little book. A dew from heaven rests upon Mr. CHAPMAN'S expositions."

"A well-known and much-blessed periodical originated by the late Duncan Matheson."—British Messenger.

"Full of pleasant incidents and Gospel truths."
United Methodist Free Churches Magazine.

"This excellent magazine is in every respect worthy of its originator and of its name. It contains a great variety of interesting and instructive articles, both in prose and verse, all illustrative of some important truth, but its principal aim seems to be to show the fulness and freeness of God's mercy and the simplicity of the way of salvation. We heartily recommend it."—Wesleyan Sunday-School Magazine.

"Full of Gospel reading, prose and poetry, in short lessons and incidents, in easy reading for those not much accustomed to books."—New York Advocate and Guardian.

The Life of GEORGE WHITEFIELD.

By J. R. ANDREWS,

Author of "The Life of Oliver Cromwell to the Death of Charles I."

In cloth (with Portrait), 1s.

Superior Edition in large type, for Presentation, cloth, bevelled boards (with Portrait), price 5s.

"Whitefield was not a framer of discipline, not a leader of a sect, not a founder of societies, not a ruler of men, but pre-eminently a winner of souls. Would that such preachers were multiplied in the present day! We thank Mr. Andrews for this seasonable addition to our religious biography. No young preacher or student should be without it. But it possesses an interest far beyond any special class, and deserves a wide and general circulation."—Methodist Recorder.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

Supported by Voluntary Contributions.

President—

The Right Hon. the EARL of SHAFTESBURY, K.G.

Established 1822, for the purpose of employing humble Christian men, well versed in the Scriptures, to visit from house to house throughout the country, and visit all denominations. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required. The work is carried on in a spirit of love.

Subscriptions or Donations will be thankfully received by the Secretary, Capt. KEARNEY WHITE, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin; or at 9, Paternoster-row, London.

The Earl of Shaftesbury says in his last letter to the Secretary:—Many thanks for your kind letter, and many thanks to Almighty God for the good intelligence you give me about your Scripture Readers in Ireland. I wish I could more effectively assist you. Your letter is the best thing that I have seen or heard from Ireland.

I enclose my donation, and only wish it was more.—Yours, SHAFTESBURY

N.B.—Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not as "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

THE HYGIENIC VALUE OF MAGNETISM AS A MEANS OF INVIGORATION.

That the larger portion of debility is the result of wrong training or total ignorance on hygienic subjects, can, we think, be easily established. It is apparent in the injudicious clothing of children of all classes, some portions of the body being overclad and overheated, while others are exposed to all changes and inclemencies of the weather, absolutely without protection, causing circulatory irregularities and congestion.

It is apparent in the number of children and young people who are compelled to abandon study and seek change and rest, because the so-called system of education has overtaxed and exhausted their nervous energy. The sallow complexion and languid step of youth tell the same distressing tale, whilst in a larger number of cases the effects of late hours, intemperance, and dissipation only too clearly intensify the predisposition to nervous weakness.

If we could but divest ourselves of the surroundings which more or less influence us, and, as it were, compel us, in some degree, to comply with the follies of the age, it would appear absurd, if it were not painful, to see how eager the majority of people are to make a sacrifice of ease and personal comfort in order that they may do as others do—be "in the fashion."

Mr. W. WOOD, Halstow, Sittingbourne, Kent, writes, August 9, 1883:—

"Having read an article upon the cause and cure of mental and physical maladies, I was led to apply to you respecting my wife, who had been suffering for many years from hysteria, the attacks being so violent as to cause serious apprehension of her dying during the paroxysms. Almost choked, she would swoon into a state of semi-unconsciousness, on recovering from which she would be convulsed and cramped in the whole of her limbs in a manner painful to witness. Since adopting your treatment the hysteria has left her, and she is now in a better state of health, rendering life altogether enjoyable.

"I have also great pleasure in stating that I have found great benefit myself under the treatment, having been for several years wanting nerve power, which frequently rendered me unable to walk from physical prostration.

"Now after an experience of fourteen weeks I am thankful to be able to testify to the marvellous effect produced in so short a time; my health re-established; can follow my occupation as formerly; all former energy has returned, and although in my 70th year, I can go through the day without fatigue, and can, therefore, with confidence recommend the adoption of the same treatment to any person suffering from nervous debility, and in fact several persons have adopted it through my recommendation."

Writing to encourage a sufferer, Sept. 21, 1883, Mr. Wood says:—

"A few months ago I was in a most desponding state, having sad forebodings, my spirits being so depressed that I began to despair of ever being better. To those who have known me for years, I am a wonder, my appearance being now like my old self with my usual quick step: they cannot understand it. I attribute this wonderful change, however to the means advised and supplied by Mr. Garratt."

Mr. Garratt will always be happy to confer with any scientific or medical gentleman, either personally or by letter, upon any phase of the subject, or any case for treatment, and will send a private list of 850 names as referees to any address.—B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

ON LEVITICUS.

Of all the books of the Bible Leviticus is the text-book on holiness. All creation has been so constructed as to be the exponent of moral and spiritual truth, and beneath the sacred and sanitary legislation which God gave to Israel, lie hidden treasures of wisdom and knowledge—deep things of God—all things that pertain to life and godliness.

The first seven chapters of Leviticus contain the law of the offerings, showing how the redeemed sinner may, under whatever spiritual condition, draw nigh to God, and have communion with Him, through the blood of the Cross.

Chapters viii.—x. contain the consecration of the priests, and show that our God is a consuming fire, not only to the offering on the altar, but to those who offer strange fire before the Lord.

In chapter xi. we are taught, by means of the lower creatures, to discriminate between clean and unclean, that we may partake of the one and avoid the other. The habits of the insect and animal world teach us to discern between good and evil; and everything that walks or flies, that swims or crawls, thus becomes a teacher instructing us how to please God in our daily life.

From chapter xii. we learn that the effects of the Fall are such that we cannot bear fruit without needing the atoning blood; and Luke ii. 22—24 shows that there is no exception to this rule, even though the fruit borne be absolutely holy.

While hitherto sin has been spoken of as transgression, and as an inherent defilement, chapters xiii. and xiv. reveal it as a deeply-seated and virulent disease, to be dealt with by the Priest, and to be cleansed by the blood of atonement.

The following chapter (xv.) shows that all the issues of the flesh are unclean, a truth which is further emphasised by Ezek. xliv. 17, 18, which forbids the priests to enter the inner court girded with anything that causeth sweat, because every exudation of the flesh is unclean, and unfits for the presence of the Holy One.

The sixteenth chapter, which prescribes the ordinances of the Great Day of Atonement, foreshows how all our iniquities and all our transgressions in all our sins, as soon as they are confessed, are atoned for and for ever put away; while comparison with Heb. x. shows that no provision of the law could really purge the conscience, which could in those days only be relieved as faith saw the promises from afar, and was persuaded of them, and embraced them. Thus Abraham saw the day of Jesus, and was glad; and Moses esteemed the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt.

That the life of all flesh is in the blood, and that the shed blood of the appointed sacrifice is that which maketh an atonement for the soul, is the teaching of chapter xvii.; and the prohibition to eat the blood, under the Law, which made nothing perfect, prepares the way for the precious truth, "My flesh is the true food, and my blood is the true drink," the life-giving food and drink of the soul.

The relationships of life are used in chapter xviii. to teach us that respect for ourselves and for others which becomes those who have been redeemed by the precious blood of Christ to be the people of the Lord God.

The four chapters, xix.—xxii., contain statutes and precepts which are an amplification of the Ten Commandments and an anticipation of the Sermon on the Mount. Compare the last verse, so often repeated in Moses, and the Prophets, and the Psalms: "I am Jehovah that brought you out of the land of Egypt to be your God," with the confidence of Paul (Phil. i. 6), that He which hath begun the good work in us will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ.

Then follow in chapter xix. the Feasts of the Lord, of which the Passover and the Pentecost have fully come with their marvellous blessings, while we wait yet a little while for the fulfilment of the Feast of Tabernacles.

The pure oil-olive beaten for the light, and the flour ground fine for the holy bread, prefigure Christ as the Light and Life. The stoning of the blasphemer proves that the Lord will not hold him guiltless who taketh his name in vain (xxiv.).

The great truth that the land throughout the whole earth belongs to God, that we are leaseholders under Him, that we rebel against Him if we oppress our weaker brother, that there is a fiftieth year, of which the shorter cycle of the fifty weeks was the precursor and the promise — a jubilee year of Redemption and of everlasting joy—all this and much more is unfolded in chapter xxv. Then chapter xxvi. tells of judgment without mercy, and of mercy rejoicing against judgment, and foreshows how both shall be fulfilled. And the last chapter contains laws concerning vows and relating to things which men have sanctified to God.

Here is a divinely-inspired course of instruction and training as to our worship of God, our conduct to one another, and our use and treatment of the inferior creation; a scheme of education in religion and moral science, in history and prophecy, in personal and social purity.

We have named this last, because it is often said that it is better that children should grow up in ignorance of those things which make for purity or the reverse in our personal and relative habits of life. We ask, would there be anything incompatible with the sacred relationship of parent and child, in making the Book of Leviticus a study? And if this were done, would not the children necessarily become, in the holiest way, acquainted with all that is necessary to be known in order to personal and social purity, as well as with our relation to God, our fellow-creatures, and the inferior creation? M.

MISSION WORK AT TAMATAVE.

THE Rev. G. A. Shaw, of Tamatave, has contributed to the Pall Mall Gazette a graphic sketch of Mission life and work in the sphere of labour from which he has been so rudely expelled. Its readers will find that the faithful missionary has by no means an idle or easy post to fill. As Mr. Shaw says, from early dawn to dusk, no hour can be called his own. What with attendance on the sick at the consulting-room and dispensary, visiting the afflicted and poor of the congregation at their houses, and giving instruction in the schools, the days are all too short for the work requiring to be done.

Some features of Malagasy Christian labour appear from his account to be brighter than those of home-work. Three days a week, Mr. Shaw tells us, an early morning prayer-meeting is held, and attended by from sixty to a hundred Hovas. Such meetings used to be a lively feature in our churches at home; but modern Church life seems too respectable or too indolent for such means of grace, except in very rare instances. It is most cheering also to learn that at one o'clock p.m., daily, between twenty and thirty young men are willing to leave their business to come and be taught for a couple of hours in the Mission-schools.

It is when we see such successful work as this to be the routine of Christian endeavour in Madagascar that we realise how great is the injury inflicted on the island by French interference, and we need be at no loss to account for the Jesuit hate and subtlety which lie at the root of it all. Mr. Shaw's description of his daily round at Tamatave will do much to commend the cause of Missions to readers of his sketch. There are missionaries and missionaries abroad we know, just as there are ministers and ministers at home, but we may thank God for a noble army of devoted workers like Mr. Shaw in our Mission fields all the world over.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

THE fifth anniversary of the Mornington Hall branch of this Mission in the Hampstead-road was celebrated on Tuesday, the 9th inst. Mr. Russell Hurditch referred to the progress of the work here, and the necessity for diligently and prayerfully looking up and going forward, encouraged by what the Lord had done there, looking for still greater things this year. He referred to his experiences in places prepared for blessing, though those responsible for the work therein may not be so extremely orthodox. The secret of this power is prayer. The Lord is full of glorious power. God is prepared to bless us to any extent if we are clean, empty, fit vessels. Many are drooping under the gales of infidelity blowing over our country. Christians can strengthen them by words and by prayer, and trust in Him for a mighty blessing. He asked for a great revival of God's people in faith, zeal, and spiritual courage for the coming winter's work.

Dr. McKilliam, Mr. G. Hucklesby, and other friends gave addresses on portions of Scripture, calculated to stir up to and maintain communion with the Lord and service for Him. The Evangelistic Mission is one of those efforts that aim at reaching the masses of the great metropolis and preaching the Gospel to them, and is well-deserving of liberal support.

FAMILY RELIGION.—2.

By Rev. Dr. STANFORD, Camberwell.

LITTLE children are great mysteries. Occasionally their own parents understand them less than do the lookers-on. "The child shows the man, as the morning shows the day;" but these have not always eyes to see it. Sometimes the home estimate is merely that of instinctive, unreasoning favouritism. When at school, the youthful immaculates are too sacred to be touched by discipline. In their studies, if they fail to hit a mark, they only just miss it; if they fail to win a prize, it is only by some accident that makes defeat more glorious than victory. "Every crow thinks its own bird the whitest."

(5) Cultivate the faculty of thoughtful and discriminating judgment of character.

Sometimes a parent is unfairly severe in judgment: "Look at my children—was ever father tried as I am?" he asks. We answer, They are bad, that is the truth; but look at yourself. Remember that there is such a thing as a "bad sort," and such a possibility as the transmission of tendencies. Be hopeful; for, if you have been divinely taught, your children, who take after you, may be. Sometimes, what looks like rudeness in a child is only frankness—wanting education; what looks like boldness is only shyness—needing encouragement, and it is best not to admonish a barometer with a crowbar; what looks like obstinacy is only a strong will, and the beginning of all strength; what looks like winsome amiability is dangerous weakness, and may be the beginning of all villainies; what looks like "infidelity" is often only cutaneous; what looks like evil in the character is often not so very evil, and the faults that fret you are faults of rawness, that will cease when the fruit is ripe; what looks like want of feeling may be the sign of feeling in excess, telling of many a wet pillow, and many a longing to touch your hand in the night; what looks like the absence of religious impression may ean the presence of it. You think that the child mopes, or is out of health, or out of temper; but this is from your own lack of sympathetic insight. You are slow to perceive that the Lord has been calling him, and are ready to say, as was said to the inspired little Levite, "Lie down again, my son."

Whatever hand may have the immediate care of young souls—whether that of a parent, or of a deputy through whom the parent acts—there is the same need of this discriminating faculty, or there will be a train of sad consequences; whatever hand may strike a wrong key-note of life, it will put all the life out of tune; whatever hand may make a mistake in setting the copy, that mistake will be faithfully repeated on to the bottom of the page; whatever hand may drop the baby, although only the hand of a "nurse" (2 Sam. iv. 4), poor little Mephibosheth may be "lame in both his feet" to the end of his days; or, what would be infinitely worse, lame in all his faculties.

(6) I now invite you to consider the function of happiness in family religion. We have to guard the natural happiness of children, gently to guide it, and to use it as an instrument for alluring them into the way of life. As to the amusements that make for this happiness, I am not furnished with a prospectus; but it seems to me that the little ones, while still fresh from heaven, earth still a wonderland, and life still a novelty, are best left very much to their own devices. They are very much as they were when Jesus (I reverently say it), with eyes of laughing love, watched the airs and graces of children sitting in the market-place calling one to another, and saying, "We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned unto you, and ye have not lamented." They will weave their happiness out of simplest materials, never fear; and when you meet with a child who is hard to please, it is generally because, by stimulants to merriment, by costly novelties, or by some forcing apparatus, the stupid elders have been trying to make his happiness for him, instead of leaving him to make it for himself. Let it be understood that home, though the realm of order, is no mere Gibraltar of propriety. Far as possible, let the young artist, or naturalist, or mechanist, have facilities for making this charmed spot the centre of his own favourite experiments; let him, if it can be so, make a league with certain fowls of the air or beasts of the field; let each one who has the bias, learn singing, or the rare art of reading aloud, and let each one be trained to join in the "give and take" of talk in the family ring.

A grand help to this happiness may come from the right education of young wit and humour. Our youngsters are apt to show, in connection with the quick sense of the happy, a keen love of the laughable in life. "This," says a Cromwellian sage, "is not a good thing when a master quality, but only when it attendeth on other perfections." Yes, it is a great good only when under the law of something greater. It is the bloom on the fruit, the sparkling foam-bell on the deep river of life; but the bloom alone will not feed, the sparkle alone will not refresh, and mere froth is mere weakness. Life that is fed on flippancies will never work the work, nor fight the fight, of glorious manhood. A frivolist is a grievous disappointment to a philanthropist; he may look like a true man, but he is not one; he only reminds us, says some sage, of an abandoned hull now and then picked up at sea, with only a monkey on board. This over-valuation of the ludicrous appears to me to be a modern fashion and a growing fault. There is now, more than of old, a constant reference to, and rage for, the comic element; it marks the most popular recreations, and the most popular books; much of our serial literature is spiced with comedy, or it would nor circulate—solid subjects are voted dull, and books without amusing things in them are books without readers.

The effects of this on the juniors is bad. Accustomed to acquire their very information in the disguise of amusement, they are prone to reject that which is presented under the aspect of study and labour; the steel gradually gets rubbed out of their character, and it insensibly loses its vital spring.

This quality, however, has a blessed use, when made to grace and brighten the society of home. Unless we are forced to live unnaturally, there are daily intervals in the course of the most breathless drive, the most grinding care, and the most dreary prose, when parents and children can be companions, when the soul can put off its outdoor dress, dress of work or dress of ceremony; can stop the mill, and change the air of life; and when, the world shut out, it can resign itself to the charm of home. At such intervals, and in a responsive circle, the play of wit and humour will often aid love, aid confidence, make gentle gaiety take the place of morbid gloom, soften harshness, round off rugged angularities, and brace the strength for duty. Perhaps, even at such times, there are parents who think that all talk should be severely practical, and who are hushed into terror by the warning, more solemn to them than a tolling bell, "for every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof at the day of judgment." It should be remembered that the phrase, πᾶν ῥῆμα ἀργὸν, rendered "idle word," only means every word not working anything, or every word yielding no return. And I venture to say that the "idle words" most likely in, and dangerous to a Christian family, in holiday moments of the family life, are words about church and chapel politics; words of censure and disparagement, words on the faults and follies of Christians not present, especially those of Christians in office; words spoken by the leaders, or words which the young and tender witlings of the circle are thought prodigies of genius for speaking—these are the truly idle words; but words are not idle, even though they have some nonsense in them, which work some good result, and yield some good returns in the way of promoting happy confidence and healing rest.

Some of you may think that these are only vague generalities, with no power to help you much. You want something like a Gospel "Book of Sports," and would like one to solve subtle cases of conscience, or to answer certain questions of excruciating delicacy; you point, for instance, to crowded social entertainments kept up in your house long beyond midnight, until the thing is intolerable, and hot, perspiring humanity is forced to trickle out upon the stairs. Do such parties promote the order and happiness of families? Yes or No? You point to certain specified recreations—are they lawful? Yes or No? Is the theatre, as it now is, one of the institutions of Christianity? Yes or No?

To such questions I shall not presume to say Yes or No. It is not for such as I am, speaking to such as you, to say whether by such means our families are made happier or the contrary; or whether in this way the Church is more likely to convert the world, or the world the Church. The New Testament guides us by principles rather than by rules. "Christ institutes little, but inspires much;"* the life His Spirit gives makes its own enactments, weaves its own formations, and, on questions like these, utters its own Yes or No!

In the power of the Holy Ghost, we have to win young souls to Christ by showing that holiness is happiness, and by alluring them away from everything that can impair the delicacy of holiness. We have by daily life to contradict the devil's lie that religion is a thing of tears, and fears, and frowns. We have to show by radiant illustration that ours is not a gloomy heaven, nor a gloomy Christ, nor a gloomy grace of God; we have to show that to none is life more sweet, beautiful, and winsome than to those who have lost all fear to die; we have to convince them, not so much by what we say as by what we are, that those who are on the right side and in the true Saviour, alone know the meaning of the strain, "When the Lord turned our captivity, we were like unto them that dream; then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing; then said they among the heathen, The Lord hath done great things for them. The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are are glad." "God," said an ancient Rabbi, "invented laughter and gave it to his children." Yes, and while, by the seal of his Spirit and the solemnity of his presence, He keeps us from extremes, the Lord of Gladness smiles upon our smiles.

(7) I meant, in the next place, to have spoken of the need of prayer; but this is so obvious, the thought of it so penetrates the whole of the address, and the time is so nearly up, that I must leave you to make your own remarks on it from your own full hearts, and will now close by saying—

What you do, do quickly. To me, the memories and associations of to-day are all of a nature to deepen the solemnity of our subject, and to hurry the sense of urgency that belongs to it. In October, forty years ago, while yet a youth at College, I stood for the first time in your old Harvey-lane pulpit, and I feel as if still alive in that keen moment. The very words of the opening hymn still thrill me with the marvellous music of living souls, rolling and swelling like "the sound of many waters." I see the young faces, and hear the young voices round me. At another flash I am back in your old Bradgate Park, riding about through sweeps and brakes of tall tossing ferns touching the saddle; the rabbits are scurrying off, and the deer are stopping to look at me before they turn and waft away; spectral-looking hawthorns and great shells of oaks, like caves of touchwood, stand all about; old roots lie in serpent rolls and heaves above the ground, and strike through splits in grey granite boulders. Here the ground suddenly shelves away by the side of me into a deep winding gorge, and the horse's feet are on a level with the tree tops that grow down there; down through the openings of the foliage I see waters as they flash and prattle over the stones below. Up and up, on the other side, I see gallery over gallery of trees rising into the still, upper solitudes of sunlight, dotted with gorse and bracken. Here, among the oak leaves and mosses, was once sheltered that pure spring primrose, Lady Jane Grey; in yonder old house, Roger Ascham tried to make a Greek and Latin machine of her; and perhaps in this green glen she sat to read Plato. But stop—where am I? This is a dream, and where are the old realities? Where are the families that were then the life of Leicester? The fathers—where are they? Where are the children? Their childhood "held its perfection but a little moment," in ten years' time they were all gone—gone, not all into the world of Light, but gone from parental training—each girl gone into a woman, each boy into a man, as a bud goes into a flower, and the dawn into the day. The thought makes me say that, if you would be blessings to those who are now children, you must "take time by the forelock." I am not commissioned, this morning, to address any one who has put off parental work until the child is nearly old enough to be under a roof of his own, but only to make an appeal to those whose children are now little. To such I say, Your time is now; and it may be, now or never. We read, in Gothic story, that once when a king was setting out for the wars, an old knight met him at the castle gate, mourning that his own limbs were now too old for the brunt of battle, but comforted because he had the honour of presenting for the service of the state, instead of himself, his eight brave sons. In the name of Christ, and in the strength of God, be faithful to your charge; then, in answer to your prayer, and in benediction on your deeds, "Instead of thy fathers," and instead of thyself, "shall be thy children, whom thou mayest make princes in all the earth."

YOUNG MENS' CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, 23, SAVILLE-ROW.—A very interesting and successful ten-days' Mission has been sustained for the spiritual good of young men at Burlington-hall, 23, Saville-row, Regent-street. Mr. E. J. Kennedy, and Mr. Stanley P. Smith, very kindly offered their services for the first ten days of October, assisted as they were by their friend Mr. Deane. It is estimated that over 1000 young men attended the Mission, and a very large proportion of them stayed to the after-meetings for prayer and conversation.

THE CONGREGATIONAL UNION.

THE Congregational Union has just held its autumnal session at Sheffield, under the able presidency of Dr. Fairbairn. Numbers, enthusiasm, and rare eloquence combined to make the meetings memorable and successful in a high degree. The Chairman's address was marked by the peculiar power of thought and utterance which Dr. Fairbairn is well known to possess, and occupied nearly two hours in delivery, not a few passages being then omitted from the reading. Its subject was "Christianity in the Nineteenth Century," the theme being mainly viewed from the intellectual and political sides, rather than the distinctly spiritual or evangelical. As a literary contribution to the religious thought of the age it is of special merit, and sparkles with brilliant points and striking aphorisms.

In dealing with the attitude of the age to religion, Dr. Fairbairn cannot be said to have taken an optimist view of matters, although he by no means spoke despairingly. He admits that both in the cultivated and industrial classes of society, there is a sad amount of estrangement from the religion of Christ. "Aggressive belligerency, or finely-salted satire against religion, makes men heroes and favourites in what is esteemed the cultivated society of England." "The attitude of the labouring classes is more generally and more deplorably one of estrangement than that of the cultivated." "What marks the religion of our day is the loss of the masses."

In making practical suggestions to meet these difficulties, the two main propositions were to cultivate and employ much more highly and fully the intellectual faculty in the ministry of the Christian Church. "If the movement (against Christianity) be intellectual, the intellect alone can meet and master it." The other suggestion was that the Churches should enter more heartily into the political problems of the times, more especially those which bear upon the rights and liberties of the working classes; property, and the re-distribution of land being instanced among the topics claiming earnest attention.

How far such lines of action are likely to prove remedies for the sad alienation of men of all grades from the faith of the Gospel, is a question open to much difference of opinion. Many of us, while ready to do all we can for promoting needed social reforms, are yet firm in our conviction that nothing but a return to Apostolic purity of doctrine, accompanied with Pentecostal fervour and power, can suffice to bring either the cultivated or the unlearned to the obedience of faith. The Apostles were neither brilliant scholars nor ardent politicians, yet they succeeded in causing Christianity to triumph in every part of the world, and to draw largely from every class of society.

There are two kinds of evangelicalism,—that which is weak-kneed and emasculated, a thing merely of ism and sentiment, and that which is true and strong, full of Christ, and tending to practical Christianity. The latter alone is worthy the name. The former is alike unworthy of God and impotent in its influence on men. Dr. Parker well said in his address at Sheffield on this subject:—

"The only way to preach evangelically is, in my opinion, to live evangelically. Evangelical preaching is in the spirit; it is in the tone; it is in the mysterious power called unction, as well as in the literal word and the sharply-defined sentence. How can he preach forgiveness who never forgave? How can he preach sacrifice who never suffered for another?"

We want on all sides a turning to New Testament modes of thought and action. Not only must we have this in the ministry, but also in the Church, if we are to bring men over to allegiance to Christian truth. We quote once more from Dr. Parker's address at the Union on this point, his words appealing alike to the heart and head with no little force and truth:—

"I want an evangelical pew as well as an evangelical pulpit. I have ventured sometimes to say that the pew makes the pulpit; there is a serious and substantial sense in which that is true. I am not going to argue it as a mere matter of phraseology, but we are all conscious, we who occupy the pulpit, of a mysterious and formative influence exercised upon us by the atmosphere of the pew. And hence I would venture to say that some of you who have got on in the world are not so fond of evangelical preaching as you used to be. I do not profess to explain the mystery; but you do not listen as you used to listen; you have been corrupted as to your simplicity; you have turned aside after forbidden paths, it may be. You used to pant after evangelical doctrine 'as the hart panteth after the water brooks.' Let that day return! When the pew is right the pulpit cannot long be wrong in this matter; when the people come thirsting for the water of life the water of life must be supplied; and when that combination takes place—that holy union of aspiration on the part of the pew, and response on the part of the pulpit, the old Sabbath days will return—sweet, bright, gracious days—and the Church will feel that after all has been said and done in the way of controversy the old truth remains,

'For faith has yet its Olivet,
And love its Galilee.'"

The various sectional meetings of the Union were sustained by a spirit of devout earnestness as well as business tact and practical purpose.

RELIGION AND VICE.

WE have need that some new prophet should arise, who, fresh from a vision of the holiness of God and of his law, should reveal in true and unvarnished phrase the hidden iniquities of our time. Speaking as the mouthpiece of the Lord, Isaiah warned in no mincing tones the rulers of Jerusalem in his day, who thought themselves safe in their covenant with death and their agreement with hell. Jeremiah, with equal plainness of speech, declared that among the people of God were found wicked men who became great and waxed rich, though their houses were full of deceit; he bewailed the wonderful and horrible thing that prophets, priests, and people were of one accord in their evil deeds. Micah inveighs against the heads of the house of Jacob, and the princes of the house of Israel, who build up Zion with blood and Jerusalem with iniquity.

These thoughts are suggested by an incident that has just been brought to light at Uxbridge—an incident, unhappily, that has its counterpart, we have reason to know, in other towns. At Uxbridge, a trustee of one of the largest Dissenting places of worship is the owner of the worst dens of infamy in the place. This abominable outrage upon religion has been scathingly alluded to by Mr. Alfred S. Dyer in a recent number of The Sentinel, and also in a religious address delivered at Uxbridge on "Religion and Knowledge."

Landlords who knowingly allow their property to be used as houses of ill-fame, are morally as criminal as the tenants, and we shall be glad to see the day when they are recognised as being legally as criminal also.

MR. G. T. GILLINGHAM wishes us to state that his address is 2, James-street, Linton-road, Barking, Essex.

BOYS AT SCHOOL.

MR. R. A. PROCTOR, in a recent issue of Knowledge, discourses on "Our Boys at School," and has some wise and pertinent words on the necessity for seeing to it that masters have other qualifications for their work than merely those which pertain to mental training. He says:—

"Unfortunately the masters in our schools are not tested or examined at all as to their fitness for the most important part of their work. We know that masters set to teach mathematics, classics, modern languages, and so forth, have a certain degree of familiarity with these subjects; for they have passed certain examinations in them. But we have no means of knowing beforehand that a master who may have chief or sole charge of our boys at school has learned to control his temper as well as to construe Greek and Latin, to teach honesty by his example as effectively as he may be able to deal with mathematical examples on the blackboard, and to be fair and just as well as to be a ready speaker in French and German."

The influence of school life upon our children must be enormous, and the power of their teachers to make this good and wholesome, or the reverse, is simply incalculable. A master whose morals are lax and low in their tone, draws to his own level all the boys in his charge, save the few who may either have exceptionally strong characters leaning to right, or who come under very vigorous counter-influences elsewhere. Directly and indirectly a worthy teacher influences worthily his scholars, while the exact opposite is also true on the other side. This is too much lost sight of, and indeed the cause of moral education needs to be advocated with all the force and fervour which can be brought to bear upon it.

Parents do well to make strict inquiry as to the tone which prevails in the schools to which their sons are sent, both as to their companions and their teachers. As Mr. Proctor says:—

"Fathers should talk to their boys over such matters, not to listen to mere fault-finding, but to find in converse with them what sort of tone prevails among their fellows. Of course with many boys such a course fails. But an honest, manly boy, who regards his father as a friend, not as 'the governor,' will very soon show, more clearly than he himself perhaps imagines, the nature of his school surroundings."

And again with truth as to the character of the masters:—

"Though there can be no public examinations to test this, inquiry among the boys will often disclose a good deal. But if previous inquiry has not been possible, friendly talk with sons about their school life will soon show any one who understands boys' ways the real position of affairs. If there are many 'mean fellows' among the boys, fellows who let others be punished for their offences, who cringe when they are not bullying and bully when they are not cringing, be sure there is something wrong among the masters. Such evidence is far better than actual complaints of unfairness on the masters' part—for boys, like men, may complain without cause."

One source of the difficulty found in training families to habits of obedience and filial respect, may be found in the lack of confidence which often exists between parents and children. The former cannot be too anxious and careful from earliest years to gain and keep the confidence of the latter. On points connected with morality, both as to its principle and practice, there is frequently a reserve maintained which is foolish and hurtful in the extreme. The consequences which follow all offences against purity and modesty of demeanour, as well as those against truth and honesty, should be more fully and plainly pointed out. Some parents shrink, through false delicacy, from cautioning their children at home against evils on which lessons of a very practical character are being learned abroad; and, in many cases, boys are deterred by the reticence and reserve of their parents from speaking of sins and temptations to which they are exposed, and from which they need to be protected by home teaching and parental warning.

Too much must not be expected of masters, we admit; they cannot take the place of parents and teachers as well; they have a right to expect home influence to be on their side, and to sustain their efforts, but, at the same time, no parent should entrust his child to the care of a master who he has not good ground to believe will be as likely to teach by example and precept the principles of purity, uprightness, and truth, as those of science or of art.

We cannot expect that all our schoolmasters will be decided Christians, much as this is to be desired on every ground. It is impracticable in the present state of things; but the least we can expect, and ought to regard as positively essential, is that they are men whose spirit and conduct inspire confidence and respect in those placed in their charge. As a rule, this has been eminently so in our public schools, and to a large extent in our Government schools as well; but in more private schools, such as thousands of the middle class depend upon, the difficulty of ascertaining the fact, and of ensuring a sufficient provision for the need, is much greater. The work is a noble one, worthy of noble men, and it is a wonder more men of earnest piety, and robust moral calibre, do not seek it, not for a livelihood so much as to benefit society. Masters such as we have in view, and they are to be met with amongst us, cannot be too highly valued and encouraged.

In some schools, what we regard as a false code of honour is allowed to prevail in relation to the discovery of moral evils and the exposure of temptations. A spirit of talebearing and sneaking is contemptible enough, and to be discouraged on all sides, but it is equally important for boys to be taught that to cover up real evil and to condone vice is to become a partaker of it. By all means prevent the miserable habit which the meaner aspects of human nature lead some to contract—of saving themselves from punishment by exposing others; let it be seen that to be a sneak is to be a coward, and to merit scorn, but let it also be understood that impurity, profanity, and falsehood, are crimes to be severely dealt with, and evils none are to wink at or regard as secrets to be covered and hid. We have had many noble examples of schoolmasters such as we desire to see our children copying and emulating, and we have them still, but there is ample room for a larger number to come to the front, and the problems of the times as to "our boys" cannot be solved without closer attention being paid to the moral as well as mental qualifications of "our schoolmasters."

GOSPEL VAN WORK.

BUXTON has just had a mighty blessing through the visit of the Gospel-van, with its two evangelists, Messrs. Wharton and Weaver, who have been labouring here for about five weeks. Night after night crowds have gathered round the van to hear the message of salvation, and notwithstanding the cold nights people of all grades of society have gathered around the van to listen to Gospel addresses from these evangelists, and the result has been some most wonderful conversions.

Through the inclement weather the van services were carried on in the old Town Hall from September 29 to the 4th inst. They left Buxton on the 5th inst. On the above Lord's day evening no less than some twelve or fourteen persons got up in the meeting to be prayed for, most of whom found peace before leaving.

For the Young.

SAY THE SAME TO JESUS.

MANY of my young friends know that I have an association numbering now upwards of two thousand members, for supporting two army Scripture readers, and many of you belong to it. I often learn many lessons from your letters to me, and find that you help me quite as much as I help you sometimes by the thoughts we exchange on paper! Only a short time ago I had a letter from one desiring to become one of my collectors; and, as I think she quite unconsciously teaches us a great and comforting spiritual truth, I am going to tell you what she said to me.

"My dear Mrs. Poole,—I am only a little cripple, twelve years old, and I have not much sense, but if you will take me just as I am, I would like to become a member of your 'association.'"

I wonder if you can guess what I am going to say now? I am going to say this: that just as simply as my little friend told me her case, and asked me if I would accept her just as she was—frail in body, and without anything to recommend her—so every one of my young friends may make application to the Lord Jesus. Good news has reached us: that God wants hearts to love Him, and sinners to be saved; but you must make personal application to Jesus. It does not matter how young you are, or whether you are sick in soul, or feel that you know very little about the things of God. Jesus is quite ready to take you as you are, and to make you one of his "loved ones and his own." Just try Him.

I was only too glad to write back and tell my little friend that I welcomed her into the ranks of my collectors, and I think my heart went out to her far more because she was a cripple, and helpless and weak. Jesus is just the same, and ten thousand times better. I believe He feels twice as much pity and love and sympathy for the poor sinners who say to Him that they are "blind and naked and miserable, and have need of all things." He welcomes them, oh! so tenderly, into the ranks of his redeemed, pities all their weaknesses, and washes away all their sins.

It is a beautiful thing to come in just such simple faith to Jesus. I often wonder why we do not treat Him in the same way as we do an earthly friend. Why do we not tell him that we want to be saved, but don't know how; that we long to love Him, but find our hearts are hard and cold; that we wish to serve Him, but the way seems dark and difficult; but that if He will take us as we are and make us what He wants us to be, we are glad and willing to give ourselves to Him? He would say "Yes" so quickly! Will you say the same to Jesus as Ada said to me? And Jesus will say the same to you as I said to my little applicant.

SADLER'S WELLS THEATRE.

WILLIAM CATLIN, of Clerkenwell, thus writes: "The Theatre Services Committee will not open this theatre this winter, and, hearing that the Secularists were in treaty for Sunday concerts, I have secured the building on my own responsibility for six months, Sunday afternoons and evenings, at a rental of £5 weekly. We have been having some extraordinary outdoor meetings near the theatre during the past summer. I have no doubt we shall do well in the winter months. I am willing to give my services, as will Mr. Newth, and others associated with me, for Gospel testimony, but my limited means will not allow me to bear the heavy expenses. There are many that will esteem it a privilege to help me as soon as we can make it known." Contributions may be sent to the office of this paper. Two gentlemen have each given £10. The address of Mr. Catlin is 17, Claremont-square, Pentonville.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN IRELAND.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.]

ARRIVAL OF THE EVANGELISTS.

AFTER a five-months' visit to their native land, Messrs. Moody and Sankey have again landed on our shores, and are busy at their blessed work as heralds of the Cross. Most readers of THE CHRISTIAN will have seen in the daily papers the announcement of their arrival off Queenstown, on Tuesday morning, the 9th instant, by the good steamship Alaska, the vessel in which they made the homeward passage last April. True to her world-wide reputation as a swift ploughman of the Atlantic main, the Alaska brought the evangelists back to us with all speed. Notwithstanding a severe and adverse gale encountered during the latter half of the voyage, she ran from land to land in two and a half hours under seven days. It is worth noting that the American mails, landed at Queenstown by the tender that took the evangelists and other passengers to the shore, were delivered in London on the morning of the 10th—the most rapid case of transmission yet known in the history of trans-Atlantic postal communication.

As the tender, under full pressure of steam, glided through the beautiful bay of Queenstown, and approached the quay, a goodly and expectant company of friends and onlookers gathered around the lauding point. The evangelistic party, consisting of Mr. Moody, Mr. Sankey, Major Whittle, Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan, —besides Col. Hall, of Cork, Mr. Fowler, of Dublin, and others who had gone out to the Alaska to meet them—received a hearty welcome as they stepped on the shores of "Old Ireland," after having successfully passed the ordeal of the inexorable Customs officers. They looked little the worse for having been rather roughly "rocked in the cradle of the deep," though I believe some of them had suffered pretty severely from the much execrated mal de mer. Strange to say, however, Mr. Moody, who is usually a very disloyal subject of King Neptune, this time escaped almost scatheless; whether this was due to the fact that he closely courted his berth during the greater part of the voyage, or that he indulged in homœopathic doses of petroleum, I wot not: I only record the gratifying fact. Mrs. Moody, Mrs. Sankey, and their respective families proceeded to Liverpool by the Alaska, thence to London direct. Many readers will regret to hear that Mr. Moody's elder son, Willie, is still in doubtful health. It is hoped that a residence through the coming winter at some salubrious southern seaside spot may carry him through the critical crisis and thus relieve the anxious minds of his parents. Mrs. Moody has gone with her family to reside for the present at Brighton.

A short stay of two hours in Queenstown was devoted to social converse with the friends who had come to greet the evangelists and to bodily refreshment, so welcome after the buffetting and discomforts of the voyage. The little circle that surrounded the hospitable board in the Queen's Hotel was thoroughly representative; it may be said to have symbolised in miniature the wonderful unity of spirit and of action that the work of our American brethren has done so much to bring about in these isles, where conservatism and isolation among Christians have too long had sway. There were representatives of the Episcopalian, Presbyterian, Methodist, Friends, Brethren, and probably other branches of the Christian community—a true evangelical alliance.

At two o'clock the party proceeded by rail, skirting the banks of the stately but sluggish Lee, and reaching Cork in time to meet other friends interested in the coming ten days' Mission in that city. Here the same cordial reception was extended to Mr. Moody and his coadjutors. Such a practical union of Christians called by different names has, I believe, never before been known in Cork. The arrangements there are being made on the most complete and liberal scale, when one considers the shortness of the time over which the campaign is to extend. It was not deemed advisable to engage the structure used for the Cork Exhibition, which closed last week, but the capacity of the Assembly-rooms has been enlarged at a considerable outlay so as to accommodate an extra thousand hearers. There was scarce time for a very cursory glance by several of the party at the most interesting collection of Irish and other industrial products in the Exhibition building, when the railway journey had to be resumed in order to reach Limerick, where the Mission was to open the following day. Mr. Fowler, of Dublin, who has taken an active part in organising this first visit of the evangelists to the south of Ireland, accompanied them from Cork. At Limerick they were met by two active members of the local Committee, Messrs. Ferguson and Fitt, and were provided with comfortable quarters at the George Hotel. The hearts of Mr. Moody, Mr. Sankey, and their fellow-labourers were greatly cheered and encouraged by the warm Irish welcome thus accorded to them by the Christians of these towns. It was a happy augury of the still more precious and unmistakable tokens of Divine favour that were yet to come in connection with the actual work itself.

THE LIMERICK MEETINGS.

Limerick lies in the fertile valley watered by the blue Shannon, about 45 miles from the confluence of that noble river with the broad Atlantic; it is the capital of the South-west, and is a city of no small fame and renown in the annals of the nation. Its corporate history yields the palm of antiquity, I believe, only to the great metropolis of the Empire. It offered a determined defence to several military sieges in the troubled times of the past, and one of its historic landmarks is a stone that commemorates "the violated treaty." Poor Ireland cannot be said to have yet emerged from her troubles, but she has fallen on happier times at last than those warlike days of old. As these lines are written, the good old city is being besieged in another sense by earnest ambassadors of the Cross of Christ from a foreign country, but the people seem to be capitulating without even a show of resistance. The words of the Lord, which the evangelists are proclaiming, standeth sure, and there will be no violation, on his part at any rate, of that covenant of mercy and peace that has been sealed and ratified by the death and resurrection of his dear Son.

Limerick is not only one of the most ancient, but one of the most Catholic cities in Ireland. The Protestant population stands in the proportion of about one to ten. It will therefore be understood that the local friends who for years past have desired a visit from Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey had unusual difficulties to encounter in paving the way for their reception. These indeed came as much, if not more, from the lukewarmness or latent opposition of influential Protestants as from any other cause. Nothing daunted, these brave Limerick men, fired with a holy zeal for the good of their fellow-citizens and the honour of their God, boldly met and successfully encountered every obstacle. The local theatre, after a long and troublesome negociation, was secured for the meetings; a choir was formed and drilled: cheap trains were arranged for, and everything was done that could be supposed to contribute to the success of the work. Of a truth God has signally rewarded the faith and courage of his servants. Speaking from a considerable experience of the labours of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, I can confidently say that nowhere, under the most favouring conditions, has their message seemed to secure from the very outset a readier entrance into the hearts and sympathies of the people.

There was indeed an air of curiosity and apparent indifference about the congregation—not a very numerous one—that gathered in the theatre for the opening meeting on Wednesday afternoon. In the evening, however, the theatre showed another sight. Pit and stage, boxes and galleries, were packed with an audience that appeared to represent every social stratum of the community, and that listened to speech and song as for dear life.

The first meeting over, Mr. Moody invited all who were so disposed to remain for another half hour or so. They needed no pressure; scarcely a soul moved. It seemed as if a power greater than any mere human attraction had chained the people to their seats. Mr. Sankey sang again, and Mr. Moody still further expounded the way of salvation, ringing the Gospel changes on the words "receive," "believe," "take," and "trust." The place was still packed, and personal dealing was out of the question, but when Mr. Moody applied the old question: "Who will trust and not be afraid?" the responses were neither few nor faint. It was truly a wonderful sight, taking all the surrounding circumstances into view, and proved again that in the matter of salvation there is neither Jew nor Gentile, Catholic nor Protestant; the key of God's unspeakable love, in the gift of his Son, fits and is able to unlock the heart of every man. I have no means of knowing, and I do not care to inquire, what proportion of those present were professed adherents of the Romish Church: there must necessarily have been many. Mr. Moody is too wise and experienced a preacher to rouse needless antagonisms by referring pointedly to those matters—though they are far from being of small importance—that separate so widely the religious portion of the Irish people, especially in the South. In his eye all are in the same category — human sinners needing a Divine Saviour. It is true that in his first discourse on Wednesday afternoon, he emphasised very strongly the utter impossibility of obtaining salvation by any form of good works or self-denial; but it was done in such a way as to show that this fatal mistake may be committed by Protestants and Romanists alike. So there was no room for objection or dissent from any quarter, and none was manifested; whatever may have been felt by those who listened to the offer of salvation to all, without the intervention of priest or clergyman. Thus the first day's work of the evangelists in Catholic Limerick was a genuine triumph of the good old Gospel; though it came through a channel that some of the local ecclesiastics have not scrupled to stigmatise as "unauthorized and uncalled for."

THE SECOND DAY'S MEETINGS

Were of still deeper interest. In the afternoon there were very few vacant corners. Mr. Moody's subject was, "The Promises of Christ"—the promise of rest to the weary, of reception to the sincere and trusting penitent, and of confession before the Father for all who boldly confess his name before men. Again the congregation sat as if spell-bound, while the speaker told out in glowing words the story of a Saviour's love and pity and power. Man's stupidity to seeking rest from earthly sources, his slowness in drink of the one and only satisfying stream, his cowardice in cowering before the sneer or the glance of an erring mortal like himself—all were faithfully portrayed; but the wounds were probed with such a gentle and tender hand, and the words of warning were uttered in such sympathetic tones, that the hearers were melted into acquiescence, and it was hard work for those most indifferent, or those most familiar with his theme, to stay the rising tear. Mr. Moody's use of simple but touching incidents, culled chiefly from his own ample store of personal experiences, was most striking and skilful. Oh that every preacher of the glorious Gospel would imitate the evangelist as he imitates his Master in this free use of illustrative, homely, and parabolical speech. How much greater would then be their influence for good over those who are unmoved by the high-sounding phrases of cut-and-dried theological formulæ. Again the congregation remained en masse for the thirty minutes' prayer-meeting that followed, and quite a large number —unusually large for the size of the audience— stood in their places at the invitation of the evangelist, indicating their desire for an interest in the united petitions of the meeting.

THURSDAY EVENING.

I need not unduly occupy your space with details of the evening meeting of Thursday, though it was better than all that had gone before. Following up his theme of the previous evening, which was "Christ seeking and saving the lost," Mr. Moody spoke on "the sinner seeking Christ." After the experience of these two days nobody can dare to say that the people of Limerick are not anxious or willing to hear the good news of the Gospel. They got a full meal from Mr. Moody's first address, but their appetites only seemed to be sharpened, and almost all waited as before for the second meeting and second talk. Then they were dismissed, but a good sprinkling still abode in the theatre for personal conversation. This evening the first overflow meeting was held in an adjacent chapel. Here Major Whittle spoke, while Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan sang the Gospel to those who could find no room in the larger building.

It is very difficult for anyone who has endeavoured so often to describe "these wondrous gatherings day by day," to coin fresh phrases in which to convey a just conception of the part played by Mr. Sankey's share in the services. Nobody, of course, can say how far the people are drawn to the meetings by the world-wide fame of the singing evangelist, and the less familiar method of presenting the truth which Mr. Sankey has done so much to popularise. But it is easy enough to discern the great influence he wields over the masses by the exercise of his unique gifts in this direction. At Limerick he has sung, with all the old-time pathos and heart-moving power, such well established favourites as "The Ninety and Nine," and "Almost Persuaded," besides other and newer melodies that are fast gaining a sure foothold in the hearts of the people. His rendering on one occasion of "My ain Countrie" was to my mind especially fine and touching for one who is not "to the manner born" in threading the verbal mazes of the Doric dialect. The Limerick folks are fortunate in having been the first to enjoy, in addition to Mr. Sankey's song, that of Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan. Your readers know that Mr. McGranahan is the composer of many of the best and most striking Gospel melodies in current use. It is a privilege of no common kind to hear him, with his good wife, sing such of his own songs as "The Crowning Day," "I shall be satisfied," and "Behold what Manner of Love." I never tire in sounding the praises of this last song, the words of which, as in the case of many other of Mr. McGranahan's melodies, are written by Major Whittle. I hardly expect to hear on this earth anything more inspiring or comforting than this Gospel ballad as it was sung on Thursday in the Limerick theatre by Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan and Mr. Sankey, unless another capable and sympathetic voice can be found to complete the quartette. I trust some gifted Christian singer in the Metropolis will be forthcoming to supply this lack, so that such grand utterances may have their full and legitimate effect.

The noon prayer-meeting in the Protestant Association Hall has been under the charge of Major Whittle, the singing being conducted by Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan. To growing companies of Christians the former has addressed day by day stirring words of counsel and exhortation, and the spirit of importunate, believing prayer has been manifest. On Thursday and Friday evenings overflow meetings had to be held. The number of those who thus gathered in the Methodist Chapel was not large, but there was real saving work done. Major Whittle was the preacher. Mr. Sankey and Mr. McGranahan with his wife all took their turn in sounding out the Gospel message through the channel of song.

I have already hinted that some of the Limerick Protestant ecclesiastics have frowned on the movement; nevertheless the attendance at the various meetings of clergy and ministers from different parts has been very good. These friends, when leading the prayers of the congregation, have shown the heartiest sympathy with the work, and the anxious desire that it should leave a lasting impression on the town and neighbourhood.

If any thought that the harmony of the meetings would be disturbed, they have been agreeably disappointed. The Romish clergy in the city have adopted another way of showing their disapproval of the American intrusion — if, indeed, their action can be thus construed, which is perhaps doubtful. The "Redemptorist Fathers" have been holding nightly special services in their fine church, situated a few minutes' walk from the theatre, and in the same street. Curious to see how their Mission was conducted, I attended the Friday evening meeting, and was somewhat surprised to find the church almost filled with some 2000 men and boys, a great proportion of them being in their working dress, and belonging, apparently, to the artisan class. The service was conducted by two of the "Fathers," one reciting the prayers and the other preaching the sermon. The prayers seemed to an uninitiated stranger like myself nothing but a long monotonous gabble in some unknown tongue. Although quite near the pulpit I could catch little except when the officiating priest, at frequent intervals, repeated the Lord's Prayer at a fearful and wonderful speed; here and there I could make out a phrase about the rosary of the Blessed Virgin, or some such expression. In their loud and frequent responses, the vast congregation always appeared to begin with "Holy Mary, mother of God." Throughout the prayers both priest and people were assiduously telling their strings of beads. The hymns, sung with great heartiness to simple tunes, were chiefly in praise of "Mary Queen of heaven and star of the sea," or of "Jesus, Mary and Joseph, the holy family."

The sermon, an altogether different affair, was preached by a tall, spare, ruddy-faced "Father," whose clear, musical voice rang sharply and distinctly through the aisles of the great building. Both as to manner and matter it was well nigh unexceptionable, and might, with the exclusion of very few sentences, have been declaimed from the most evangelical pulpit in the land. Taking for his text the words of the ancient preacher, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom," the speaker set forth, in simple, homely phrase, but with much earnestness of manner and intonation, the sovereignty of God, and his claims upon our reverence and love. He entreated the "dear men," as he repeatedly called them, to be serious and real in their religious confessions and professions. "Away with mockery!" he cried; "the blood of Christ is no mockery; it is a real thing." He told them they would be judged according to the high privileges they had enjoyed; perhaps no people on the face of the earth were so highly favoured as they. If they repented not nor forsook all grievous, mortal sin, the benighted Chinese and Japanese would rise up in the day of judgment, and condemn them. He was very strong in his denunciation of swearing, intemperance, immodesty, and impurity; including, however, among these "mortal sins" "the wilful loss of mass." In closing his remarkable and powerful discourse, to which on the whole I could not help listening with the most unfeigned interest and delight, he made an earnest and impassioned appeal especially to the young men before him to lead chaste and beautiful lives, and so be worthy of the Catholic Church. A really virtuous young man, though he might be poor and despised, was like a very angel walking on the earth. "My dear young men, never again commit a mortal sin if you are wise. If any of you have done so return to our Lord Jesus Christ, who loves everyone of you and died for everyone of you, and whose arms are outstretched to give you mercy and pardon. Oh, my dear young men, never more offend Him. Say, 'O God, our Creator, we will not offend Thee; O God, our Redeemer, we will ever love Thee; O Holy Spirit of God, live in our hearts and keep us from sin.'" After finishing his discourse the eloquent "Father" offered a brief and beautiful prayer —a marvellous contrast to the introductory part of the service; only it concluded with a wish that they might all be united to Jesus, Mary and Joseph, of the Holy Family. While pondering, as I passed out with the surging crowd, on the curious mixture of truth and error to which the congregation had been treated, I could not but be thankful for the burning words of exhortation from the pulpit, and for the reverent attention with which they had been heard. Very few seemed to remain for the "confessions," which had been previously announced to be held "up to ten o'clock." I was rather surprised and staggered, however, to find that on regaining the outer air nearly every youth commenced to whistle, and many of them lighted their pipes before they passed through the gates into the street.

The local press has been very friendly with reference to the work. The Limerick Chronicle, published on the same evening as the evangelists arrived, had a very appreciative and heartily expressed leading article on the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. The same paper in its next issue spoke of them as "these eminent missionaries," and was loud in its praise of Mr. Sankey's song. The following paragraph is clipped from its report of the second evening meeting in the theatre:—

"Mr. Moody delivered a powerfully telling address, in which his characteristic earnestness was more than exemplified. The preacher selected for his theme 'The promises of Christ,' and seldom has the subject been treated in a more masterly or effective manner. The result of Mr. Moody's appeal seemed to go like an arrow direct to the hearts of his numerous hearers, and about fifty persons, by standing up, manifested an anxious desire to be made the recipients of those promises which the heartiness of the speaker had placed before them. The meeting closed amid universal expressions of feeling, which apparently nothing could suppress. It is evident that the interest in the Mission services is momentarily increasing, and it is anticipated that the meeting which will be held in the Theatre Royal this evening will still further exhibit the marvellous success which has already attended the advent of the American revivalists to this city."

LAST SUNDAY'S MEETING.

Sunday was a memorable day in Limerick. It saw a development of the revival that will probably prove to be its best and most lasting fruit. I refer to the awakening of young men. In the early morning, despite the rain, which descended with a persistency that seems peculiar to Limerick, a goodly company of people gathered in the theatre. Mr. Moody's address, on qualifications for Christian work, to all appearance mightily moved the meeting. The impression was deepened by Mr. Sankey's singing of "Nothing but leaves," and other pieces. In the afternoon the theatre was as full as could be. Taking for his topic the "Saving of Noah in the Ark," Mr. Moody sketched out the way of salvation with marvellous clearness and force. As before, the vast crowd showed no inclination to move till they were formally dismissed.

This feature of the Limerick meetings has been most remarkable throughout. It seems as if the throngs were hungering and thirsting for the Word of Life, and refused to be satisfied with one address from the evangelist, or even two. After Mr. Moody had spoken, Major Whittle further, and with delightful simplicity, explained the Gospel. Then the young men were invited to cross the street to a meeting specially for themselves in an upper room of Mr. Russell's store, the former residence of Lord Limerick, once the ball-room of this baronial mansion. The room, holding nearly two hundred young men, was truly consecrated by the proceedings of Sunday, the like of which have never before been heard or even dreamed of by the most sanguine Christian in the city. The fine young fellows flocked into the building like bees. At the call of Major Whittle they rose up in quick succession, sometimes in batches, and confessed Christ. Most of them said they had decided to accept salvation at the Friday evening meeting. Others, with trembling voice and tearful eye, declared their present anxiety of soul, or determination to start out at once on the Christian course. It would be quite impossible to depict in words the intense interest of the occasion. A similar, if not still more striking scene, was witnessed in the same place in the evening. At the same time Mr. Moody continued to address the people in the theatre, and a third after-meeting was proceeding in the Wesleyan Chapel. There is great joy in many hearts and homes in Limerick town, as the result of these five days' services. As one experienced friend remarked, the Word has taken deeper hold in these few days than it does in many places in as many weeks. Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan stay on for some days.

PARIS CITY MISSION.

A CONFERENCE of the friends and supporters of this Mission was held on Tuesday week, in the drawing-rooms of Rev. Thomas Baron Hart, who kindly gave up his usual Bible reading in order to offer a friendly greeting to Mr. J. M. Weylland, by whose efforts the Paris City Mission was originated and has been chiefly sustained. The funds being now at a low ebb, pecuniary supplies are much needed, to prevent the immediate dismissal of one or more of the seven missionaries at present working in Paris.

Mr. Weylland assured the friends in Paris of the sympathy felt by Lord Shaftesbury and others in the present difficulties of the Mission, and trusted that the present trial would lead to earnest prayer to God.

M. Jules Bresson explained the work carried on in his district at Belleville by the Medical Mission in the Iron Room, the Gospel being read and explained to the patients who wait their turn at the dispensary. Several instances of real conversion were given of poor Roman Catholics who had found Christ in the Word. Many who were formerly indifferent have been led to attend the meetings. Others now frequent the meetings of Mr. McAll, and by means of home visitation, the good impressions produced are followed up, and yield fruit by souls being brought to decision for Christ.

M. Hahnemann described how he took three children out of the street to begin a Sunday-school—next time he had thirteen, then twenty-five, until a good school was established. He was more than ever convinced that home visitation was the very best means of winning the Parisian for Christ.

M. Blaess described his work amongst the shopkeepers, also the workmen and the concierges, who were most desirous to read the tracts, carefully selected for them. In this district he visits 800 families regularly; and many indifferent Protestants had been stirred up to become living Christians.

Two members of the Paris Committee stated their deepened interest in the work, and several instances were given of conversion having resulted from following up impressions made at meetings by means of home visits. Many who speak French very imperfectly have been made a blessing by their earnestness.

The Committee finds itself in such a critical financial condition, that unless assistance may come at once for the funds of the work, we shall be forced to dismiss some of our faithful successful missionaries at the very moment when many more workers are needed and called for.

DORKING.—The open-air work in the town and surrounding villages has been most encouraging during the season. About 100 open-air meetings have been held, and thousands of Gospel books and tracts distributed. A very successful eight days' Mission closed the summer's work at the village of Westcott. Large numbers gathered to hear the Gospel, and many professed to rest in Christ for pardon. E. A.

MR. D. L. MOODY'S SCHOOLS

AT NORTHFIELD, U.S.A.

ABOUT a hundred miles west of the New England coast, the Connecticut River flows north and south through a valley of matchless beauty. On the northern boundary line of Massachusetts lies the famous town of Northfield, on the east side of that valley. Here is Mr. Moody's home; and here within a few rods of his birthplace is his Girls' Seminary, which has become so large as to necessitate the erection of a new stone building, which will cost a hundred thousand dollars. On the west side of the valley is the small country town of Gill, in which two years ago Mr. Moody located, in two large New England wooden farmhouses, his Boys' School. This also has so grown as to need more room; adopting the family plan, five tasty, convenient, and commodious brick buildings have been built the past summer. Four of these are for domitory homes, where from twelve to fifteen boys will be in the care of one woman, who will be teacher and matron. The fifth building stands in the middle of the curving row on the hill-side, and is a kitchen hall with all the most approved cooking appliances; and from which the cooked food will be carried to each of the homes. It is the hope to add a dining-hall to this building in the future.

These homes stand on land which formerly comprised two noted farms, having rich river-bottom, hill-side tillage and pasturing, and forest land. The farmhouses are on a high-road, and quite elevated above the river; while the new houses are far up on the valley side, and command a wide and most charming prospect, with the village of Northfield stretched along its one street on the opposite side. The location of this boys' school Mr. Moody has named Mount Herman, and the new buildings were informally opened on Wednesday, the 26th ult. Those present were loud in their expressions of admiration of the location and natural scenery, which is said to very much resemble your lake region, and of the new homes, and the appearance of the bright and hopeful boys. The school, which the boys from all the homes are to attend, is a plain one-storey wooden structure, patterned after the traditional New England road-side school-house, only this is olive-brown in colour, while those were usually dark red.

The dedicatory services were of the simplest character. Several clergymen, laymen, and ladies were gathered, who, after inspecting the grounds and buildings, lunched in one of the new homes, and then assembled with the boys, teachers, and trustees in the school house, when Mr. Moody said it was well known that he enjoyed few educational advantages in his boyhood, and he had always felt a great desire to give good poor boys better advantages than they could naturally expect. And Mr. Hiram Camp, of New Haven, Conn., placed fifty thousand dollars in his hands with which to start something, "for such boys as otherwise would not have an even chance in life."

The school is not an orphans' home or asylum, but a home religious school, into which properly recommended poor boys will be taken and educated for Christ; helped to fit themselves for such spheres in life as they shall seem adapted to fill. Their time is appropriately divided between study, farm work, and play, with an opportunity to use play hours in working for pay for their own advantage. That the field from which candidates for admission will be drawn is not to be limited is seen in the fact that there are now at Fort Herman twelve boys from your Manchester and four from Liverpool, three of the latter being the orphans of a lawyer of that city. When one sends a boy for admission he is expected to guarantee one hundred dollars annually for his support, although that sum does not cover the whole cost. Several benevolent gentlemen are thus aiding several pupils at present, Mr. Moody could not finish his remarks, he was so affected by his feelings when referring to his interest in saving the boys.

Several clergymen and laymen, including Mr. Balfour, of Liverpool, made brief addresses, prayers were offered, a watch presented to the boy who had made the best report of the Sunday sermons for six months, and two more offered for the next six months. A ringing hymn, entitled, "Mount Herman is our home," was sung by the boys, one of their number playing the reed-organ in excellent manner, and the new homes were launched for their mission of good. It is a piece of great good fortune that an elderly, energetic, and very wise and able gentleman, long connected with the public schools of Massachusetts, is to be in charge of the institution.

It is Mr. Moody's great desire now to obtain an ample endowment for these two schools, which will be wisely administered by the able and practical men who are the trustees, and handed down to succeeding generations for the glory of the Lord Jesus, like so many of your celebrated English schools on ancient foundations. This will reach you about the time Mr. Moody will land again, Providence permitting, on your shores again. With him American Christians send their fraternal greetings, and ask some of the prayers and gifts of English disciples for the Northfield Girls' Seminary, and the Mount Herman Boys' School. W. S. Hawkes.

AGRICULTURAL HALL SERVICES.

THE fifteenth anniversary of these popular religious services in Islington was held on Sunday, the 7th inst., from two to three thousand persons being present. Dr. Thain Davidson, who presided, was accompanied to the platform by a large number of ministers of various denominations. Prayer was offered by Revs. F. A. Jones (Baptist) and R. P. Downes (Wesleyan). Dr. Davidson gave a brief address, in which he stated that they had now completed in that hall fifteen years of quiet, earnest evangelistic work, with the hearty co-operation of all evangelical ministers in the neighbourhood, and the undoubted presence and blessing of God. His experience during that time had led him to the conviction that the Gospel, when faithfully and effectively preached, had lost none of its power. He had no sympathy with certain lugubrious croakers who tell us that the masses in London are becoming more and more alienated from Christianity. He did not believe there ever was a time when the people were more accessible, or when there was a greater willingness to hear the truth when presented in a manly and interesting manner. For his own part, he had no belief in sensational methods of drawing the people, in blowing of trumpets, and beating of drums, and marching with banners. They served a Master of whom it was written, "He shall not strive nor cry, neither shall his voice be heard in the streets."

Dr. Davidson proceeded to speak of the ready and brotherly help he had obtained from ministers of all denominations, and from Mr. Spurgeon's Evangelistic Association. During all these years there had not been one breakdown of a service, or one failure of the appointed preacher to appear. Rev. E. A. Stuart then gave a short and pointed address upon the words, "Jesus in the midst," being followed by Rev. J. T. Wigner (Baptist) and Rev. W. Le Pla, Congregationalist.

THE BLESSING OF SIGHT.—A thank-offering is proposed to be appropriated to the work of embossing more books in Dr. Moon's type, now adapted to 250 languages and dialects, and read by many thousands of the blind both at home and abroad. If every person having sight in the United Kingdom gave 6d. a year, it is computed that a sum amounting to £776,000 would annually be raised. There are at least 100,000 English-speaking blind in the world, and not less than 3,000,000 who speak other languages. Collecting-cards, money-boxes, and further particulars may be had of Dr. William Moon, 104, Queen's-road, Brighton, Sussex.

Notes and Comments.

THE arrangements for Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings in London, so far as they have yet been made, will be found under "Forthcoming Meetings," p. 20. Many of our readers have doubtless seen the new iron building at The Priory, Islington, in which the first meetings are to be held. It is very much like the Bingley Hall, Birmingham, and we believe, as regards hearing, convenience of ingress and egress, and every other requirement, will be found perfectly satisfactory.

On Sunday, November 4, there will be a meeting at 8 a.m. for Christian workers, for which no tickets will be needed. At 11 a meeting for non-church-goers. — Tickets necessary. At 3 a meeting for women only, and at 8 for men only.—No tickets.

The meeting at 11 is intended for the ninety or ninety-five per cent. of our working population who never enter a place of worship. Considerable help will be needed in the distribution of tickets for this meeting. It is therefore specially requested that any friends who will undertake to give tickets to the class intended in the Islington district will send name and address, with the number they can distribute, to the hon. secretaries of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Committee, Priory, Upper-street, Islington.

The writer of a descriptive article on Sweden, in The Christian Church of last month, thus speaks of the Royal family in that country:—

"Their Majesties, Oscar and Sophie, take a lively interest in the religious welfare of their people, to whom they set a good example. Blessed the people that have such sovereigns. I shall always reckon amongst the pleasantest hours of my life those I spent in private conversation with the Queen of Sweden nnd Norway. We conversed about Missions, prophecies, spiritual life, and I was very near forgetting the high rank of the lady, so true and so real was her Christian humility. Involuntarily my thoughts went to my country (Italy), and I sighed: 'Wilt Thou not, O Lord, give us also such sovereigns that will show our people how real religion can exist in the highest spheres of life?'"

The Town Council of Dartmouth resolved last week to decrease their police force, on the ground that the work of the constabulary and the police court fees had gradually fallen off so that there was not enough for the men to do. Wearers of "the bit of blue" will rejoice to know that the cause of this is said to be the firm hold the Blue Ribbon movement has taken on the town and its district.

The tone of the French Press as represented by M. John Lemoinne, in the Journal des Debats, in reference to the Rev. Mr. Shaw, is by no means calculated to allay the feeling of just indignation England cherishes concerning the treatment he has received from French officials. To speak of that respected missionary as "a pseudo-martyr who has made himself ridiculous," and of his injuries as "pretended troubles," is but to add insult to injury. It is a pity the matter of redress or compensation has not been dealt with between the two Governments more promptly, so as to prevent the friction delay is causing. So far, however, as the London Missionary Society and their agent are concerned, public sympathy and confidence will be only increased by the result.

Our City missionaries deserve and demand our special prayers in these days for their guidance and upholding by the Divine hand. They, many of them, labour amid scenes of violence and strife, as well as awful profanity and vice, such as few, perhaps, of our readers can imagine. One wrote us recently narrating how he has had to witness murder and riot in his district to such an extent that it has been like a very hell upon earth. Yet opportunities for real and effective service for Christ have multiplied even there, and he rejoices in tokens for good. But the need of abundant grace and peculiar gifts from God for such work is deeply felt. Our brethren so engaged should have a large place in our hearts.

The Government of the canton of Neuchatel has pronounced sentence of expulsion on Miss Booth and "Captain" Bequet. It is also announced that the decree will be enforced against all foreigners taking part in organising Salvationist processions. An old Commission once given by the Commander of all Gospel forces runs thus, "When they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another." It is open to question whether the direction has not a bearing upon Salvationist demonstrations just now in Switzerland. All methods of action are not equally adapted to all spheres, and so long as truth is not sacrificed, we do well sometimes to surrender prejudices and self-imposed forms of action.

It is to be regretted that the Committee of the Midnight Meeting Movement are so restricted for want of means to carry on their work. As is truly stated in the appeal they have issued, London, with all its poverty and suffering, abounds in wealth—wealth which, it is to be feared, too often extends its influence to patronise vices of the grossest kind, destructive alike to the individual and to society at large. A great responsibility rests upon those who are themselves saved to do all in their power to promote and sustain efforts to rescue the lost. The Midnight Meeting Movement has a large field for its labours in London, as well as in all provincial cities and towns, and calls for hearty support.

Mr. George Hatton, of the St. Giles's Christian Mission, has just written to The Times a very urgent appeal for aid on behalf of the work carried on among discharged prisoners released from Coldbath-fields and Holloway Prisons. During the past twelve months 8487 have left these two gaols, 4970 of them have accepted an invitation te, breakfast at the Mission-rooms, 1488 have signed the pledge, 70 have been sent to sea employment on land found for 191, 24 sent to colonies, and 978 relieved in various other ways at the expense of the Mission. The work is so deserving and important that it cad only require to be known that funds are greatly needed for fresh help to be forthcoming.

We are sorry to note that the Rev. Thomas M'Cullagh, President of the Wesleyan Conference, is so prostrated by severe illness that he is likely to be laid aside from his official duties for some time to come. The Lord of the harvest knows how to appoint his servants their work; it is mysterious oftentimes to see how He permits those to be laid aside who seem to us to be most required in active service. But "they also serve who stand and wait."

The Kent County Justices, in their recently issued report on vagrancy, urge the public to discontinue the practice of indiscriminate almsgiving. Attention is really required to this subject, for mischief results to a large extent from support being given to loose and wandering persons who beg from house to house. It is mistaken kindness for any to relieve such cases without careful investigation; crime, pauperism, and idleness, are fed by the support of such applicants for relief.

The report of the Howard Association just issued urges the same point, and illustrates the evil by quoting the words of a beggar at Wandsworth, who recently remarked, "I never intend to work while I can get 16s. a day, and my skin full. It's only fools and horses that work." The charitable may always find ample opportunities for rendering deserved and necessary aid to the poor, and to support vagrant applicants is alike foolish and hurtful.

Another veteran soldier of Christ has fallen from the ranks; we refer to our friend, Mr. John Houghton, of Liverpool, who died last week, after a short but severe illness. His zeal and liberality in the cause of Christ were untiring, and he will be greatly missed from evangelistic and philanthropic spheres of labour. He was a member of the Baptist denomination, and a liberal supporter of its various agencies, but his large heart went out far beyond the limits of any one sect or party. He had attained the age of 71, and has left behind him the testimony of a life devoted to the glory of God, and the spiritual and temporal welfare of men.

The death is also announced of the Rev. James M'Gill, of Bournemouth. He was an eminent minister of the Presbyterian Church, and is spoken of as the Father of the London Presbytery. He was 88 years of age, and enjoyed, as he well deserved, the respect of his brethren and friends.

We would remind our readers that next Lord's Day and the Monday following are the days set apart by the Sunday School Union for special prayer on behalf of Sunday-schools and young people. The co-operation of all Christians in prayer and direct efforts to lead the young to decision is earnestly invited. This may be rendered by attendance at the meetings which will be generally held all over the country, and by special reference to the subject in the family circle and elsewhere.

We yield to none in the gratitude we feel for the blessings brought to us by the Reformation, or in hearty admiration of Luther as the great instrument used of God to secure them for us, but we are sorry to see such an ode as that written by Mr. Martin H. Tupper adopted by the Commemoration Committee as one of its pieces to be used in the meetings held. The fulsomeness of its language strikes us as extravagant in the highest degree, amounting almost to adoration. If Jesus Christ Himself were the poet's theme he could not say more, and it seems a pity a commemoration, so timely and worthy of warmest sympathy and co-operation, should be laid open to a just charge of what is really hero-worship, and homage to man. Dr. Bonar's beautiful words form a striking contrast to the glaring fault in this respect of the companion hymn by Mr. Tupper.

On the 24th inst. Sir Moses Montefiore entered upon his one hundredth year. It is proposed to form a committee, irrespective of creed, to commemorate the centennial of this veteran son of Abraham. His general benevolence and untiring efforts on behalf of the persecuted race to which he belongs has won for him universal respect.

Among recent deaths of remarkable men has been that of Heinrich Augustus Jaschke, an eminent philologist, formerly a Moravian missionary in Thibet. He translated the Bible into Thibetan, and published the first Thibetan lexicon in English and German. He died at Herrnhut, in Saxony, widely known and respected as a scholar of ripe attainments and rare modesty.

We have before us two letters from correspondents referring to our recent article on "The New Theology," one thanking us for it, and speaking of its great usefulness, the other questioning the propriety of bringing controverted points of a doctrinal kind before our readers at all. The latter thinks many would know nothing of errors such as those we have dealt with if we had not called attention to them. The fact is, what is called the new theology, is so widely sustained and advocated by a large portion of the pulpit and the press, that it is essential for those who love the old paths, and cling to the old faith, to speak out, and to contend earnestly for them.

We fully admit the necessity for holding forth the Word of Life in its native simplicity and fulness, but none the less is it needful in these days to expose the subtleties, and warn against the dangers by which we are surrounded. Ignorance of Satan's devices often makes men their easy prey, and when error and truth are cleverly commingled, and old doctrines are cast into new moulds, and altogether changed from their original form, we think it is time to warn and clearly point out the evil, as well as continue to proclaim the good.

A "Total Abstainer" writes, strongly censuring the use of intoxicating wine at the Lord's Table, arguing that if it be wrong for a Christian to drink wine or strong drink, whereby a brother is made to offend, at his own table, surely it is a sin much more aggravated to place it on the table of Him who came to save the lost. The force of this, we should think, must be felt by all who reflect upon it, and it is time, as our correspondent says, for the churches everywhere to clear themselves of what is a serious evil, because a grave danger to many communicants, specially to such as have been reclaimed from drunkenness. No objection to the sacramental use of non-intoxicants can be urged, while everything seems to plead for its adoption.

Whether the action of the authorities at Berlin in ordering the seizure and destruction of the works of M. Zola, the French author, may or may not have a political animus in reference to France, it is not for us to discuss. But having regard to the fact that the public Press says that "M. Zola is as unclean a writer as ever put pen to paper, and that, if the municipal authorities of any civilised city are not within their right in prohibiting the publication and sale of his works, it would be as difficult to assign any intelligible functions to such authorities, as it would be, according to a well-known story, to define the utility, under certain circumstances, of the Prince of Darkness," all pure-minded observers must rejoice that the example is set of putting a national ban upon the circulation of such literature. Germany may be called pharisaic, and told by some censors to look at home, but her present action is right nevertheless.

The Dean of Bangor, in an address on practical cookery, has lifted up his voice against strong tea, alleging that the tea-kettle is really in many cases the precursor of the gin-bottle. Excessive tea-drinking, he argues, weakens the nerves, and produces irritability and general discontent; this nervous weakness leads to the use of stimulants, and so induces intemperance, as well as other physical evils. The Dean pleads for the use of oatmeal and milk in place of tea as much more adapted to produce health, good temper, and general well-being. His theory has more true philosophy in it than many at first sight may imagine, although he has somewhat strained his point.

Great activity is said to prevail in the Mormon camp at Salt Lake City. At a great Conference just held there to consolidate and strengthen the power of their church, it was resolved to send forth fifty-seven carefully selected missionaries to go abroad and spread their doctrines, fourteen being appointed for Great Britain. Their system of polygamy, accursed alike by God and man, renders their teaching and influence a moral pest wherever it is carried. It is to be hoped the United States Government will be vigorous and successful in its action to sustain its recent legislation against the practice. A crisis is evidently approaching on the subject between it and the Mormon State.

We live in days when Congresses, Conferences, and Associations crowd so thickly upon us, that it is pardonable if some of them escape our notice, or have less attention from some of us than they deserve. The Social Science Congress is one, perhaps, which many of our readers are likely to overlook, although by others its importance will have been recognised. Its session at Huddersfield has been occupied with many topics bearing upon the national welfare, and the discussions appear to have been both earnest and effective. It is a good sign to see so many men of influence interesting themselves about the educational, moral, sanitary, and other departments of social economy; they all have practical bearing on the advance of Christian principle.

The disposition grows nowadays on the part of a certain class of writers to pander to the lowest tastes of society, and to gratify the passion for loose and immoral reading which exists. It is of utmost importance that in every country the voice of Government and of public censure should be lifted up against the abomination of increasing this kind of literature. New and cheap editions of such works as Fielding's and Sterne's are by no means encouraging signs of the times, but the cheap novelettes and penny dreadfuls of to-day are even worse. The modern standard of morality set up by some novelists is far lower than that recognised by Fielding and his class, and their influence for evil is far greater because more invidious and concealed.

At the recent meetings of the Congregational Union, in Sheffield, there was a discussion on popularising religious services. The Rev. C. Leach, of Birmingham, set aside the talk about sensationalism, and asserted that the way to get the people to chapel was to preach to them the plain, simple Gospel of Christ. The remarkable effect of Mr. Leach's ministry amply demonstrates this truth. His spacious place of worship in Graham-street, known as Highbury Chapel, is invariably filled with Birmingham artisans and their families. An enlargement has lately been necessitated by the difficulty of obtaining pews. When Mr. Leach preaches to the people in the great Town Hall many find it impossible to obtain room. No catch titles are resorted to, and no sensational methods are adopted. The secret of success is the blessing of the Spirit upon the preacher's affectionate, realistic, and common-sense presentation of the pure Gospel.

THE DINBORO' CASTLE.

An era in the evangelisation of London was marked, twelve years ago, when Joshua and Mary Poole preached and won souls nightly for weeks together in the great tent which Dr. Barnado had set up at Limehouse. This resulted in the magnificent scheme to purchase that adjacent "citadel of Satan," the Edinboro' Castle, at a cost of nearly £6,000, which amount was collected in three weeks. This music and dancing saloon was converted into a hall, where Christ has been preached from that day to this; and the premises where the ruinous drink had been supplied were changed into a coffee-palace, of which the like had never yet been seen, but which has now been imitated in every quarter of London, and in every considerable city in the land.

During those twelve years 3,500 names and addresses have been registered as having found peace and pardon through our Lord Jesus Christ in that building, besides a multitude who have heard and believed the Gospel, but have passed on without registry; while 1600 assemble every Lord's Day morning, and in the evening the hall is densely packed with eager listeners to the good tidings.

We are happy and thankful to remember that our readers had no small share in the initiation of this great work, and that they therefore have a vested interest in its continuance. We therefore feel under obligation to give them information of the crisis which has now arrived. The preaching hall of the Edinboro' Castle, the adaptation of which to evangelistic purposes many will remember as an exhibition of ingenuity and good taste, no longer exists. Originally built of inferior materials it long ago showed signs of decay, and having been supported from without by huge timbers it at length became so dangerous that it has now been levelled with the ground.

Shall it be rebuilt? Assuredly it must. One friend of God and of the Gospel has given £1000 towards the undertaking. Another thousand has been promised by several who are interested in the work. Dr. Barnardo hopes to raise a third thousand from sources immediately available. But there will still remain £3000 to be subscribed in order that the new hall may, when completed, be opened free of debt.

Considering its immense importance in the midst of the teeming population around it, and that it affords a notable solution of the difficulty, how to attract the people to hear the Gospel, we feel confident that our readers will maintain their interest in this house of God, and cause the new and more substantial building to owe no man anything but love.

EVENTS IN MADAGASCAR.

DEAR FRIENDS,—Since I last wrote to you a sad calamity has overtaken Madagascar in the death of the late Queen Ranavalomanjaka II., the first Christian Queen of Madagascar, who was called to her rest and her reward on the morning of Friday, July 13. I cannot enter on the subject of the virtues of the late Queen, or the good she has done to this land during her reign of fifteen years; suffice to say that a better Queen has seldom sat on a throne, and a better never reigned in Madagascar. She is mourned by the people with the sincerest sorrow, and her memory will long be fresh in their minds.

The late Queen has been succeeded by her niece, who we have every reason to believe is also a Christian. She has taken the name of Ranavalomanjaka III. She has had a fair education, having been for some years a pupil in the Friends' Girls' School, and afterwards in the L. M. S. High School for Girls. In the short speech which she made to her people when she was brought forth and shown to them as their new Queen, she said her mother (that is the late Queen) had been a Christian and had rested her kingdom on God, and she was also a Christian and meant to do the same. So that we have all here the greatest cause for thankfulness. God has taken away one good Queen, but He has raised up another, who we hope and fully expect will prove herself to be a worthy successor to her who has fallen asleep in Jesus.

When I last wrote you, I sent you the substance of the infamous ultimatum which had been sent by the French Admiral and Consul at Tamatave to the Malagasy Government. I am glad to be able to send you a copy of a translation of said ultimatum, and also the reply of the Malagasy Government to it. We here do not believe that the facts of the case are known at the English Foreign Office, or they would take a very different view of the case from what they do. It was the policy of him who ought to have sent the facts to suppress them and to play into the hands of the enemies of the Malagasy people.

The French are still in possession of Tamatave, and we hear that great numbers are dying of starvation, and many of them British subjects, Creoles from Mauritius, who have no means of returning there, and so the poor things must remain there only to die, as the outcome of the action of the French. Their native wives and children were placed on Pine Island, in the Bay of Tamatave, where they have nearly all died of starvation it is said. We up here have still a small supply of English stores, but flour is already 10d. a pound, and sugar 1s. 6d.

The congregations of the nine city churches here in the capital meet together every Thursday afternoon for united prayer for their native land, and the Y.M.C.A. meet in the Friends' schoolroom for the same purpose every Saturday morning.

We are often very sad here thinking of the sufferings of our poor people, and wondering what will be the end of all this unrighteous conduct. A piece of more barefaced highway robbery was never perpetrated, for the French have no more right to a foot of Madagascar than you have, but they have plainly said to the Malagasy, "Your land or your lives," and the Malagasy to a man say they prefer dying for their native land to living only to be French slaves. Hence, as I said before, it must be a war of annihilation, unless God in his goodness raise up friends for poor Madagascar. Our work in the country is almost practically at a standstill, and we fear it must remain so until this sad business is settled.

Yours sincerely,

Antananarivo, Madagascar, T. T. Matthews.

ULTIMATUM TO THE MALAGASY GOVERNMENT.

[TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH.]

THE French Government, animated by a sincere desire to re-establish as quickly as possible those relations of peace and friendship with the Government of Her Majesty Queen Ranavalona II. which have united them for so long a time, but resolved on employing all means for protecting the position (situation conventionnelle) they have obtained in Madagascar, have given orders to the undersigned to make known to the Government of Queen Ranavalona the conditions upon which henceforth the good relations which France desired to preserve can be kept up:—

1. The Government of the Queen must positively recognise the right of sovereignty or protectorate (souveraineté ou de protectorate) over certain territories which treaties, concluded with Sakalava chiefs, confer upon us. These territories extend from Body Bay on the west to Antongil Bay on the east rounding Cape Amber.

2. The 85th law in complete contradiction of article 4 in the treaty of 1868 shall be repealed, the Queen shall engage herself to give formal and immediate guarantees which the Commissaire of the French Republic, who is furnished with full powers by his Government for settling this question, shall make known to her at the proper time and place, in order that in future the right of ownership of, or of leasing land for a very long period, can be exercised with all liberty by French citizens.

These conditions shall be the object of a special treaty, for the signature of which the Government of Her Majesty Queen Ranavalona II. shall engage to send within fifteen days a Plenipotentiary to the place which the Commissaire of the French Republic shall appoint. This Plenipotentiary shall also have the powers necessary for accepting such changes in the treaty of 1868, or any part of it if there be cause for such, as the Commissaire of the French Republic shall propose to him.

3. The Queen's Government must engage to pay within thirty days from the receipt of the present Ultimatum in Tamatave, into the hands of the Commissaire of the Republic, the sum of a million francs, being dols. 200,000 for indemnity due to French citizens.

The undersigned, immediately the present Ultimatum is accepted, will make known to the Government of Queen Ranavalona II. the conditions which they demand as guarantee for the execution of the clauses enumerated above. These conditions are not presented to the Government of Queen Ranavalona II. as matters for discussion, but for reply by a "yes" or a "no" within eight days. The time has been thus calculated: three days for the journey from Tamatave to Antananarivo; as many for the return journey; and two days for reflection.

The undersigned have received from their Government the formal order not to give the least margin on the time fixed. If, then, the answer is ambiguous or incomplete, or if it should not be received before midnight of the 9th and 10th June, by the Commissaire of the Republic, who will transmit it to the Chief Commandant of the Naval Division of the Indian Ocean Rear-Admiral Pierre will be obliged with regret to open fire on the defences of the town of Tamatave, to take possession of it, and also to destroy all Government establishments of her Majesty Queen Ranavalona, on the east coast of Madagascar. The custom-house of Tamatave will be occupied, and the custom dues will be collected by the French authorities, to the amount of the sum claimed, and as long as the above-mentioned complete satisfaction is not obtained.

Ulterior measures will be resorted to for the future guarantee of the right of ownership of land to our citizens. The results on the North-west coast of the operations of the Rear-Admiral, the Chief Commandant of the Naval Division in the Indian Ocean, are of a nature to show the Government of Queen Ranavalona II. the power he possesses to carry out these designs.

In the name of the Government of the French Republic, the undersigned openly declare that the Government of Queen Ranavalona II. and the Prime Minister will be held responsible for all that may happen throughout the extent of Madagascar, both to French citizens and others, of whatever nationality. Whatever may befall them, directly or indirectly, as to their lives, liberty, possessions, families, or family possessions, would occasion the demand of indemnities, the amount of which will be fixed by the undersigned, and of which the payment would be at once demanded.

If the Government of the Queen after having accepted the conditions of the present Ultimatum should make intentional delay in the accomplishment of one or more of their promises, or if the Plenipotentiary should at any time whatever, on account of the insufficiency of his powers, hostilities will commence without further intimation being given.

The undersigned have the strong hope that the Government of Queen Ranavalona, in accepting conditions, the moderation of which it would be difficult to deny, will free them from having recourse to the employment of stronger measures, and nothing will cause them greater satisfaction than to be spared the necessity of useless bloodshed.

THE ANSWER OF THE MALAGASY GOVERNMENT.

Antananarivo, June 5.

Gentlemen,—The Ultimatum which you wrote to the Queen and Government of Madagascar on June 1, 1883, has been received, and this is our answer to it.

The Queen and Government of Madagascar are sorry that they see no way of opening communications with you until they know that you recognise Her Majesty as Queen of Madagascar. Your Government did so in the treaty made between the two kingdoms in 1868. And not only so, but the French Government compelling them, only very lately, to pay an indemnity for the affair at Toulè (on the west coast), which is in the part now claimed by the Ultimatum, can be produced to prove that they did so then.

(Signed) Andriamifidy,
Pro The Chief Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

At a Special Meeting of the Imerina District Committee of the London Missionary Society, held in the Committee Room of the College, on the evening of Saturday, May 26, 1883, the following Resolution was proposed, seconded, and carried unanimously:

"That the Secretary be requested to send to the Prime Minister a letter worded as follows:—

[TRANSLATION.]

"We, Missionaries of the London Missionary Society met in Committee, have prepared the following statement to be presented to you, the Prime Minister, to be conveyed by you to Ranavalonanjaka, Queen of Madagascar.

"It is with feelings of the profoundest sorrow that we have heard of the calamity that has come upon Madagascar. The Queen and you, the Prime Minister, know that it was not politics that was the occasion of our coming here, and even now we cannot forget that we are preachers of the Gospel and teachers simply, and not men having any authority at all in the kingdom. Yet notwithstanding, on account of our love for Madagascar and the Malagasy, and on account of our long residence here and our harmonious work with the people in seeking the advancement of wisdom and the kingdom of God, we cannot keep silent, but must express our deep sorrow at what the French have done.

"We have seen the forbearance of the Malagasy ever since this business began, and we have given thanks to God, who has given the Queen and her subjects hearts to bear all so patiently, notwithstanding that they have been all along in the right.

"And since forbearance has not accomplished the settlement of affairs, and it has come to this, that the French have struck a blow in the bombarding of your ports, and thus war has had to be declared for the protection of the fatherland, for which we are very sorry, and we share in the sorrow of the Queen, yourself, Her Majesty's Ministers, and all her subjects.

"We remember you in our prayers continually, and ask God to bless you in order that you may have wise counsels and right purposes, and be strengthened in all that is right for the protection of this land of Madagascar.

(Signed) "T. T. Matthews, Chairman.
"W. E. Cousins, Secretary."

PORT SAID.

ADVERTING to the letter of Mr. G. A. Eoll in The Christian of September 27, will you allow me to add my testimony to his, of the great need there is for a Floating Bethel.

One who has not visited or resided in the place can have little idea of its temptations, and it is no wonder that captains are unwilling to permit their crews to go ashore, even on the Lord's day. Besides the Greek grog-shops at almost every other door, where the vilest spirits are advertised at a penny a glass, you may meet in the streets men and boys offering to sell you bottles of worthless gin and other liquors. I greatly desired to have evening meetings in the Mission room and had them for captains, officers, and engineers, but dared not invite the men generally. Once I made the experiment and had a nice large gathering, but one result was this: five of the men gave me the slip at the close. I found them in a drink shop. The thing for Port Said is a "Bethel Ship" such as they have at Alexandria, having, besides the chapel, a reading-room for visitors and a cabin for the missionary's residence. Sailors, as a rule, prefer to go to floating Bethels rather than to the grandest churches ashore. I pray that the Lord may move some of his stewards to provide our brother very soon with a suitable Bethel ship.—Yours faithfully, T. Whytock.

47, Woolmarket, Berwick-upon-Tweed,
October 5.

P.S.—For the sake of friends who knew of me at Port Said, please permit me to say, that contrary to my cherished desire of going abroad again, circumstances of a personal kind in the meantime prevent me, and I have recently began home mission work in this town.

DEEPENING OF SPIRITUAL LIFE.—In St. Vincent Parish Church, Glasgow, a series of meetings were held during the week ending 5th inst. The meetings were conducted on the lines of those held in the "Queen's Rooms," last month and were of a most interesting and elevating character. Much blessing was experienced by many who were privileged to attend them. The addresses were all of a very high tone, the importance of consistent holy living being the principal theme.

MISSIONARY COLLEGE IN SPAIN.

THE evangelisation of Spain has been seriously hindered hitherto by the absence of any efficient training college for the preparation of teachers, evangelists, and pastors. Geneva and Lausanne have given valuable help in the past by the training in those cities of young Spaniards for the ministry, but these efforts have been made under considerable difficulties, and the supply from these sources is now about to cease.

In Spain itself tentative efforts on a small scale are being made, but unless something more is done, and in a more effective way, the progress of the Gospel in Spain, humanly speaking, will be greatly retarded in the future. It is therefore a cause for much thankfulness that a Training College in the south of France, initiated in 1877, but arrested in its progress for lack of funds, is now in a fair way of becoming an accomplished fact.

Puerto Santa Maria has been selected as a locality in every way desirable for its salubrity, economy of living, and efficient supervision of the students. A suitable house has been secured, for which the rent is provided, and a competent Director has been appointed, with means for his support. All that is now required is a few hundred pounds for the fitting up of rooms for a limited number of students, for their maintenance in whole or in part, the furnishing of class-rooms, and the salaries of one or two assistant teachers.

This undertaking has been for many years under prayerful consideration, and to show the Catholic and undenominational spirit in which the teaching is to be conducted, the following sentence is quoted from the original circular:—

. . . . "In the training of our youth as labourers, we recognise the necessity of rising above every ecclesiastical system, and preparing a useful and thorough education for minds of every shade within the range of orthodox Christianity; for we desire to win Spain for Christ."

The present appeal from Spain is signed by three Spanish pastors of the Presbytery of Andalusia, viz.: Signor Blanco, of Cadiz; Signor Alonso, of Seville; and Signor Viliesid, of Jerez; and the original appeal of 1877 was cordially endorsed by well-known men of evangelical principle in England and Scotland. It is at the request of the College Committee, whose names are given above, that this interesting and important undertaking is now brought to the notice of your readers.

For the endowing of Colleges, the public has often been indebted to the splendid liberality of individual Christians. In this case, the attempt to do so by small subscriptions has been uphill work. The promoters will hail with deep thankfulness the gift of any member of the Church of Christ able and willing to offer it. A lady in Scotland has just started the University of Dundee by a gift of £120,000. A very much smaller sum would suffice to confer, by means of this missionary college, an inestimable blessing on the Spanish Peninsula. DONALD MATHESON.

120, Queen's-gate, S.W., Oct., 1883.

MR. GEO. SOLTAU'S ADDRESS will be, in future, 69, Beresford-road, Highbury New Park, London, N. He purposes devoting himself to evangelistic work in London during the winter.

WEST BRIGHTON YOUNG WOMEN'S INSTITUTE, HOLLAND ROAD.—The classes in connection with this Institute have realised unexampled success. The Institute has not been in existence more than ten months, and there are now 140 members enrolled. A library consisting of nearly six hundred books will be opened in November. On Sunday afternoon the President, Mr. G. T. Congreve, distributed three handsome prizes and certificates to forty-three competitors, who had prepared papers on the names and titles of our Lord. The temporary iron room was crammed. It is expected that the permanent building will be commenced before the end of the year.

NOTES FROM CANADA.

By GAWIN KIRKHAM.

ACCOMPANIED by the Rev. George Burson, a Presbyterian minister, returning to his charge in Canada, I sailed from Liverpool in the Circassian, on August 30, and reached Quebec on September 10. This was my first voyage across the Atlantic, and one not calculated to encourage me to be a sailor.

Tuesday, September 4, will be memorable to some of us, as being the first severe storm we had experienced. The voyage afforded many opportunities for usefulness. When not prevented by sickness or storm, Mr. Burson, Mr. Cracknell (a Baptist minister), and myself, held meetings among the steerage passengers, either on deck or in the steerage. The first Sunday I expounded "The Coloured Teacher," and the passengers joined heartily in singing the hymns. We were something like 800 souls all told, and the emigrants included some French, Germans, and Scandinavians, in addition to English, Irish, and Scotch. One evening, at the close of our meeting, we induced the Scandinavians to sing a hymn in their own tongue, which they did very sweetly, though we could not understand a word. On reviewing our voyage, I felt that the life of a traveller is not calculated to promote personal piety.

QUEBEC.

How pleasant it was to see the coast of Labrador, after being six days out of sight of land. Though out for a holiday, one object of my visit to this Western Continent is to see Christian work, and also to promote open-air preaching. But here in Quebec, the Y.M.C.A. Secretary told me street preaching was impossible, because, as he said, of every ten persons who passed along, nine were Romanists. A clergyman with whom I conversed said he did not think it was needed, as all the Protestants were so well looked after. In his own parish he could almost count on his fingers the number who did not go to church. Happy parish! I wonder where a similar one can be found.

MONTREAL.

Here is a city of 140,000 souls, more than two-thirds being Romanists. Mr. Budge, the secretary of the Y.M.C.A., told me open-air preaching could not be carried on, on account of the strong Romish opposition. Others said that it was occasionally done during the summer in the less prominent places. The one meeting we tried during my stay was most orderly; the Rev. R. Mackay, of Kingston, Ontario, and a young Armenian also took part. This young man had been converted in his native country while reading one of Mr. Moody's sermons. As I spoke of the prodigal son, a young man said, "Have you been sent to look after me? for I'm a prodigal." He was from York, England, and had only been a fortnight in Canada. An address I gave on open-air preaching in the Y.M.C.A. rooms elicited some interest. Autumn seems to be the time for Synods, Conferences, and Exhibitions.

The Methodist Conference succeeded in uniting the Methodist bodies in Canada under the one title of "The Methodist Church." As far as my own observation has gone there is no more union among the various churches than there is in the old country. Here, as there, each body of Christians seems chiefly concerned to build up and extend itself.

Both in Quebec and Montreal I was sadly impressed with the dominance of Romanism. In a railway journey between the two cities above-named, extending over 180 miles, I only noticed one station that was not French, and almost all of them bore ecclesiastical names—Saint this or that—while priests and sisters of mercy embarked or alighted at almost every station, and scarcely a word of English was heard all the way.

TORONTO.

On our way to Toronto, a city of more than 90,000 inhabitants, our vessel called at Kingston. The city was decorated with flags, and I ascertained that the Marquis of Lorne and the Princess Louise were on a visit, and I had the pleasure of seeing this daughter of our beloved Queen. I heard from several sources that the Salvation Army had been greatly blessed here. Toronto affords a good illustration of the work of the Y.M.C.A.'s on this Continent. Favoured with a good building, the hall seating more than 1100 people, a commodious reading-room, and a brisk Secretary (Mr. Sandham), it is not only a centre for young men to visit, but has special evangelistic efforts for prisoners, railway-men, and others. The prison work is very striking. I met some thirty Christian men at the Central Prison at nine o'clock on Sunday morning (September 16), and watched them teach more than 150 male prisoners in classes, and had the sad privilege of addressing these men at the close of the school. This work goes on every Sunday. The Governor was present, and is heart and soul in the work.

Open-air preaching does not appear to be heartily taken up, either by the Association or anyone else. Yet there is a splendid opportunity every Sunday in the Queen's Park. On the above-named Sunday I found a large crowd gathered to hear Temperance addresses, and smaller ones to hear a Christadelphian and other lectures; there was no Gospel, yet I found on giving a short Gospel address a greater spirit of hearing than I should in a park in the old country. On Monday evening also, in expounding "the Coloured Teacher" off Yonge-street, a large audience rapidly gathered. I addressed Christian workers on street preaching in the Y.M.C.A. rooms, and trust the Lord may raise up from among these dear young men some open-air evangelists.

But Toronto sets a fine example to the old country in its well-kept Sunday. No trains or omnibuses run (except what is called a Church train, to fetch distant people to Church), and cabs must be hired from the stables, if had at all. Every-public house is also closed from seven o'clock on Saturday night till Monday morning. This Sunday closing of public-houses happily prevails throughout the Dominion.

I must not omit the good work done by the Y.M.C.A. at the Exhibition being held while I was there. A tent was erected in the grounds, where papers could be read and letters written, and where frequently throughout the day Gospel services were held. The Rev. John Salmon was chiefly responsible for these. An ice-fountain was also erected outside to promote temperance.

HAMILTON.

I spent two days in this city. It has a population of 40,000. Mr. Lonsdale, the secretary of the Y.M.C.A., on very short notice, convened a meeting of Christian workers, to whom I spoke on open-air preaching. Four ministers were present, and two of them—Rev. Mr. Miller and Rev. Dr. Alexander Burns, took part. The young men also accompanied us each evening to the market-place, where we had good meetings. I am hopeful they will continue the work, as their secretary is impressed with its importance.

ST. CATHERINE'S.

I spent Sunday, September 23, in this town of 10,000 inhabitants, and preached for my travelling companion, the Rev. George Burson, who has had a pastoral charge here for sixteen years. I also preached twice in the open air. I purpose now going to the States, taking Chicago and on to Le Mars, in Iowa, as my extreme western point; then back to St. Louis, and so on to the Eastern States, and then home.

"THE SUMMER IS ENDED."

THE year is growing sadder,
Its golden prime is past,
And in the winds of autumn
The leaves are whirling fast.
Soon will its head grow hoary
And crowned with spotless snow,
And then with solemn footsteps,
Pass to the "long ago."

We thank thee, gracious Father,
For bygone joyous hours,
For hopeful vernal springtide,
And for the summer flowers.
And this, the chilly autumn,
With leaves all brown and sere,
Seems full of tender whispers,
Of life's own fading year.

When dreary winds are blowing,
And whispering unrest,
We will not sigh, dear Master,
Because Thou knowest best.
We should not love the sunshine,
Unless the showers were given,
If life were one glad summer,
Then we should prize no heaven.

The wondrous, hidden future,
With treasure store so vast,
I leave to Thee, my Father,
With all the solemn past.
There may be jewels for me,
So beautiful and rare;
There may be thorns and shadows,
And moments full of care.

I would not seek to fathom,
Time's hidden mystery,
The present cloud and sunshine
Is quite enough for me.
Behind the darkest shadow,
I know the golden sun
Will brightly shine above me
Until this life be done.

A few more waning summers
And swiftly speeding years,
A little while of sadness,
A few more bitter tears,
And then—no fading flowers,
No swallows on the wing,
No whirling leaves of autumn,
But everlasting spring.

Marian Isabel Hurrell.

MARSEILLES STRANGERS' REST.

I WRITE you a few hurried lines amid abundant occupations, to beg a corner in your valuable paper, in order to communicate "good news." A brief but sympathetic article appeared last month in a leading local paper, speaking most kindly of Le Repos des Marins, the first of the two Strangers' Rests that, as your readers know, it was my privilege to open some four and a half years ago. The result of that letter has been a general awakening of interest, not only on the part of several Consuls, but particularly of the Commissaire de la Marine. I have had interviews with these gentlemen, all of whom have entreated me to actuate the plans I had already formed, that of furnishing these rooms that would be vacated this Michaelmas; besides making such arrangements as would make me able to board as well as lodge the sailors. In this work I am now engaged, filled with praise and thanksgiving to God for these gracious answers to prayers long offered up, in behalf of the 140,000 sailors who annually visit this important port. We have nightly to refuse applicants for beds.

Will your readers come to my help before being obliged to return to Nice for the winter? Friends on the spot are generously helping, but ten donations of £10 each would set me free.

CONFERENCE ON UNFULFILLED PROPHECY.

AVENUE ROAD CHURCH, SHEPHERD'S BUSH, OCTOBER 9, 10, 11.

IN opening the Conference, October 9, after singing and prayer, at 3 p.m., Mr. Graham, the pastor, said: My dear Christian friends, our Conference last year proved such a blessing to many, and awakened such an interest in the study of unfulfilled prophecy, that we have felt it both our duty and privilege to invite you this year to another.

I trust we come together in a worshipping and receptive spirit to wait upon God, who waits to bless us; and I trust we also meet with ears open to hear his voice in his holy word, ready to welcome all that He speaks to us there. But in this we need the Berean spirit, taking nothing for granted, but searching the Scriptures for ourselves to ascertain whether the things that are spoken are really the truth of God.

On the importance of the study of the Prophetic Scriptures, I will only remark that God gave prophecy to the house of Israel to prepare them for the advent of the Lord in humiliation; and He has given us the prophetic word to prepare us for his advent in glory. Let the house of Israel be our warning: they sought not the teaching of the Holy Spirit to understand the utterances of their prophets, and were, therefore, unprepared to welcome Christ when He came. They rejected Him, and, as the necessary consequence, He rejected them. If He is soon to return in glory, and we do not know the fact of that return, his coming may take us by surprise.

If we do know the truth about his blessed advent, we need to have our pure minds stirred up by way of remembrance, lest with the wicked and slothful servant we should say in our heart, "My Lord delayeth his coming," and should smite our fellow-servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken. "Take heed to yourself," says our Lord, "lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life; and so that day come upon you unawares. For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth" (Luke xxi. 34, 35).

The Rev. Clarmont Skrine directed attention to Luke xix. 12, "A certain nobleman went into a far country, to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return." It is clear that, in this parable, the nobleman is Christ; and, as his going to heaven was personal, so shall his return be personal. When Jesus says, in John xiv. 23, "If a man love Me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him," He speaks of a spiritual coming; but when, in verse 3, He says, "If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also," He speaks of a personal coming. His coming will be at the close of this dispensation to bring his people to Himself. "Behold He cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see Him." To the disciples, in Acts i. 11, the angels say, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus who is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." He returned to heaven, leaving the kingdoms of the earth under a usurper, just as David, the man after God's own heart, could only take the kingdom when Saul, the man of the people's choice, was removed. So Christ, before He takes possession of the kingdoms of the world, must first cast out the usurper. David and Solomon are both types of Christ. David subdued all the enemies of Israel, and then Solomon reigned in peace.

Until the Lord comes it will be a time of trouble. His first act (as in 1 Thes. iv.) will be to take his Church to Himself; then his Church will appear before the judgment-seat to receive the rewards of service; and with Him will descend to the earth when his feet shall stand on the Mount of Olives (Zech. xiv). That descent will be after the great tribulation of Matt. xxiv. and Dan. xii., for the destruction of his enemies. Scripture teaches us that instead of progress in the world there will be a great apostasy.

This subject is to believers a call to diligence, to gird up the loins of the mind, and occupy till the Lord comes. To ministers of the Gospel it is a warning to take heed that they build not up wood, and hay, and stubble, instead of gold, and silver, and precious stones, and their works be burned up, and themselves saved yet so as through fire. The Church's call is to sit with Christ upon his throne, and in order to that there is a call to victory over the spirit of the age.

Rev. W. Feith said he was one of those who had strongly held the post-Millenarian view, but Scripture had convinced him there could be no Millennium until Christ Himself came. As it was in the days of Noah, and in the days of Lot, so shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed (Luke xvii. 27, 28). Until that day the tares grow and ripen with the wheat. When Christ comes it is to be glorified in his saints, whom he will take to Himself. Until He comes Satan is not bound, and Antichrist is not destroyed. The Lord's Supper connects the coming in humiliation and the coming in glory: "As often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till He come" (1 Cor. xi. 26). The practical importance of this truth is seen in the Epistle to Titus: "The grace of God, that bringeth salvation, hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world, looking for that blessed Hope, and the appearing of the glory of the great God and our Saviour, Jesus Christ."

Rev. W. Page spoke on the attitude of believers in view of this great truth. The exhortation of the Lord Jesus, "Be ye also ready," runs through the writings of the apostles. An unprepared state is that of sleeping. There was an essential difference between the state of the wise and foolish virgins; but as asleep all were unprepared to meet the Bridegroom. In spiritual sleep the intellect is dull in regard to divine truth, and the affections cold. Unsettled views is another unprepared condition. In the present day professors are easily shaken in their minds, easily agitated and troubled. Another state of unpreparedness is uncharitableness toward our brethren. "Judge nothing," says the apostle, "before the time, until the Lord come." If we believe we are ourselves soon to be judged, we will be slow to judge others. What is our true and safe position? to abide in Christ, to maintain our child-like trust. We are called to watchfulness, not to sleep as do others, but to look out for the appearing of the glory of our great God and Saviour.

EVENING MEETING.

Rev. W. Fuller Gooch asked, "What have we to do with unfulfilled prophecy?" 2 Peter i. 16—19 answers, "We have not followed cunningly-devised fables, when we made known to you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty." We have here three answers to the question: (1) "We heard," says Peter, "the voice," that is the voice of the Father. No expression occurs oftener in the prophets than "The word of the Lord." If a child I must love to hear my Father's voice. (2) All in this scene concerns the Lord Jesus, and "the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy" (Rev. xix. 10). How precious should that testimony be to the believer! (3) We have here a special connection with the Holy Spirit: "No prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." A special promise of Christ to his disciples was that the Spirit should show them things to come. Prophecy fulfilled is not more sure than prophecy unfulfilled. In Hebrews ix. 27, 28, Paul tells us, "It is appointed unto men once to die." This is certain. He adds, "Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many." This, too, is a blessed certainty, the ground of our salvation. When He says, "To them that look for Him shall He appear the second time without sin unto salvation," this is not less certain. Before the first coming, Simeon and Anna waited for the consolation of Israel. Were they wise? One great sin of the present day is the neglect of the prophetic Scriptures. The parables of the Lord are full of prophecy, and all the arguments employed in the New Testament to awaken believers to fidelity and diligence are taken from facts connected with the future.

Rev. Jessie Hawes said: The light of the Cross shines on through the ages till Christ takes the throne. Israel looked for light but beheld obscurity (Is. lix. 9). To us the cross illuminates the past as well as the future. "God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts." We sat in darkness, but now see a great light. We see the purpose of the Cross; it is our title as well as Christ's to that kingdom in which He must reign till all things are put under Him. We see not yet all things put under Him; but his coming will destroy the Antichrist, and cast out Satan. The cross is a witness to his coming: the corn of wheat fell into the ground and died, in order to bring forth much fruit. While Christ was up in the mount of transfiguration the disciples tried in vain to cast the devil out of the child. When Christ descended, He cast him out. So with us. Loyalty to Christ demands that we should preach the Gospel to every creature; but it is only when Christ returns Satan shall be cast out, and the world will own its rightful Lord.

Rev. W. Durban said: From the days of Origen the Church lost sight of the coming of the Lord. That coming was the great hope of the early Church. Enoch, the first of all the prophets, overleaping all things intermediate, prophesied of the coming of the Lord with his saints. This dispensation is better than the Judaic; but the Church longs for a better one than the present. In Rev. i. the candlesticks and stars speak to us of the night; but with the speed of an express train we are hasting to the day. We desire peace, both in the world and the Church, but it does not come. When the Lord returns He will bring peace, and his rest shall be glorious. Such Conferences as this bring Christians together, and promote their unity.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson, who occupied the chair, emphasised the Lord's two warnings, "Take heed what ye hear," and "take heed how ye hear." The gold of our currency is tested both as to its quality and weight, otherwise we should come to national bankruptcy. Our present need is that of a pure and full Gospel. In the creed of Christendom there are three gradations: the Roman and Greek Churches believe in Jesus Christ dead and buried; all Protestants believe in Him as dead, risen, and ascended; and a large number are looking for his return. It would be well if a kind letter could be written to all those evangelical ministers who hold post-millenarian views to ask them to reconsider the subject in the light of Scripture. Mr. Mathieson enforced the counsel of Jude: "But ye, beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith, praying in the Holy Ghost, keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life." But lest we should suppose that we could keep ourselves by our own power, Jude adds in his doxology, "Now unto Him that is able to keep you from falling," &c.

Pastor Frank H. White remarked how marvellous it is that eighteen hundred years after Christ's coming to Israel we should be thus gathered to consider the question of his coming again to that people. "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" Israel's covenant is ours: we are grafted into their olive tree: we partake of the consolation of their promises. Their full blessing depends on Christ's return. The divine order of blessing is, first the Jew and then the Gentile. In the three parables of Luke xv. we see mercy for the Gentiles. But the elder brother is now the prodigal. Israel is in a far country, famine-stricken and eating husks. But they will yet say, "I will arise and go to my Father." Israel is the lost sheep, but Jehovah is Israel's shepherd. Israel is the piece of silver hidden beneath the rubbish of rabbinical traditions. The Jew has to face corrupted Christianity: we have helped to hide the truth from him. Now the Jews are brought into the covenant of grace by units; but by and by the nation shall be born in a day. Then shall the people be all righteous; but that day shall be preceeded by the great tribulation.

Rev. J. Wilkinson said: I would remind you of passing events. This is the eve of the great day of atonement. Thousands of Israelites are now trembling and weeping over twelve months' sins. They will fast twenty-six hours; but are never sure of forgiveness. In remembrance of the golden calf, they now put off their golden ornaments and go in calf-leather shoes. Many have just now a deep interest in Israel, and I expect a great revival among the Jews. Mr. Wilkinson said that, for the sake of younger students, he wished in his remarks to be elementary. In John xxi. the Lord told Peter he should die, and that by a death which would glorify God. Peter's curiosity leads him to ask, "What of John?" The Lord replies, "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me." At once the whisper runs among the disciples, "John is not to die." The disciples knew that when the Lord returns believers will be translated. Death is a telegram for me to go to Christ, not the coming of Christ to me. Spiritually He is ever with us. But He went from earth in person, and in person He will return. John xiv.: "I go . . . I come again." "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout." Notice a few landmarks. In the Millennium they shall learn war no more; but when the Lord comes He finds all nations gathered together for the battle of the great day of God Almighty (Rev. xix). Is there to be an Antichrist during the Millennium? No; the Lord comes to destroy him before it. Before there is a Millennium, Israel must be converted; and for the conversion of Israel the Lord returns. The Church has one half of the truth in the cross; the Jew has the other half relative to Christ's coming in glory. Unite the cross and the crown, and you have the true Messiah. The Church and the world are now distinct; in the coming age they will be one.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

THREE of the Rauhe-Haus Brothers have been sent to America to look after the spiritual interests of German emigrants.

In September seven missionaries were set apart in Berlin for the spread of the Gospel in South Africa and China, two of whom were ladies.

We learn from the last report of the Société Evangélique of the Bernese Jura that a new work has been established by M. Th. H. Bovet, of Grandchamp, and with the help of the society. It consists in supplying gratuitously good reading to the railway employés.

The Amazon.—The Bishop of Paris intends building a floating cathedral upon a large steam-ship, which shall go up and down the Amazon, and serve as a place of worship for the population scattered on the shores of the river.

Africa.—The Romande Mission is sending to South Africa three medical missionaries, one of whom is a thoroughly trained lady. The British and Foreign Bible Society has just authorised an impression of the seven first chapters of the Gospel of Matthew in the Kabyle language or dialect. If the result is satisfactory the entire Gospel will be printed. M. Cust has gone to Algiers especially to find some one able to help in the translation of the Bible. Unfortunately, it is very difficult to find an educated person who knows Kabyle well.—L'Evangéliste.

Florence.—There is now in Florence, on the Piazza della Signoria, where Savonarola was burnt in 1498, a kiosque for the sale of the Bible.

Fenquières.—M. Duran, a pastor here, writes to the Christianisme au XIX. Siècle, that he invited Professor Bertrand, who we believe is connected with the "Mission Intériéure," to come and give some addresses at Fenquières. "In spite of the then all-absorbing field-labours, the report of the first Conference attracted large numbers to the succeeding ones, who were deeply impressed. A lively satisfaction, mixed with astonishment, was depicted on their faces whilst they listened to the Gospel in words so fresh and so completely unofficial. The thoughts of the orator, at once new and Christian, seemed to stamp themselves on their minds and to compel adhesion. I believe, with the blessing of God, M. Bertrand has been enabled to lead many to the knowledge and practice of the truth."

Toulon.—There has been a very interesting Conference of the South of France Y.M.C.A. at Toulon. The meetings were held in an old Roman Catholic church, now one of Monsieur Massis' halls. On the Sunday evening Gospel services were held both in this hall and in the one at La Seyne on the other side of the harbour, the young men dividing their forces and giving out no uncertain sound as to the joy and peace they had found by trusting Christ for their salvation. Both halls were well filled. The next day the whole party went out with supplies of Scriptures, which they distributed freely in the streets and on the quay to soldiers, sailors, and others. More than 1400 Testaments were thus given, and the young men came home full of joy. The Conference will long be remembered for its spirit of brotherly love.

M. E. Prinsep.

M. Cazalet, pastor of the Free Church of St. André-de-Volborgne, writing to the journal of the "Mission Intériéure," quoted an extract from a letter written by a pastor at Nîmes in 1722: "The believers of the Cevennes have never been more zealous, the assemblies more numerous and more frequented, nor vice more condemned than now.

"But to-day," says M. Cazalet, "with some rare exceptions, the religious meetings of the old Huguenots are deserted, and, per contra, the places of amusement, especially on Sunday, are crowded."

Now M. Cazalet's heart has been gladdened by a visit from M. Sainton, one of the agents of the "Mission Intériéure"; they have together held meetings in many of the small neighbouring towns and villages. The Lord put his seal especially on the work of St. Andre. A revival began there at the very first, the after-meetings having greatly contributed to bringing men and women to face themselves, their sins, and Jesus Christ. According to all appearance, in a few days, a goodly number of persons have been brought to conviction of sin and to serious repentance; and in general such persons, if they have been willing to yield themselves wholly to the Saviour, have quickly found peace, the Lord has sent them deliverance.

EASTBOURNE.—Rev. Barnes Lawrence, of this place, has accepted an appointment in Liverpool. There will be ample scope for his gifts in the Church of England in that city. He is an evangelical clergyman.

EARLY CLOSING ASSOCIATION.—The Board of Management of this Association have recently addressed a letter to the Postmaster-General in reference to the new regulations for the sale of stamps. The Post Office authorities propose to appoint a large number of shopkeepers as agents for the sale of stamps, giving the preference to those shops which keep open after eight or nine o'clock at night. The Association objects to this arrangement as calculated to induce shopkeepers to keep open late, and to encourage late shopping, and thus to perpetuate and extend the system which causes so many hardships to the assistants. The Post Office authorities, in reply to the Board, hold out no hope of a modification of their plan, but express an opinion that the evils which the Board fear will not arise. But how can it be otherwise?

LIVERPOOL CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

THOSE who have attended the series of meetings in Hope Hall in connection with this gathering of believers in past years have found them as precious as any in the series of autumnal conferences. Those of last week, on Thursday and Friday afternoons and evenings, Oct. 4 and 5, were no exception. There was a large attendance at each and all of the meetings, and an earnest spirit of prayer. Mr. Thomas Matheson presided at all the meetings. The topic of conference was "Communion with God."

Canon Taylor, on Thursday afternoon, dwelt upon how this communion can be restored, pointing out how sin estranged, and continues to estrange, man from God, and how, mystery of mysteries! in the Atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ, God can be just, and yet the justifier of every one who believes. The Rev. T. Good (Dublin) narrated the experience of the first Mohammedan convert, which was strikingly to the point under consideration—how communion can be restored. He was an old man, and he said to the missionary that Mohammedanism was full of the mercy of God, but that he saw nothing in it to meet the justice of God. "I wanted to know," said the aged inquirer, "how I could get rid of my many sins. I had searched Mohammedanism most carefully, but from beginning to end it said nothing about it. Now, Christianity has met my case, for in that I can see how God can be just and yet save." The work was Divine, and there was a beautiful illustration of this in the rent veil of the temple. It was rent from the top to the bottom, indicating that from above help alone could come.

In the evening there was a crowded gathering, and the devotional service, the hearty singing and earnest praying, was unusually beautiful and touching.

The Rev. W. E. Burroughs (Kingstown) read 1 John i. 6, 7, showing that if we are to have fellowship with God we must walk in the light. It is only thus that communion with God can be maintained, which was another of the topics considered. There is first union, then communion, and this can be maintained. It was to be realised not by simply remembering the gracious promise, "Lo I am with you always": that was but one half of the truth. The other half beautifully comes out in those words of the Father in the parable of the Prodigal Son—"Son, thou art ever with me."

Rev. W. Haslam said it should be borne in mind that many believers have union with God who do not keep up the communion. God does not require us to love and serve Him more than one day at a time, and surely we can give Him, who has given us so much, one day. In proceeding, the truth was earnestly enforced that it is not enough to have, as believers, so many precious things in the Book; we must realise them, make them our own in our hearts.

On Friday afternoon Mr. Matheson, in opening the meeting, said that with such high privileges as those belonging to the Christian, there should be corresponding fruit in the Christlike life. If we do walk with Him and keep up holy communion, we shall, in some degree, have the Spirit of the Master, and walk not as mere machines, but as those in whose hearts his love is shed abroad. The Rev. C. S. Green dwelt upon the means by which communion can be maintained, realising the fact of the indwelling of Christ, and the fruit which springs from it. God intends us to overcome, and we should fully trust his promise to enable us to be more than conquerors. Rev. S. Pearson adverted to the danger of some in thinking this great topic too mysterious. It is a fact that God will dwell in those of a humble and contrite heart.

In the evening the Lord's Supper was administered, and the Rev. W. Haslam spoke upon the last topic of conference, "How Communion with God is perfected"—in wholehearted surrender. It was encouraging to see that very few persons left the hall during the hour of Communion, and it seemed as if they were desirous of having the impressions of good deepened by witnessing the fellowship of others in their Saviour and Lord.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

GLASGOW.

THE intimation that Dr. Somerville would be present at the noon prayer-meeting brought together a large number. The effects of his recent illness, brought on by exposure to cold, were apparent.

The aged veteran, on rising, was received with a hearty demonstration. He gave an account of his journey, which has already appeared in your journal. Speaking of the difficulties he had at first thought to exist owing to the translation of his words into three or four different languages, he said there was a mighty power in the Gospel, not only to attract, but also to move the hearts of men, even although they had to be translated three or four times. Everywhere they got choirs to sing their hymns, and he thought it would be a good idea if a choir like those of the Jubilee Singers could be got together and go on a tour through these lands, where they would exercise a power for good on the natives. The Dutch people were an interesting people. He urged upon them the desirability of their selecting a deputation of their evangelical members to go to old Holland and preach to the congregations—to go back to the country of their forefathers with the living Gospel. After referring to some of the Mission stations in Africa, Dr. Somerville said that although he had suffered much by his severe illness he was extremely thankful to his heavenly Father for the care which He had taken of him, and he again placed himself in his hands. He urged upon us all the need to keeping our souls in good trim.

Dr. Cumming, who spoke on behalf of his son, who accompanied Dr. Somerville, said that their visit to South Africa had been a very blessed one, and they had the testimony that in all the places they visited there were cases of direct conversion.

The experienced Kentucky Mountain evangelist, Mr. G. O. Barnes, and his daughter, are conducting a series of evangelistic meetings in the Orphan Home Hall. The meetings are being well attended by a class which it is desirable to reach. The story of his own life and work is impressive, and told with dramatic effect. Miss Barnes's singing is sweet, and of great assistance to her father in his labours and work for the Lord, who has signally blessed him in the past.

Village Work.—Several villages in Lincolnshire have recently been visited by Mr. John Elliott, of the Evangelisation Society, who has given Gospel addresses in various chapels and schoolrooms. The services have been well attended; some walked many miles after a hard day's work to be present.

Merton, Surrey.—You will be glad to hear our large Coffee Palace and Mission Hall are prospering beyond our expectations. We are obliged to turn many away every Sunday evening, for we are packed to the doors. We depend upon our prayer-meetings for getting good meetings, and our blessed Lord sends the very people we want to attract. Many working men sign the pledge, attend the meetings, and get converted, and then work among their "mates."

M. Fraser.

Bohemia.—Dr. Baedeker writes:—"There is indeed a great change here as to open doors and receptiveness. It is quite a luxury to give away New Testaments or any little books, or Mrs. Grimke's cards. The poor Bohemian, are like parched ground, which eagerly drinks in the drop of rain that falls upon it. There is still the same careful surveillance by the authorities, but many things are done which, when we were here two years ago, would have been impossible. I had a very happy time in a factory speaking to a great number of workpeople, and later with some pastors and with a girls' school. We have had meetings every day, my wife also speaking to women. And now I have taken a bold step by asking for permission to hold a public meeting in a hired public hall. The authorities have given their consent. May the God of all power be with us on this occasion. We want much prayer.

Warrington.—On the 7th inst. Herr Cohen (the converted Jewish preacher) conducted two glorious Gospel meetings here. The largest hall in the town was filled to overflowing, between two and three thousand persons being present. He related in simple, earnest, and touching language the story of his own conversion, through the instrumentality of a child's prayer, from Judaism to Christianity; and spoke strongly against the tendencies towards infidelity at the present day, urging upon young people, in a practical manner, the advantages of deciding for Christ. His work in Warrington has been greatly blessed, and receives the hearty sympathy of all the ministers of the town.

NEARER.

NEARER, ever nearer,
Saviour, to thy side;
All the desert journey,
Let me here abide.
Serving, Lord; or suffering,
If it please Thee best;
Only in thy bosom
Finding still my rest.

Higher, ever higher,
Reaching to the goal;
Every fetter loosened,
Stedfast keep my soul.
Things behind forgotten,—
Passing joy or pain:
For Thyself, Lord Jesus,
Counting loss but gain.

Deeper, ever deeper,
As in lines of light,
On my heart's affection
Living precepts write:
Every thought made captive,
Every impulse thine:
Wandering footsteps guided
By a hand Divine.

Lower, ever lower,
Keep me at thy feet;
Poor and helpless, only
In Thyself complete.
Still thy blood my title,
And thy grace my plea;
Even in the glory,
Hiding, Lord, in Thee.

Nearer by the darkness,
Nearer in the light;
Pressing ever closer
In the thicker fight.
Never, never heeding,
If thy face I see,
Whether cloud or sunshine
Brings me nearer Thee.

PADDINGTON-GREEN CHILDRENS' HOSPITAL.—Recently the Foresters and other kindred societies had their annual demonstration, and took occasion of the same to make a collection for this hospital, which amounted to £70 10s. as a mark of appreciation of the good work done among the sick little ones.

WORKING LADS' INSTITUTES.—On the 11th inst. a meeting was held at the Mansion House, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, for the purpose of advocating the claims of the working lads of London, upon those who are able to provide them with homes after their work is done. Mr. Hill, jun., hon. secretary, gave an account of the rise and progress of the work, and urged the need of a good building contemplated in Whitechapel-road, which will accommodate 1000 lads with all the conveniences and comforts of a home. Towards the £9000 required, £3000 had been promised, and a number of ladies and gentlemen sent cheques to the meeting towards supplying the remainder. The Lord Mayor, Bishop Claughton, Mr. J. G. Hubbard, M.P., and Mr. George Williams, advocated the claims of so excellent a work, expressing a hope that the remainder would soon be supplied. It is a matter for profound thankfulness that Mr. Hill and others take such a deep interest in the lads of London, as evidenced in the admirably-conducted institutions in use. The address of Mr. Hill is 38, Bow-lane, E.C.

SPAIN.

DEAR FRIEND,—Here is the line I promised you for THE CHRISTIAN. Dr. Bullinger and I entered Spain viâ Perpignan on the 4th inst. We had a good supply of the beautiful Spanish leaflets from Drummond's, Stirling, which were eagerly received, as were also the French ones in France, prepared by Mrs. Grimkè, and which all travellers ought to have because of their portability and value.

The principal object of our journey was to get into circulation in Spain 4000 copies of a new edition of Valera's Spanish Bible—large type and marginal references—printed at Barcelona, by Mr. G. Lawrence, and valuable because containing the new translation of Isaiah by the learned and pious Usozy Rios, of Madrid; and the American translation of the Psalms by Mr. Pratt. True lovers of Spain would do well to remember this precious Book before God, that He may richly bless its distribution. Spain needs it more than ever; for though money flows in on all sides, godlessness is on the increase, as in England, and judgment is sure to follow. We had a happy time in Barcelona with some of the little flock who are there bearing a bright testimony to God's grace amid surrounding darkness. They need our sympathy and prayers, dear friends, for Spain is in many respects spiritually a second China, and nothing but the life-giving influence of the Spirit, by the Word, can dispel the gross darkness; but the sufferings of Matamoros have not been in vain. When I saw the people before me on the Lord's day, my heart was made glad by the thought that it was his faithfulness unto death that had been the reason why Spain now had liberty of worship. There are five or six devoted workers at Barcelona—Mr. H. Payne, helped principally by Mr. Müller, of Bristol; M. Empeytat, a Swiss missionary, supported by Switzerland; Mr. Simpson, Wesleyan minister; Mr. Lund, Baptist; and Mr. Pundsack, German; all dear devoted servants of Christ, who would so much value the earnest prayers of the saints.

Spain, like England, has had this year a glorious harvest, while France has had to purchase twenty millions' sterling of corn, besides making up the deficit in her wine crop from Phyloxera, principally from the south of Spain. Then the money coming in from Agrias, as the Spaniards call lemons and oranges, is immense, but nothing when compared to what she gets by her iron, lead, copper, zinc, and mercury. Our ride from Barcelona was for nearly 150 miles one continuous vineyard, and as I passed through Tarragona, Tortasa, Castillon, and many other places, I thought how little we had hitherto done, but by the help of God more shall be done in the future. The power of Satan is great; but One has said, "All power is given to Me in heaven and on earth." Let us tarry till we are endued with this power. Valencia has some 45,000 inhabitants, and is in gross darkness, the Virgin being ignorantly worshipped everywhere, and the poor people being as busy with the muck-rake, as Bunyan would say, as the majority in our own country now increasingly are.

How one sighs for the time when holiness to the Lord shall be on the very bridles of the horses, and when the kingdoms of the world shall become the kingdoms of God and of his anointed King. We had a very kind reception in almost every case where we were giving Gospel texts and speaking. There is a thirst, again, that must be supplied; this we noticed was general. The middle and lower classes are the hope for Spain; and, in spite of the flourish of trumpets made by our papers about the young king, I heard from an experienced aged man that he is too young to be serviceable, and much of a puppet in the hands of those around him. "He that ruleth over men must be just," and we shall not see what Spain and the world wants till Jesus comes. Hoping to send you another line from Andalusia, and perhaps from Madrid,—Yours, &c., W. GREENE.

Valencia, October 8.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE NOTES.

ANTRIM.—During two meetings at this place recently, at which Mr. T. E. Murphy gave addresses, nearly 700 persons put on the blue ribbon.

The Highland Temperance League has published a weekly paper entitled "The Highland News," which may be obtained from the office at Oban, N.B.

DR. SOMERVILLE, who has lately passed through so trying an illness in South Africa, abstained from alcoholic liquors, and says his health has been much promoted by doing so.

AN ENCOURAGEMENT.—A correspondent writes us that a youth, a young friend of hers, was chosen to fill a responsible post over the heads of many others because he had the advantage of being a consistent total abstainer, and is getting on well.

MR. FRANCIS MURPHY received a hearty welcome in America on his arrival home, and was invited to give an account of his Gospel Temperance work in Britain at the Methodist Episcopal Church in Hanson-place, Brooklyn, at which delegates from temperance societies and churches were invited to attend.

RECOGNITION WINDOW. — From a circular which has reached us we find it is proposed to place a stained window in the church of St. Mary, Southampton, as a recognition of Canon Wilberforce's efforts in the Temperance cause. Those total abstainers who wish to contribute towards the same should send their donations to Major Evered Pocle, Enfield House, Southampton.

DARTMOUTH.—Blue ribbonism has taken firm hold in several Devonshire towns with remarkably encouraging results. In one of them—Dartmouth—it was recently resolved by the Town Council to decrease the police force of the borough on the ground that the work of the constabulary and the police-court fees had fallen off gradually, so that now there was not enough work for the men to do.

TOWER HAMLETS.—On the 12th instant the the third quarterly tea-meeting of the Tower Hamlets Mission Gospel Temperance Society was held in the Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. The Society numbers over 500 members, all total abstainers. After the tea a large and enthusiastic meeting was held, which was attended by about 1500 persons, the chair being taken by Mr. E. H. Kervin.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For evident blessing at Coleford, Glos., during a ten days' Mission.

PRAYER.—For the conversion of a husband. ——For a blessing on special services by Rev. T. R. and Mrs. Donaldson, at Wrington, Somersetshire, from Oct. 13 to 24.——For one who is very ill, and is harassed by distressing fear.——That the Lord's blessing may rest upon the preaching of the Gospel in Naples, and union among God's children; and deliverance from unjust proceedings against some who preach the Gospel.——For two sisters in great temporal trouble.——For Richard Weaver, presently holding meetings at Grangemouth, N.B. ——That a young girl may be healed bodily by the Great Physician.——For much blessing on the Mission services, Nov. 12 to 17, by Rev. J. J. Luce, at the Chatham Soldiers' Home.——That a deaf one who labours for Christ may have hearing.—— For the conversion of my husband, who reads novels and smokes all the Lord's Day.——That God's blessing may be upon the party of girls on their way to Durban, Natal.——For the matron of a home who is ill.——For Evangelistic services in the Sailors' Institute, Aberdeen, from Oct. 21, by Mr. Carnegie.——That God blessing may rest upon a series of special services for children, now being held at the Memorial Hall, Selhurst, E.C.

SOUTH-WESTERN CHOIR.—Christians with good voices, desirous of joining the above choir, to assist Mr. Sankey, are requested to communicate at once with Mr. G. Peploe Earl, 1, Cambridge-terrace, Burnt Ash, Lee, S.E.

Letters to the Editor.

A DOUBTFUL EQUIVALENCE.

SIR,—The action of the Worcester magistrate towards the captain of the local Salvation Army, alleged to have caused "obstruction" through preaching, raises the question, "Is a month's imprisonment with hard labour a lawful substitute for a ten shillings fine?" The sentence, taken in connection with its circumstances, is without precedent, and seems explicable only on the ground of aversion to the subject-matter of the preaching. Now, if personal antipathies are suffered to control judicial decisions, the inquiry may soon become general, "Are these the much-vaunted days of civil and religious liberty?"—I am, Sir, yours faithfully, M. A.

SCIENCE AND CRUELTY.

DEAR SIR,—I send this extract from *Health from a paper on "Hydrophobia," by Dr. Andrew Wilson: "Nor does the want of water produce the disorder, since experimentation—cruel, but justifiable, from the information it affords—has shown that a dog may die of thirst, but will not, on account of the want of water, become rabid." You have kindly spoken against the use of electricity as a punishment, and I hope you will protest against this diabolical mode of torture. Science can never be benefitted by cruelty.—Yours, &c.,

F. H. WILLIAMS.

Pushill, Henley-on-Thames.

ADAM'S FEDERAL HEADSHIP.

DEAR, SIR,—In reply to the remarks signed "M. C. I.," in THE CHRISTIAN for October 4 (page 20), may I cite the words of the Holy Ghost:—

"By one man sin entered into the world, and death by (διὰ) sin; and so (οὕτως) death passed upon all men, for all have sinned" (Rom. v. 12).

"In Adam all die" (1 Cor. xv. 22.

"We . . . were, by nature (φύσει), children of wrath." (Eph. ii. 3). Yours, &c., Torquay, Oct. 7. P. H. GOSSE.

DEAR SIR,—Your correspondent, M. C. I., in your issue of Oct. 4, may be right in deprecating the use of such an expression as the imputation of Adam's personal guilt to his offspring. As it is not to be found in Scripture, it is better avoided, though I fancy those who use it mean little more than M. C. I. as himself expressed, viz., that Adam's offspring, "enter on life with a nature similar to his in its fallen state."

But when M. C. I. quotes Ezek. xviii. 20: "The soul that sinneth it shall die; the son shall not bear the iniquity of the father," &c.; as if therein God repudiated such a doctrine; it is well to remember that we have to do here with a totally different subject. Ezekiel is not speaking of the concerns of eternity, but of those of time. The death spoken of is that of the body, which the sword of the Chaldæans was inflicting as a very sore judgment in their midst. The parallel passage, Ezek. xxxiii., makes this clear, which begins with, "When I bring the sword upon a land," not to speak of the whole scope of the passage viewed in relation to its context.

We are apt to be misled by the word "soul;" but here it manifestly means no more than person, as in Lev. xviii. 20: "the souls that commit (these abominations) shall be cut off from among their people." God reproves the people, through Ezekiel, for supposing that they were being cut off (literally, by the sword) for their father's sins, rather than for their own. He points out the sins which they were committing (especially idolatry), which were the cause of these judgments, and describes the righteous conduct which, if persevered in, would bring individual deliverance. But all this has nothing to say to Gospel salvation, which is on totally different ground from that of Israel's national standing—ground as far superior as was Paul's righteousness as a Christian (Phil. iii. 6), which he attained by being "found in Christ," from that which he had as an unconverted man, which yet he describes as being "touching the righteousness that is in the law blameless."

The current application of these passages in Ezekiel to Christianity is most misleading, and is often pushed to an extent utterly subversive of Gospel truth. When will Christians learn that they are not Jews, and that God is not dealing with them as He did once with "Israel after the flesh?"—Very truly yours, H. E. BROOKE.

Dovercourt.

Notices of Books, &c.

The Welcome Hour for this month contains an article in memoriam of the late Rev. Thos. Griffith, Prebendary of St. Paul's, and is accompanied by a good likeness of that gentleman. Partridge & Co. 1d.

Christ and the Church. Partridge & Co. This little tractate on a deeply important subject will well repay careful reading. It is extracted from a work well known to some of our readers, entitled Plain Papers on Prophetic Subjects.

The Child's Companion. Volume for 1883. 2s. Religious Tract Society. This beautifully-illustrated and well-bound annual will interest the young much. It is worthy of a place in every family, and in every juvenile library. The reading is good.

His Steps; or, Practical Readings in the Life of Our Lord. By Rev. G. Everard, M.A. Nisbet & Co. This is a biographical sketch of leading incidents in the life of Jesus, told and applied in a most interesting way. The author has contributed a useful little work to the treasury of knowledge.

Messages for Mothers. By Lucy Marshall. 2s. Religious Tract Society. Books for mothers' meetings are rare; this one will, therefore, be a welcome servant. It contains lessons from the lives of women of the Old Testament. Conductors of mothers' meetings will find it useful reading in addition to, but not intended to supersede, the Word of God.

The Parables of Jesus. By Rev. James Wells, M.A. Nisbet & Co. The author has here given to the public a series of addresses originally delivered at a monthly service for the young. There is very much in this volume that will commend itself to the Christian reader, although there will be an objection raised by some to the interpretation of some of the figures. The arrangement of the lessons is both simple and profitable.

The Beautiful Home, with its Seven Pillars. By Francis M. Savill. Price 1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. A charming Sunday book for little folks, printed in large, clear type, and appropriately illustrated. The seven pillars about which Auntie tells her pets on successive Sabbath afternoons are obedience, love, truth, and the like, each one indispensable in building completely the beautiful house of good character.

Mistaken, and Marion Lorsyth, from the Shilling "Christian Life" series of Oliphant & Co., Edinburgh, are stories for young ladies whose perusal may help to define the position which active participation in Mission work should hold in relation to home life and duties. They are realistic touches of dilemmas in which young ladies in the present day are often placed with regard to the Church and the world.

Which do they Love, Who are God's Real People? By the late Professor Finney, D.D. Partridge & Co. We have pleasure in commending the re-issue in a somewhat abridged form of Dr. Finney's heart-searching and soul-stirring addresses to professing Christians. They are calculated to be of much service in awakening those who through indolence and unholiness are failing to answer the great end of their calling. They are published at one penny each, and should be freely distributed.

Sacred Streams: The Ancient and Modern History of the Rivers of the Bible. New edition. By P. H. Gosse, F.R.S. 3s. 6d. Hoader & Stoughton. Interesting and useful in its subject matter, sound in teaching, and excellent in spirit. The scenes which have hallowed each river are grouped around it with their historical associations, and lend a new and freshening interest to the Scripture story. We predict a large circulation for this new and revised edition. It is elegantly got up, and both young and old may derive pleasure and profit from its pages.

Valeria, the Martyr of the Catacombs. Price 2s. T. Woolmer. In this handsome little volume Dr. Withrow gives us a graphic description of life in the pagan city of Rome in the days of Diocletian. He has made the catacombs a special study, thus the facts of the story are thoroughly reliable, while the joy manifested under suffering and persecution, the fervent piety and whole-hearted consecration to the will of God, as depicted among these first heroes of the Cross, should cheer every earnest Christian heart. It would do much good to scatter this book widely among young people whose faith is in danger of being undermined by the prevalent infidel sophistries of the present day.

Left to Take Care of Themselves. Price 1s. T. Woolmer, Castle-street. Another story of City Arab class. A mournful tale of a struggle for existence in the great City. It contains some touching incidents, but nothing to give it special prominence among the myriad books of the same class.

Rebecca the Peace-Maker, Make Hay while the Sun Shines (by Old Humphrey), and Look on the Sunny Side. 1s. each. Religious Tract Society. Three capital additions to the series of large-type books for working people, each containing good wholesome reading specially suited for village libraries and cottage homes. Their handsome binding makes them equally suitable for prizes and presents.

Straight to the Mark. By Rev. T. S. Millington. Price 6s. Religious Tract Society. The story of a boy who followed truth at any cost, and scorned every mean action. The value of straightforwardness in all the concerns of school-life is the chief lesson inculcated, although in the career of some other characters in the tale may be found a word of warning to those who would "make haste to be rich" by rash speculations. It is one of the Leisure Hour stories, handsomely bound and profusely illustrated.

A Practical Commentary on the Gospel of St. Matthew. By James Morison, D.D. Hodder & Stoughton. This new and revised edition of Dr. Morrison's valuable work on the first Gospel will be welcomed by many to whom the author is already known as a painstaking and scholarly expositor. It is a noble volume, abounding in evidences of critical acumen and erudite research of no common kind. It is a student's book, and to preachers and teachers will prove a storehouse replete with treasure adapted to their need. The reference to other authorities are numerous and suggestive, so that the reader becomes familiar with a host of commentators, while delighting himself with the author's own racy and graphic annotations. The introductory chapters on the writer of the Gospel, the original text, and its peculiar features, are specially worthy of attention. We commend the book to the notice of all who desire aid in understanding what they read.

Is Dogma a Necessity? By the Rev. Frederick Meyrick. Hodder & Stoughton. Many people are frightened now-a-days at the very thought of being dogmatic, and shun all attempts at shaping much less avowing a creed. Mr. Meyrick has done his best to show that if we are believers in a Divine revelation we must be dogmatic, inasmuch as it contains dogmatical truths which we are bound to accept and assert. Among these he places the prophetic, priestly, and kingly offices of Christ, the vicarial office of the Holy Spirit, and his illuminating and sanctifying functions. The book is written from a Churchman's point of view, and, perhaps, for some readers, will savour a little too much of ecclesiasticism in some parts, but nevertheless it is a most seasonable plea for what in these times of negation and doubt many believers as well as unbelievers need to be shown is both reasonable and essential. It is the fourth volume of the Theological Library now issuing from the publishers, and will be by no means least in value among its compeers.

The Disruption, and other Studies. By William Nicolson, M.A. Elliot Stock, London. This is a well got-up volume, and full of most valuable matter, which its somewhat infelicitous title does not indicate. Since 1843, the date of the origin of the Free Church, another generation has sprung up who, outside Scotland, do not connect the term "Disruption" with that great ecclesiastical movement. Spite of this minor exception it is due to commend the work as an admirable contribution to Biographical and Theological literature. We have read the book with the greatest interest. There was need, for the sake of a new generation, to tell the story of the Disruption of the Scotch Church, and the articles on Bunyan, Chalmers, and Swedenborg are fresh and vigorous. There is no more interesting chapter in all history than that of the dawn of the Reformation in Florence, and Mr. Nicolson has done excellent service to his times by his beautiful translation from the German of Dr. Hase's paper on Savonarola. The three last chapters on "Experience," "Religious Revival," and "Christian Science," will be of use to those who care for philosophical theology. Speaking of Professor Finney and Mr. Moody, the author says: "The reason why they have been found so useful is just that they have studied the strivings of the religious faculty, and are thus qualified to deal with them." We ought to add that the learned and copious "Notes" in the appendix are among the most valuable parts of the work.

Memories of the Spanish Reformers. By John Stoughton, D.D. 8s. Hodder & Stoughton. Dr. Stoughton has been visiting the haunts of Spanish reformers, especially those of the Reformation period; and in this handsome volume we have a companion work to "Homes and Haunts of Luther," and to "Footprints of Italian Reformers." Without being absorbing, it is an interesting and instructive book. Descriptions of Spanish scenery and places are judiciously interspersed with historical and biographical matter. The divorce of the Romish religion from personal morality, illustrated not least in the lives of the priesthood, is strongly but delicately brought out in the course of the volume, and contrasted with the spiritual religion and pure lives of the Apostles of the faith of the Reformation. This story of the brave but stormy histories of Spanish reformers is well calculated to induce a feeling of deep gratitude that our lot is cast in happier times. The work appropriately concludes with a chapter descriptive of evangelistic efforts in Spain at the present day.

CORRECTION.—In the article on "Christian Work in Egypt," on page 18 of our last issue, "in the harbour of Jaffa" should read "in the harbour of Alexandria."

LEFT-OFF CLOTHING.—Archibald G. Brown now has five missionaries constantly employed in visiting the homes of the destitute poor in East London. Any parcels of left-off clothing, or help of any kind, will be thankfully received by him and acknowledged. Address 22, Bow-road, E.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.—The work of this Mission is now made permanent at Littlehampton, two special services for children being conducted at St. Saviour's Church every Sunday at 10 a.m. and 3.15 p.m. Friends of the C.S.S.M. are cordially invited to assist, the incumbent having his hands very full of work.

JARROW-ON-TYNE.—Mr. Weaver has conducted a fortnight's services in this town, and they have been well attended, and many precious souls have found the Saviour, and Christians have been stirred up. The Bible-readings given each afternoon were profitable, and led to the conversion of many souls. Mr. Weaver is very unwell, and ought to have a few weeks' rest.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—The quarterly meeting of the members and friends of the Mission will be held in the Mission Room, Queen Anne's-gate, Westminster, on Monday, Oct. 29. A lecture will be delivered by Dr. Samuel Kinns, F.R.A.S., entitled "The Marvellous Scientific Accuracy of the Bible," illustrated with diagrams and geological specimens. Chair to be taken by Benjamin Scott, Esq., at 7 p.m.

AFRICAN SETTLEMENT SOCIETY.—A party of girls left London for the Colony of Natal on the 9th inst. by the Garth Castle. The girls are sent out by this society in charge of Miss Alice Allen, and are going into situations among Christian people living in Durban. This must give pleasure to those who help in this good work for the Lord; it is, of course, a work that requires money, and we understand that in a few weeks a party of boys will be on their way to Cape Colony.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.—Mr. Jno. M. Wigner, B.A., at Oxford October 21—28; Mr. Spiers now at Penzance; Mr. Seyler at Battersea October 15—20. 22 and 23, at 7; Hrs. H. S. Lidstone at Harvey-street, Hoxton, October 15—19, at 7; Mr. Banaster at Blandford October 21—28; Mr. W. F. Seagrove at St. John's Church, Copenhagen-street, October 28, at 3; October 29, November 2, at 7; J. G. Alexander, Esq., L.L.B., will preside at General Meeting at Croydon, October 26, at 7. Meeting for reports of sea-side work at Exeter Hall. S. D. Waddy, Esq., Q.C., M.P., presiding. October 25, at 7.

WARRINGTON.—The visit of Herr Cohen to this place extended to three weeks, during which time he has nightly delivered addresses in the largest hall in the town, which has been filled to overflowing. His aim is to teach people in a sound and simple manner sound lessons of practical godliness, exhorting them to live, and not merely to exist, and to look forward with hope to the future, through faith in Christ. He strongly advocates total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors, on moral and physiological grounds. He argues well and logically against the tendencies young people have towards infidelity. Many who habitually hold aloof from places of worship have seen the light by attending these meetings. A. M.

A BEER-HOUSE A LIGHT-HOUSE.

Dear Friends,

A low-class public-house next door to us here, with a large room used for a "Sing-song" in the rear, has lately been offered to us, and I have been very anxious to secure it for the good of the sons of my poor neighbours in the closely-packed houses around me.

The Ecclesiastical Commissioners, whose property it is, in their praiseworthy desire to minimise as far as possible their connection with the drink-traffic, have agreed to let me the premises for just half the rent they were offered by a firm of brewers to use them as a licensed house.

As I have lately been much hampered for means to carry on the work I already have in hand, I hesitated to take up any new responsibility, although I much deplored the possibility of losing such a chance of useful work. However, a kind Christian lady and her daughter have generously undertaken to pay the rent, and I trust some who read these lines may be moved to help in the necessary repairs, fixtures, &c.

I intend the house to be open every night for lads engaged in factories, &c., so that they may not have to wander about the streets, in their evening hours, exposed to the worst temptations. When I mention that often a whole family live in a single room, it will be easily understood, if there is illness in the circle, or washing and cooking to be done in such limited space, that there is little comfort for a boy after his day's work at home.

The low theatre and the cheap music-hall provide their baits to lure these youths to ruin, and poison the very springs of life in them. In a few years, with hardened hearts, seared consciences, and established habits, it will be most difficult to reach or move them.

We purpose to provide them with writing and drawing classes, books to read, pictures to paint, draughts and other simple games to play, &c.; in short, just such amusements as judicious parents in a well-ordered Christian home would provide for their boys of an evening. This is not a mere experiment, as a similar effort I made when in Deptford proved very successful, and was made a means of eternal blessing to some, for we always made it a rule to close the evening with a hymn, portion of Scripture, brief exposition, and prayer. I also hope to hold a Bible-class myself weekly for those who are interested in the study of God's Word, and I am glad to say there are several such.

Will you, dear friends, just make an effort to help me to put this little scheme of Christian kindness in working order?

Our half-yearly Report ("Bringing in the Sheaves") is now ready, and will be sent to any address on receipt of 3d. in postage stamps. I think it will be found interesting to those who seek the conversion of the young.

I remain, dear Friends, yours faithfully,

The Boys' Home,

Mission Appeals.

Blackgang, I.W.—Mr. Hardy, a Christian man at Blackgang, and useful in the Lord's service as hall-keeper there, has a son, an idiot, whom friends are desirous of getting into the Earlswood Asylum. Any of our readers who have votes to spare are asked kindly to give them to this case.

Home for Blind Children.—This Home, with many others, has suffered from a falling-off of subscriptions during the summer months. The Lady Superintendent earnestly asks the prayers and sympathy of the readers of The Christian. —Address, Nelson House, College Avenue, Hackney, E.

Convalescent Institution.—A correspondent, who has been staying at the Home at Walton-on-Thames, writes us, saying that the funds of that excellent Institution are very low, and that she believes many would be glad to send a donation if they knew it. The good the Home here, and at Boxhill, and the Children's Branch at Kingston-hill is doing is well known to our readers. Mr. C. Holmes, 32, Sackville-street, London, W.C., is the Secretary.

Christian Evidence Society. — This Society deserves the support of the Christian public. Extended open-air lecturing in the Metropolis has been manifestly very beneficial during the summer; at the same time it has been attended with great expense. Conside rable help is needed to carry on operations at all c ommensurate with the alarming spread of doubt and scepticism. Contributions may be sent to C. Lloyd Engström, Secretary, 13, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C.

Mission Yacht.—Mrs. Edward Prinsep will be glad to receive subscriptions from any brethren or sisters in the Lord willing to help in building a Mission Yacht for the South coast of France. Monsieur Borel, who has been evangelising with the Annie at Calais, and who is Mr. McAll's agent at Nice, undertakes the work, and has already received a considerable sum. More than £300 will be required. Mrs. Prinsep will provide the small boat. Gifts in the shape of five pound notes-preferred! sent by post registered. —Address Librairie Tourn, 38, Rue de la Republique, Marseilles, France.

A Silent Messenger for Christ in Danger. —Sir,—In my recent peregrinations among the Gospel workers in Western France, I was sorry to hear that a small bi-monthly journal which has done yeoman's service for the Lord in the two Charentes was about to expire of "financial syncope" caused by the sudden stoppage of an English subsidy of about £10 a year. Its director isan Evangelical Church pastor of slender means, but these have been all devoted to the maintenance of the missive for six years. Its circulation is chiefly gratuitous among the lapsed masses who disown both Catholicism and Protestantism. Surely this blessed instrumentality should not be allowed to fall. I will, with pleasure, give further information, or send a copy of the journal to any who may wish it, and will transmit any assistance Christians might give towards its maintenance. —W. L. Lang, 56, Ramsden-road, Balham, S.W.

The Irish Society.—Dear Sir,—Will you kindly allow me to direct the attention of your readers to the Irish Society's appeal in your advertisement sheets? It asks for the prayers and contributions of Christian friends. If those friends only knew what the Society has done, is doing, and what by God's blessing it might do in Ireland, that appeal would receive a glad and liberal response. I am ready to furnish this information, and shall be well content to leave results to a serious consideration of simple facts. Meantime, the mention of its work as a Bible Society in Ireland, having a vast native agency for teaching the people to read the Book of God in their native language, should be enough to awaken a deep and wide-spread interest. Mention is made of liabilities in connection with "The Frances Ridley Havergal Memorial Hall," Limerick, now one of the most valuable institutions in the Kingdom. On this institution there remains a debt of £500, which it is sought to clear off by means of the appeal. We are anxiously looking for timely sympathy and support in this good work. Rev. Thomas Keane,
Clerical Secretary.

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST. By D. L. MOODY. 13th THOUSAND. Tinted Covers, 4d.; Cloth Limp, 6d.

"The moment a man takes hold of the truth that Jesus is coming back again to receive his followers to Himself, this world loses its hold upon him. Gas stocks, and water stocks, and stocks in banks and railroads, are of very much less consequence to him then. His heart is free, and he looks for the blessed appearing of his Lord, who, at his coming, will take him into his blessed Kingdom."—Extract.

A Series of 4 two-page Leaflets, each containing a collection of stirring Pieces, admirably adapted for use at "Gospel Temperance" and other Meetings. Price 9d. per 100, or 7s. 6d. per 1000.

CONTENTS OF NO. 1.

Where is my wandering boy to-night?
One there is who loves thee
The mistakes of my life have been many
Long in darkness we have waited
Are you coming home, ye wanderers?
A ruler once came to Jesus by night
Fierce and wild the storm is raging
Why do you wait, dear brother?
Say, where is thy refuge, my brother?
Why perish with cold and with hunger?
From the riven Rock there floweth

CONTENTS OF No. 2.

What can wash away my stain?
Come, thou weary! Jesus calls thee
Should the death-angel knock at your chamber
The Gospel bells are ringing
Have you any room for Jesus?
Oh come, sinner, come! 'tis mercy's call
Make room for Jesus! room, sad heart!
Oh, do not let the Word depart
Brightly beams our Father's mercy
O Christ, in Thee my soul hath found
Light in the darkness, sailor!

CONTENTS OF No. 3.

When my final farewell to the world I have said
Standing by a purpose true
When the storms of life are raging
I have read of a beautiful city
Ring the bells of heaven! there is joy to day
I have heard of a land far away
"Land ahead!" its fruits are waving
Oh, tender and sweet was the Master' voice
'Tis the promise of God full salvation to give
When storms around are sweeping

CONTENTS OF No. 4.

Of course you know that to and fro, throughout our glorious land
She only touched the hem of His garment
Our Master has taken His journey
Tempted and tried
Father, don't you hear the angels
The prize is set before us
There is a Fountain filled with blood
Would you lose your load of sin?
Yield not to temptation, for yielding is sin

WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK

LETTER FROM J. T., of KIDDERMINSTER.

"Dear Sir,—I recognised my testimonial in the Christian World Family Circle of this week. I am truly grateful, and pleased to say it is thoroughly correct. I continue wonderfully well. Both physicians and surgeons described my case as you mention. It certainly seemed quite hopeless, but through the blessing of God your medicine has restored me to new life.—August 4, 1883.

[The writer's case was very remarkable and pleasing. He continues the above letter by asking me, for special reasons, as before, not to publish his name in print, though I am permitted to refer privately to him.]

EXTRACT from a LETTER from a LADY at REIGATE.

Writing recently about the case of a poor neighbour, Mrs. S. T. Smith says:—"The sister of this man lived with me for many years, and her life was saved by God's blessing on your valuable medicine. She is very desirous that he should try what proved of such priceless value to her."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.
